Young's Analytical
Bible Concordance.

A Concordance, A Greek and Hebrew Lexicon, A Scriptural Gazetteer, 30,000 various New Testament Readings, 311,000 References—118,000 beyond Cruden.

This is perhaps the most important work in religious literature which the present century has produced. Being designed for the simplest reader of the English Bible, though greatly helpful to scholars of the most profound learning, it is, of course, important that its cost shall be brought within reach of those of most limited means. The reception already given to our prospectus assures us that the superlative merits of the work are appreciated by students of the Word of God, and that we may confidently anticipate an extremely large sale. We have therefore decided to make the price, until further notice, lower than any work of equal magnitude and value which has ever before been published.

Price, Complete, $1.50 and upwards, in various styles. Full particulars sent free on request.

Dave's Pants.

BY WM. M. F. ROUND.

The other day I picked up the report of one of our city charities, and among the list of contributors and their contribution read these words: "Little Dave; six pairs of pants for poor boys." Then I didn't read any further, at least, not for a long time, and sat and wondered who "little Dave," was, and why he had given his six pairs of pants to the poor little boys instead of keeping them for his own little legs, and, putting my whole mind to it, this is how I studied it all out.

Dave's father was a broker. He bought and sold money and stocks, and he did it honestly, too—as many others do, notwithstanding some people think a man cannot deal in these things and keep himself free from dishonesty. Mr. Falconer, that was Dave's father's name, had an office in Wall street, and a home in Fifth Avenue, and he had horses and carriages, and so many servants that they were always getting in each other's way, and giving Dave's mother no end of trouble. And Dave's father gave splendid dinners, and had a great deal of company, and spent money as freely as water, and was as happy as a man can be who has no time to do good. He gave away a good deal of money, to be sure, and his name figured on all the subscription lists, and no beggar went away from his door empty handed; and yet this rich man used to come home, and sit by his library fire, and say, when he read of want and misery,

"Oh dear me! I wish I could do something for somebody; something that I could know and see made somebody better and happier." Then he would say to Dave: "Don't ever get so busy, Dave, that you can't have time to do good. It is what we can do for others, my boy, that goes to make us happy."

So it was that Dave got to longing to "do good, for somebody." He used to give away his pennies and his dimes to anybody that wanted them, but he said: "That's nothing—it isn't doing anything—because I have so many of them that I don't want them. I want to do something. Something that I shall feel myself."

This was when Dave was nine years old. And wasn't he a splendid fellow? He was pretty large for his age, could pitch a ball with any boy of his size and drive a velocipede at a tremendous pace, and was rosy and strong and healthy. He was handsome, too, with his great dark eyes and his clearly cut features, and his wavy brown hair. He was a fine fellow, and his mother was very proud of him, and told me in confidence that people used to turn round and take a second look at Dave when they passed him in the street.

A few times Dave did have a real no-mistake-about-it chance to do good. Once he spent the best part of an hour in helping an old half-blind peanut woman to gather up her wares, that some careless driver had knocked over, and once he thrashed a street-boy for abusing his little sister. He came home that time with his clothes torn, and his eye black, and bruised a great deal about his head and shoulders, and his mother almost scolded him, but Dave said:

"I could not help it. She was a little pale-faced thing of a girl, and he was a big boy and he struck her, and so I took her part, and he gave it to me, and I gave it to him, and I'm glad of it, and I'd do it again. Didn't I do right, mother?"

"Well," said his mother, "I've always heard that fighting was wrong, but, perhaps, in such a case it isn't so very wrong. And you whipped him, Dave, so he'll remember it? I hope it will do him good." And she kissed her boy and forgave him.

That night Dave told his father about it, and asked:

"Are you ashamed of my fighting in the street, father?"

And Dave's father took him on his knee, and said, "Well, it isn't best to fight as long as one can help it, but on the whole I think I should have been more ashamed of my boy if he hadn't done it."

And Dave, boy as he was, couldn't help but think that he had done some good.

So Dave's time was spent in looking about for special opportunities to do good. I don't think he had quite the right ideas about the matter, because it isn't alone in special opportunities that we may do good, but in every detail of our daily lives, and to all that are about us. The ordinary opportunities are just as great, if we look at them aright, as the extraordinary opportunities.

Just now I come to the tenth birth-day in Dave's life. It is a birth-day that he will never forget, and one that his mother can't speak of with undimmed eyes. They had a party for Dave, and it was as jolly a party as ever was planned by loving parents. There were as many as a hundred children invited, and they were given the freedom of the house. They had such games, and such refreshments! And there was a conjurer who conjured, and a magic lantern, the pictures of which kept the company in a chronic state of crying, "O-o-h my!" And there were acted charades so good that nobody but preternaturally smart children could guess what they meant. And they had a Punch and Judy show, and Punch was never so queer, or Judy so perverse, or Toby so excruciatingly funny before! And they had a telephone, an acoustic telephone, which stretched its mysterious thread from the top landing of the front stairs, through the wide opening about which the stairs wound, through four stories, to the very parlor floor; where dainty little maidens whispered pretty messages to nice boys in the attic.

Everybody had tried it but Dave, and now he ran up stairs as hard as he could to whisper a message down to his cousin Edith, who sat on the stair in the hall. Whether the telephone was worn out with so much using or whether it had been too much investigated by curious boys I don't know, but Dave found that it didn't work, and he leaned over to shout to Edith to tighten her end of the cord so that the thrill of sound might be greater.

Poor Dave! poor mamma! and poor sorrowful little faces that stand about! I see them all as I write, and my eyes grow moist as I recall the scene.

Dave had fallen from the fourth story to the hall. They thought at first that he was dead, but a piteous little cry from the pale lips showed them that there was life left. Then the children went home, some of them sobbing, all of them with heavy hearts, for Dave was much loved by them all.

Now another picture rises before by eyes. A silent chamber, an anxious group about the bed where they have laid the poor boy, father and mother standing by with pale faces and lips that tremble when they speak. A surgeon's assistant goes quietly in and out, bringing basins, preparing bandages, and otherwise making ready for the doctor's examination. The doctor, looking grave and very wise, passes his trained hands over Dave's body, laying his ear now and then close over Dave's heart. And after it is over he answers the mother's anxious, questioning look with a faint "I hope so; but it is very bad indeed. Both legs and a rib are broken, and I fear there is some injury to the spine."

Then everybody is shut out of the room except Dave's papa, who will stay, and when the doctor goes away he leaves Dave bandaged almost from head to foot, and with only strength enough to sigh when he feels the dreadful pains pass all over his body.

Oh, the anxious waiting days! Weeks have gone by and Dave is able to talk a little. Very faintly he speaks, but sometimes he smiles when his mother kisses him. At last there is a high festival in the house, and Dave is able to sit up in bed. Father and mother know that he will live, but behind this joy is a great sorrow, for the doctor thinks Dave will never be able to walk again.

One day the doctor comes and Dave asks:

"When shall I be able to walk again, doctor?"

"Not for a long time, my boy," the doctor answers.

"In a year?" asked Dave.

"It will be more than that."

"In five years?"

"I can't tell you, my child; but we'll do the best we can for you," and so the doctor goes, and Dave is left alone with his mother. He knows that the doctor has not told him the worst, and he sees that his mother, in spite of her effort to hide her grief, is very sorrowful. He reaches out the one arm that he can use, puts it about her neck, and says:

"Mother, it is pretty bad, but I should like to know the worst. I'm not a coward, you know. Tell me, does the doctor think I shall be able to walk again?"

And then the mother, putting her cheek close to her boy's, sobs aloud and says:

"Oh, my poor boy! my poor, poor Dave."

And Dave knows what the doctor thinks.

"Don't cry, mother. It's pretty bad; but maybe I can do some good lying here. It was lucky I didn't fall on Cousin Edie, wasn't it?"

Now it is a settled thing in the house that Dave is to be always a cripple. The shadow is forever there, but somehow it falls everywhere darker thru on the boy's heart. They all wonder that he is so cheerful, but, you see, every night and many times a day Dave prays, "Oh, Lord, help me to bear it," and the good Lord, who is ever tender to children, does help him to bear it.

When the winter comes on Dave is so that he can be rolled about the house in an invalid-chair, which he says, laughingly, "Does almost as well as walking." And he says to his mother many times, "Well, I don't see what boys do that haven't any legs or any chair either; that must be pretty tough." One day it is bitter cold, and somebody comes to see Dave and talks about the sufferings of the poor, those who haven't fire or clothes to warm them. It is a kind lady interested in the Children's Aid Society and ever so many other sweet charities, and she tells how even that morning she has seen boys and girls, some of them smaller than Dave, who hadn't clothes enough to cover their poor little half-starved, shivering bodies. She is in the very midst of her story when Dave crys out:

"Why, here's a chance! I've got lots of trousers and haven't any legs to put into 'em, and there's lots of boys that have legs and haven't any trousers to put onto 'em. Why didn't we think of it before, mother? Bring them all out—trousers, and shoes, and boots, and skates, too—and let's send them right off; and then I'll lie here and laugh to think of a lot of boys running my trousers about for me." And Dave laughed as heartily as if he had had the soundest pair of legs in the world.

Then Dave's mother went to the bureau where she had put all of her boy's clothes, and brought them out by the armful. Six pairs of trousers; handsome trousers, too, and with such pockets! Dave always was particular about pockets. And a grand bundle is made up, and off it goes to the House and School of Industry; and so in course of time it came out in the report of contributions: Little Dave; six pairs of pants for poor boys." And every time Dave saw a poor boy with good trousers on going by his window he said, "Maybe those are my trousers; and maybe I am doing some good, after all." And he was.

Well, it isn't much of a story, is it? But it is only begun. The snap of it, like a snapper of a whip, is on the end of it.

Now, that lady that told Dave and his mother about the poor boys had an uncle, with whom she lived, and the uncle had a million dollars and the gout. He didn't enjoy either. He had a magnificent house, and all he could do was to sit in one room of it and howl with pain. He had pictures, and statuary, and everything beautiful, but he couldn't look at them, because the gout had affected his eyes. When he walked he hobbled: and though he might have liked on caramels and ice-cream, so far as getting them went, he couldn't eat anything without wishing that he had eaten nothing. He used to sit and groan and say:

"Here I've got money, and houses, and lands, and pictures, and carriages, and they are no earthly use to me." And he would have given no end of money to have had a sound pair of legs and the vigor of the poorest street-boy."

He was awfully cross and crabbed. The servants hardly dared come into the room where he was because he was given to shying teacups and books, and beating them with his crutches. His niece used to talk to him a good deal, and tried hard to lighten his splendid misery, but he was cross to her sometimes. She often thought that she would like to ask him for some of his money for her poor, but she dared not do it, for he had been a hard man at money-getting, and all his life had never given anything away.

The day that Dave gave away his trousers she came into his room, and found him in rather better humor than usual; so she sat down and told him all about Dave, and ended up by saying, "Oh, uncle, you would have laughed to have heard him—the funny little way that he said, 'I've got lots of trousers and haven't any legs to put into 'em, and there's lots of boys that have legs and haven't any trousers to put on 'em. I'll just lie here and laugh to think of lots of boys running my trousers about for me.'"

The old uncle couldn't help smiling, but he felt a twinge of pain in his most fiery toe, and he said, "O-o-h! what a fool the boy must be!" and this made the niece feel so badly that she went up to her room and almost cried.

But the cross old uncle kept thinking it over, and two or three times he smiled by himself when he thought nobody was looking. He thought it over for weeks, and couldn't help imagining little Dave sitting and smiling because somebody else was having fun with the things he couldn't use. He thought may be that was the way to get the most pleasure out of one's possessions. He had a mind to try it—yes, he would. So he called the niece in again and he said:

"Now, tell me all over the story about the silly boy that gave away his trousers."

So the niece told it all over, and the uncle smiled again. When she had finished he said:

"I've a good mind to try it."

"What, uncle?"

"Don't bother me with questions. O-o-h, my foot; O, ooh—my eyes. Don't sit there like a statue; get a pen, and paper, and ink. I'll try it. Get the paper quick."

So the niece, very much surprised, brought the paper, and the uncle said, "Now write," and she wrote, he dictating, as follows:

"To Messrs. So and So, Bankers:

"Gentlemen—As I have plenty of money and can't enjoy it because I've no health, and as I hear that there are a good many people who have health enough but can't enjoy it because they have no money, I authorize you to distribute the sum of $100,000 among such institutions as my niece shall name to you, in sums according to her discretion, and hope thereby to get a little comfort in seeing others use the money that I can't use myself."

And then he signed it; the niece's eyes were as big as some saucers, and the millionaire said:

"I suppose you think I'm a fool—everybody will—but if that boy gets some comfort out of his gift why shouldn't I out of mine?"

The money was given, and then came expressions of gratitude in many forms. Reports of charities where his money had been blest; poor women and men coming to thank him for his bounty—he found it made him forget his pains. He became more tractable; he made an effort and got out to see a corner-stone laid for a Children's Home, to build which he had furnished the money. The exercise did him good. He tried going out again. He became interested in ever so many poor families, and his health grew better. He even went to see Dave, and they laughed together and chatted together like children, and when the philanthropist—that's what people call him now—went away he said:

"If it hadn't been for those trousers of yours I shouldn't have been anything to-day but a poor miserable old millionaire."

And so Dave knew that, after all, in God's own way, he had done some good; and the good isn't all out of the story yet. Dave is getting well. His father says there is a new doctor who has discovered some new method of treatment, and that the paralysis in Dave's legs is yielding, and strength coming back, and, "God willing, my boy will be sound and well again in a year."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Building-Stone of England.

As early as the age when Stonehenge was piled up, building-stone was selected for special purposes, since the outer circle of that prehistoric monument consists of the Saracen boulders of the neighboring plain; but the inner pillars are of diabase, and have been brought from some unknown distance. During the middle ages Caen stone was frequently imported for building churches or other important architectural works. Before the Norman Conquest, however, most English buildings were of wood, so that "to timber a minster," not to build a church, is the good early English expression of the chronicle. In chalk districts, at a later date, broken flints were often employed, and they give a mean appearance to the abbey ruins and churches at Reading, as well as to most of the older edifices at Brighton. Oxford, however, on the Oolite, is, happily built of good native or imported stone. In modern times London, standing in the midst of the brick earth, has fallen a victim to the miseries of stucco, until the Queen Anne revivalists have endeavored to restore an honest red brick; whereas, Edinburgh, surrounded by excellent building-stone, has been able to do justice to its magnificent natural situation, and Aberdeen has clad itself in the stern but not unattractive gray and blue of its own solid granite. To the Caen stone, the Bath stone, and the Portland stone we owe half our cathedrals and abbeys, whose delicate tracery could never have been wrought in Rowley rag or Whin Sill basalt. The architecture of granite or hard limestone regions is often massive and imposing, but it always lacks the beauty of detailed sculpture or intricate handicraft. The marble lattice work of the Taj or the "prentice's pillar" of Roslyn Chapel are only possible in a soft and pliable material.—Fraser's Magazine.

The Effect of the Electric Light on the Growth of Plants.

Mr. C. W. Siemens, F. R. S., has supplemented his communication to the Royal Society on the effect of electric light on the growth of plants by a demonstration of its effect in the ripening of fruit. He exhibited two pots of strawberries which were started under precisely the same conditions: one had been exposed to daylight only in the usual way and showed a bunch of green berries; while the other, which, in addition to daylight, had been under electric light during the night bore a cluster of large ripe, well-flavored strawberries. This, as Mr. Siemens remarks, "the electric light is very efficacious in promoting the formation of the saccharine and aromatic matter upon which the ripening of fruit depends, and if experience should confirm this result, the horticulturist will have the means of making himself practically independent of solar light in producing a high quality of fruit at all seasons of the year."—Eclectic Magazine.

Preserving Flowers and Fruit.

Fruit and flowers may be preserved from decay and fading by immersing them in a solution of gum arabic and water two or three times, waiting a sufficient time between each immersion to allow the gum to dry. This process covers the surface of the fruit with a thin coating of the gum, which is entirely impervious to the air, and thus prevents the decay of the fruit or the withering of the flower. Roses thus preserved have all the beauty of freshly plucked ones, though they have been separated from the parent stem for many months. To insure success in experiments of this kind it should be borne in mind that the whole surface must be completely covered; for if the air only gets entrance at a pin-hole, the labor will all be lost. In preserving specimens of fruit particular care should be taken to cover the stem end and all, with the gum. A good way is to wind a thread of silk about the stem, and then sink it slowly in the solution, which should not be so strong as to leave a particle of the gum undissolved. The gum is so perfectly transparent that you can with difficulty detect its presence except by the touch. Here we have another simple method of fixing the fleeting beauty of nature.

Humorous.

Mothers who have any regard for their daughters will enforce the "you knit" rule.

A poet sends us a poem beginning "I gaze at the moon in the sky." That's right, young man, that's where to gaze at it. Don't try to gaze at it under the bed or in the woodshed chamber. Stick to the sky.

A Scotch dominie once asked a sprightly shepherd-boy, "What are you doing here, my lad?" "Tending swine," was the reply. "How much do you get?" "One florin a week." "In one sense I am also a shepherd," continued the dominie, "but I receive a much larger salary." "That may be; but then I suppose you have more swine under your care," innocently replied the boy.

Hans Growyost, a worthy German farmer, who has been a lifelong resident of Berks county, has a shrewish wife, who has long rendered his life anything but a couch of roses. One day not long ago she, in a fit of pique, picked up her duds and left him, vowing never to come back. The news went around among the neighbors—you know how intelligence of all kind travels in the country—and at night several of them, of whom I was one, went to condole with Hans. He sat on his front stoop puffing away at his pipe. "Hans," I remarked, "I pity you." "Mine poy," replied the honest Dutchman, as he disturbedly knocked out the ashes from his pipe, "you vas righd. She has shust coomed pack."

SECULAR NEWS.

Mr. W. H. Hargrave, our stock man, again shipped 200 sheep. This time they go to Baltimore. They are the growth of this county.—Lexington Exchange.

In Mitchell county the tobacco crops average 900 pounds per acre and are sold at an average of 33 cents per pound—$198 per acre. In the amount of tobacco raised Madison county, it is said surpassed all others. The value of the crop of 1879 estimated at $100,000. We give the following instances of individual crops and the amounts realized per acre in this county; John B. Nelson, of Madison county, on 2¼ acres, $706, with 500 pounds left over of the unsold crop; G. G. Gwaltney, on 1 acre, produced 768 pounds, which sold for $213 26; J. Ellington, on 2 acres, realized $484 48.—Raleigh North Carolina Farmer.

The annual report of the North Carolina Agricultural Experiment Station for the year ending April 15, 1880, shows that Prof. Ledoux made 912 analyses, requiring 8,000 quantitative determinations and 10,000 weighings. He has examined seeds and analyzed chemicals, fertilizers, marls, soils and waters, and made search for poison in all cases submitted. The result of his work on fertilizers is shown by the following statement: The commercial value of the fertilizers has increased from $33 66 per ton to $39 40. We pay $4 less, and get an article worth $1 60 more per ton. The expense of the station for last year was $6,673 47. The total income arising from the tax on fertilizers has been $80,117 81.—Charlotte Observer.

AN ITEM OF APPROPRIATION.

In telling of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the "Republican," N. Y., says in its Washington Items: "It seems to be generally understood that an especial appropriation will be made for the purchase, for the use of the members of the Senate and House, Warner's Safe Pills and Warner's Safe Bitters."

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

DANGER IN DISGUISE.

Summer Pestilence Unearthed: and Some Timely Advice About How to Avoid It.

Certain Valuable Facts Made Public.

It is well known that hot weather brings sickness, and that few people go through the Summer without unpleasant symptoms. The mouth becomes dry and parched, the tongue furred with white, the pulse irregular, the head feverish, the body cramped and the limbs swolen and tired. Ladies especially, with their natural delicacy and tendency to female troubles, find the hot weather almost unbearable, while Little Children are dying every day from exhaustion and because Parents neglect precaution and care. A prominent and well known physician of New York asserts as his postive belief that more than threefourths of all socalled Summer complaints arise from disordered secretions, and that these secretionary organs, which by being out of order cause so much trouble, are the Kidneys and Liver. These organs are the governors of the system, and by their movements the other parts are regulated. The brain controls the life, but the lower part of the body rules the health.

There is one, and only one known vegetable that will absolutely regulate and control the Kidneys and Liver at all times and thus prevent the many dangers of the Summer. That vegetable (a West Idia leaf,) is used as the basis of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It is pure, pleasant to the taste and absolutely certain in its results. It keeps those who intelligently use it in perfect health, and cures those whose secretions are deranged. For all urinary complaints of either sex it is infallible. For all bilious troubles it is certain. For the hot season it is invaluable, and it should be used upon the approach of the slightest symptoms. It may save your life or that of some dear friend; it will certainly prevent much suffering.

No remedy in America has ever received such high and enthusiastic commendations.

READ THE RECORD!

An Editor's Escape.

OFFICE OF THE "INDUSTRIAL ERA."
ALBIA, IOWA, May 26, 1880.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I take great pleasure in making the following statement: I have been afflicted with a disease of the kidneys for the past two years and have tried numerous remedies with only partial and temporary relief. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recomended to me, and after taking it the pain and distress left me, and I am to-day feeling strong and well. I am perfectly satisfied that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is the medicine needed and can cheerfully recomend it to others.

G. W. STAMM.

A Physician's Testimony.

I hereby testify that I have been a practicing physician for twenty seven years, and for many chronic cases in my prctice do recommend Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It was upon my advice that G. W. Stamm, editor of the Industrial Era, obtained this valuable remedy.

Albia, Ia. A. A. RAMSEY, M. D.

The Friend of Delicate Ladies.

A Pastor Made Happy.

I have been greatly troubled with my kidneys and liver for over twenty years, and during that entire time I was never free from pain. My medical bills were enormous, and I visited both the Hot and White Springs, noted for the curative qualities of the water. I am happy to say I am now a well man, and entirely as the result of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. With such glorious results, I am only too glad to testify regarding the remedy which has made me so happy

Coal Run Crossing, Arkansas.

An Educational Endorsement.

The Rev. C. A. Harvey, D. D., of the Howard University, of Washington, has written the following letter:

GENTLEMEN — I take great pleasure in stating that I have for two years past been acquainted with the remedy known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and that in some cases which had been given up by practitioners of both schools, the speedy change wrought by this remedy seemed but little less than miraculous. I am convinced that no remedy for kidney troubles heretofore discovered can be held for one moment in comparison with it.

Respectfully yours, C. A. HARVEY.

Its Grand Reputation.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has reached a reputation that is not limited by the confines of section or country. There are no injurious substances nor false and temporary stimulants in the preparation. It is purely vegetable and compounded under a formula that has passed severe tests and won endosements from some of the highest medical talent in the country. — New York World.

Ministerial Gratitude.

WHIPPANY, N. J., July 2, 1880.

MESSRS., H. H. WARNER & CO.:

Dear Sirs: — My wife had been suffering from a severe attack of acute inflamation of the bladder, which occurred in October last, and left a chronic inflammation of the neck of the bladder. This trouble yielded to no treatment, till some time in March she began the use of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and is now completely well, which we wish to acknowledge very thankfully. We have commended the Cure to others as we have had occasion, and shall continue to do so very cheerfully.

With many thanks,
(Rev.) D. MC GEE BARDWELL.

Arousing its Readers.

An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. Thousands of thousands are hurrying to their graves because they are carelessly indifferent to the insidious inroads of disease and the means of cure. It is the mission of H. H. Warner & Co., with their Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to arouse men to a sense of their danger and then cure them. — Memphis Appeal.

WHY WAS CAIN'S OFFERING REJECTED?

There was evidently something offensive to God in the offering itself which was brought by Cain. The expression used in the Bible is "unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect." The good of man had been changed, in one generation, from the fruit of trees (Gen. 2. 9.) to the fruit of the ground. (Gen. 4. 3.) Therefore the offerings he brought were the results of man's sin. The fruit of the trees of life (Heb. plural) from which Adam was driven, rendered him and his descendants, as long as they had access to them, immortal ("Lest he take of the trees of life and eat and live forever.") Abel's employment as a shepherd did not necessitate the slaying of the animals of his flock, either for sacrifices or for food. It is well known that God did not grant permission to eat animal food until after the flood, and then only as he had granted permission to eat the "green herbs" which had, up to the period of the fall, been reserved for the food of cattle. God said to Noah, "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things." As grain is the fruit of the grass, or green herb, (Heb.) we may suppose that Cain's offering was composed of these foods which were created for cattle, but which, man, by his sin, had brought himself to eat.

Sometimes we do not sufficiently distinguish between a permission and a prediction. When God said to Adam, thou shalt eat the herbs of the field (instead of the trees of life which gave the immortality) we call it a prediction. But when he said to Noah "Every living thing shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things," we call it a permission. I think it clear that both remarks were predictions. It was like a distressed father, of our day, saying to his drunken son, "You will ruin your health by your intemperance." No one would say that this was giving his son permission to ruin his health;—or condemning him to the hard necessity of ruining his health. When we read, "Even as the green herb, have I given you all things," we look at the word "given," and regard animal food as the gift of God. But this same word here translated "given" is elsewhere translated "requite"—"thou beholdest mischief and spite to requite it with thy hand." (Psalm 10. 14.)

Sacrifices were always made of a part of the food of the offerer. If Abel did not use animal food, it is scarcely probable that he would offer animal sacrifices. Why then, was he a keeper of sheep? One of the first results of the curse which Adam's sin brought upon the ground was the growth of thorns, weeds and thistles. They had no scythes, or other tools to destroy this noxious growth, but it could not escape Abel's observation that wherever sheep grazed the ground became smooth and bare like, and the rank weeds whose decay filled the air with miasma, were destroyed. Another reason for his occupation was this: although they were shut out from the trees of life in the garden of Eden, Abel still recognized the privilege of partaking of the food most nearly allied to that of Eden. He knew, with Moses, that "the tree of the field was man's life," and that his only available mode of cultivating these trees was by keeping weeds and thistles away from them by means of sheep. The sheep also furnished the wool for their clothing and thus Abel, by faith, offered an "excellent sacrifice to God," in bringing the firstlings of his flock and the fat thereof, or of the milk thereof. The Hebrew word "milk" comes from fatness. Isaac Leeser was so excellent a Hebrew scholar that Dr. J. W. Alexander said that he would have given a large portion of his salary, if he could only have had Leeser's instruction in Hebrew, for one hour a day. Leeser translates the text of Abel's offering thus: And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and the fattest thereof. "Could he not have said "the fatness, or milk thereof?" Many commentators say that a proof of the early custom of offering animal sacrifices was, that God clothed Adam and Eve with skins." The word "skin," in Hebrew comes from "nakedness," and may we not, with equal propriety translate this passage thus: "Unto Adam also and his wife did the Lord make coats for (on account of) their nakedness and clothed them." The Hebrew modes of expressing the words "of" "to" and "for" are sometimes not very clear. For instance, in this same chapter (verse 24) our translation reads "to keep the way of the tree of life" while Leeser's translation has it "to the tree of life. Instead therefore of saying "coats of skins" could we not with equal accuracy, "coats to skins." By substituting "to" for "of," the whole meaning is changed. In Ex. 22. 27. we read "for that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his skin." Another reason why I suppose these coats of Adam and Eve were not composed of the hides of animals is, that we are told that God "made" them. He "made coats"—He did not merely transfer from its original use, the hide of an animal;—He put forth His creative power to make garments for the creatures whom He had created in His own image. The hide of an animal would be a most uncomfortable garment in the heat of summer. God provides, even for the meanest of His insects, the most exquisitely ingenious and beautiful personal accommodations. Can we suppose He would do less for those beings, who partook, in the highest degree, of His own nature?

Another reason for doubting that the offering of Abel was an animal sacrifice, is, that Wilson's Lexicon defines the word used to express it, as "a gift, a present, spoken especially of a bloodless offering." The same word occurs in II Samuel 8. 2. And the Moabites became David's servants and brought gifts." Again it occurs in II Chron. 26. 8. "the Ammonites brought gifts to Uzziah."

Cruden says "a sacrifice differs from a mere offering in this, that in a sacrifice, there must be a real change or destruction of the thing offered, whereas an oblation is but a simple offering of a gift." The word used for "oblation" is the one which designates Abel's gifts to God. These gifts, of course, were of no more use to God than were the bloody sacrifices commanded by Moses. They simply testified to the piety and faith of the offerer. In the New Testament Abel's offering was called a sacrifice, but so were the gifts sent to Paul by Epaphroditus.

In support of the doctrine—or rather theory—that the antediluvian church offered animal sacrifices, the text "without shedding of blood there is no remission" is sometimes quoted. This, of course refers to the blood of Christ of which all other bloody sacrifices were typical. As we have dispensed with these particular types for nearly two hundred years, may we not suppose that the antediluvian church also dispensed with them? At least, I would be glad if some learned Presbyterian divine would tell me if it is part—an essential part—of Presbyterian doctrine, to insist upon a belief in antediluvian sacrifices. Does salvation depend upon this belief? Would a person who does not believe it, be refused admittance to the church?

I am very anxious to know. DISCIPLE.

OLD-TIME SINGULARITIES.

A young minister was ordained, married and commenced house-keeping in a certain congregation in one of the Northern States about 1795. In the course of a few years his church was burnt, and the State Legislature authorized a lottery to help raise funds to rebuild it. Over the pulpit of the new church was written in Greek letters, "To the Most High God." He began a memorandum of all the donations, great and small, made to him by the members of the congregation—an apple, an orange, a chicken, a fish, a fat goose, a fat turkey, a piece of beef or mutton, a peck of potatoes, &c. They all amounted to a good deal in the course of a few years. One of the most singular items is that whenever the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered quarterly, the bread and the wine remaining was given to the pastor. Sometimes a good deal of the wine was left over. Probably the communion furniture was kept at his house. C.

SOME NOTES ON BOTANICAL INTERESTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

[From the Raleigh Observer,]

How much do we owe to the great work which Dr. Moses A. Curtis has done for North Carolina? At home his botanical researches are only known in his "Woody Plants" and his "Catalogue of Indigenous Plants." Abroad he is esteemed the best mycologist in America, and to be esteemed a good mycologist by such men as Berkeley is to put one on the highest pinnacle of botanical science.

Few, very few, remember his first essay in the botanical field—his "Plants Growing Around Wilmington."

This latter work is now rewritten to correspond with the current synonymy, and has added to it the discoveries of the senior Dr. MoRee, that earnest, vigorous student of medicine and natural science, and also those of Mr. Wm. M. Canby of Wilmington, Del. The work comprises nearly 1,100 species, and among them some purely local plants, making it the richest florula in America. Subscriptions will be asked for it before long to enable the editor to cover the printer's bill.

Strange to say, botanical research has had little recognition from North Carolinians. This territory, though, has attracted botanists from several parts of the world.

William Batram, son of a celebrated botanist, himself a botanist and naturalist, made an extensive tour through North Carolina in 1776, entering the State by Brunswick county and continuing his journey past Wilmington by the way of Waccamaw Lake, through Campbellton, and so westward through the mountains of Cherokee.

In 1787 Andro Michaux visited the mountain region, and several times thereafter, carrying away, as Dr. Curtis tells us, "two thousand and five hundred specimens of trees, shrubs and plants." "Michaux's Flora Boreali Americana" contains very many North Carolina species. It was in one of these expeditions that the shortia galicifolia was discovered, to be lost for a century, and only identified by Prof. Gray by a dried specimen preserved in the Paris Jardin des Plantes. Michaux's botanical accuracy was afterwards verified by the rediscovery of shortia by a son of Mr. M. E. Hyams of Statesville. Dr. Curtis made many excursions over Michaux's line of travel to discover shortia, but unsuccessfully.

In 1802 F. A. Michaux, son of Elder Michaux, went over some of the territory traversed by his father and published a volume of his journey. Some of his observations of the early condition of some of our interior towns show how rude society was in those days. I quote one, which may be of interest to newspaper men:

"At Lincolnton they print a paper in folio that comes out twice a week. The price of subscription is two dollars per year, but the printer, who is his own editor, takes, by way of payment, for the ease of his country subscribers, flour, rye, wax, &c., at the market price."

This was about the year 1802 or 1803. But F. A. Michaux afterwards brought out a work which to this day is most valuable. The beautiful plates which illustrate it are exquisitely colored, and although my copy bears imprint of D'Hautel, Paris, 1819, the freshness and beauty of the coloring is undiminished.

The part of this work which is of most interest to North Carolinians is the one on the "Resinous Trees of North America." Michaux studied the commercial value of our forest products, and put on record items which will interest us now. He tells us that in 1807 pure dipping was sold at Wilmington at $3 a barrel, and the scraping a quarter of a dollar less. In 1804 the exportation to the Northern States and to the English possessions amounted to 77,287 barrels. During peace it comes even to Paris, where it is called Boston turpentine. The consumption in England is great, and, in the official statements, the value imported in 1807 is $465,828; in 1825 Liverpool alone received 40,294 barrels, and in 1807, 18,924 barrels. It was sold there in August, 1807, at $3 a hundred pounds, and after the American embargo in 1808 at $8 or $9. Michaux gives us many other valuable points which it would hardly answer to repeat in a daily paper.

Thomas Nutall completed Michaux's great work on forest trees, but the appended volumes lack the finish of those by Michaux. As strange as it may seem, three-quarters of a century after this work was thought to be complete, Elliott of South Carolina discovered another species of pine, which Dr. Mellichamp of South Carolina, with the assistance of the venerable Dr. Engelmann of St. Louis, has recently confirmed. This tree has not yet been identified in our State; it only awaits the keen eye of a young botanist to detect it.

Mr. Croom and Dr. Loomis published a florula of Newbern, 1833-37, a book now seldom seen; but the writer of this world willingly entertain propositions for exchange or purchase from any one owning these pamphlets. The work done by Dr. Schweinitz in mycology is world-famed, and the additions that were made to his collections by Dr. Curtis constitute the largest collection of American fungi. It is a little singular that of all this immense botanical work hardly a native lent a hand in it.

We hear, shortly after Raleigh's colony settled, of vessels loaded with sassafraize (sassafras) sailing from the Carolina shores for England, where this simple drug was famed for the cure of lues venerea.

The Munchausen stories of our vegetable products, by the romancer Lawson, attracted great attention to our State at an early day, and have duped many a sober-minded reader since. Even Dr. Hawks fell into his blunders, following him with confidence. It was Dr. Curtis' delight to show the unreliability of the stories, in an anaysis which appeared in the University Magazine, March, 1860, shortly after Hawks' history came out.

We owe our present knowledge of botanical products of this State to the labors of Dr. Curtis. It was his bright intellect that mastered all that his predecessors had done, and wrought them into a complete whole. Very few things escaped his keen eye, and to this day the best living botanists are quite jubilant over such an achievement as adding a single plant to Curtis' catalogue. I well remember the sensation caused by the discovery of the beautiful maiden's hair fern (adiantum capillus veneris) by Mr. Wm. M. Canby, of Wilmington, Del. He was at Hilton gathering some aquatic plants by the river side. He turned toward the marl bluff, when his eyes were greeted with a specimen of true maiden's hair fern. What I could it be possible, when Capman placed its northern limit in Albany, and Curtis' quick eye had passed it by so many years? It was afterwards identified beyond doubt, and a fresh specimen sent to Dr. Curtis brought him down to Wilmington on business. Very few are these additions. They can be told on the fingers of one hand. It was only a few months ago that the Hartford climbing fern, supposed not to grow east of the mountains, was found in Duplin county by Major Young, and afterwards by Mr. Faison.

Dr. Sprunt has found in Onslow and Duplin the red trumpet (sarracenia rubra) and since then Mr. Dormer has found it in this county. Mr. Curtis gives it a local habitat in Henderson county. But on the other hand I doubt if a generation of botanists will be able to make more than a check-list of Dr. Curtis' great work. As I pen the words "great work" I look at the rude pamphlet before me and think how unappreciative a State must be that would print the result of an eager student's life-time work in a style that would not compare with that of the average spelling-book!

Who is to be the editor of this vast mass of scientific collection? Who is to elucidate this bare and homely catalogue in such a way as to make it serve as a guide to future generations, and to aid the present? For, after all, if botany cannot work out practical results, the people will have none of it. But who of our young men are giving their attention to these matters? Are we to be content to allow strangers to come in and teach us what is growing at our feet daily? Must we be content for foreigners to show us the way to utilize our products, while we, for a lack of knowledge, see thousands of dollars made from plants of whose names we are ignorant? As far as I know, the botanists in this State are doing only a little elementary work at our colleges, each year being but a repetition of a very short excursion into the vast field. We could achieve very much by diligent work, and surely we owe it to those who have erected the foundation that we build upon it.

A FULL CUP.

When the saintly Payson was dying he exclaimed, "I long to hand a full cup of happiness to every human being." This was the language of a heart thoroughly purged of all selfish affections, and filled with the spirit of that love which led our adorable Jesus to give his life for human redemption. If every Christian would go out daily among men, filled with such longing for human happiness, what marvelous changes would soon be wrought in human society! The selfish element would be eliminated from the dealings of the Christian business man. Not justice merely, but benevolence would enter his every act of trade. The same spirit would rule his home and church life. He would become an incarnation of good will toward all, and would so preach the Gospel by his deeds that men would see his good works, and glorify his heavenly Father. The spirit of Payson is worthy of every man's imitation. Happy he who can truthfully say, "I long to hand a full cup of happiness to every human being."

NOT LOST.

The look of sympathy, the gentle word,
Spoken so low that only angels heard;
The secret act of pure self-sacrifice,
Unseen by men, but marked by angels' eyes—
These are not lost.

The sacred music of a tender strain,
Wrung from a poet's heart by grief and pain,
And chanted timidly with doubt and fear,
To busy crowds, who scarcely paused to hear—
These are not lost.

The silent tears that fall at dead of night
Over soiled robes that were once pure and white;
The prayers that rise like incense from the soul,
Longing for Christ to make it pure and whole—
These are not lost.

The happy days that gladdened all our youth,
When dreams had less of self and more of truth;
The childhood's faith so tranquil and so sweet,
Which sat like Mary at the Master's feet—
These are not lost.

The kindly plan devised for others' good,
So seldom guessed, so little understood;
The quiet, steadfast love that strove to win
Some heedless wanderer from the ways of sin—
These are not lost.

Not lost, O Lord! for in Thy city bright,
Our eyes shall see the past by clearer light,
And things long hidden from our gaze below
Thou wilt reveal, and we shall surely know
These are not lost. —Selected

KEEP IT TO YOURSELF.

You have trouble—your feelings are injured, your husband is unkind, your wife frets, your home is not pleasant, your friends do not treat you fairly; and things in general move unpleasantly. Well, what of it? Keep it to yourself. A smouldering fire can be found and extinguished; but when the coals are scattered, who can pick them up? Bury your sorrow. The place for sad and disgusting things is under the ground. A cut finger is not benefitted by pulling off the plaster and exposing it under somebody's eyes. Tie it up and let it alone. It will get well sooner than you can cure it. Charity covereth a multitude of sins. Things thus covered are often cured without a scar; but once published and confined to meddling friends, there is no end to the trouble they may cause. Keep it to yourself. Troubles are transient, and when a sorrow is healed and past, what a comfort it is to say, "No one ever knew it until the trouble was all over."

THE MOUNTAINEER'S ADVICE.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A lady passed to the rough traveling of a mountain land went thither to make her home, and received from one of her new friends this bit of advice. She had been telling of her faintness when guiding her horse through a deep ford where the waters ran swiftly and the roar was incessant, and said she feared she would never be able to overcome the abject physical terror which dominated her whenever she found herself in the strong current midway between the banks.

"Oh! yes, you will," said her companion. "Just take a leaf in your mouth and chew it, and as you ride across, keep your eyes on the other side."

When I heard this, I thought there was a lesson in it for myself and perhaps for others. The leaf in the mouth, a simple thing and at first glance unnecessary, nevertheless had a meaning, and I soon discerned it—occupation, diversion for the mind from an unreasoning fear, something to attract attention from fright and peril half unconsciously. The look over and beyond the flood was emblematic of the power of faith, which enables us to go forward, no matter how environed with difficulties, because we are not dwelling so much on the present distress as on the joy that is set before us.

How often we are encompassed, beset and thoroughly perplexed by the contrary circumstances of our lives! Going up stream is hard work when everything about is combining to drag us down. You are a young Christian, and have resolved by the help of your Divine Saviour to live singly and constantly for Him. But your home influences tend to worldliness, to money-making, to securing social position, or to stepping higher in the sight of men. They who love you most tenderly set stumbling-blocks in your path, and your household affections strive against your spirituality. Do not grieve about it. Take the leaf in your mouth. It may be the leaf of the Bible study. A sweet verse in the morning, read, thought over and assimilated, is a wonderful onward helper. It may be the leaf of unobtrusive humility, for you are tempted to pride and Pharisaism more than you are aware. It may be the leaf of gentle effort for the Master, in the Flower Mission, in the invalid's chamber, in the daily homely housework, or in the Sunday-school. Take the leaf, and remember to keep your eyes on the other side—the bright side—where the day dawns and the shadows flee away. You are the head of a family, you are a man in a place of responsibility, with others depending on you for direction. You cannot swerve by a hair's breadth from your integrity without doing irreparable injury to many interests. Sometimes you are pressed and pulled and harassed in ways which nobody suspects. Neither your wife nor your business partner nor the people you meet as you go to and fro, your pastor nor your intimate friend suspect the peril you are facing. It turns you giddy and sick, but they go gaily on, for your mountain torrent is to them as a silvern brook in a green pasture. Do not despair. Take the leaf in your mouth, the leaf of prevailing prayer, the leaf of stubborn honesty, or the leaf of brave self-assertion, and look, till your weary eyes grow clear and your feeble heart grows confident, to the other side where all is peace and safety.—Christian Intelligencer.

UNIVERSALITY OF THE SABBATH.

We are told that when the Almighty had finished the work of creation He rested from His labors; that thereupon He instituted a Sabbath, or day of rest, and that every returning seventh day was to be kept holy in remembrance of the Creator and Governor of all things. In accordance with this account we might naturally suppose that this Divine institution was known among the antediluvians, and that the observance of it was enjoined by Noah upon his three sons and their posterity. Traces of the same we might expect to find also among heathen nations, who, although they had lost the knowledge of the true God, would be apt to interweave in their own crude systems of mythology the traditionary religious rites of their fathers. And such has evidently been the case. It appears that the Israelites, during their sojourn in Egypt, neglected the observance of the Sabbath; yet the Egyptians, a heathen people and ignorant of the Sabbath as a day of rest, divided time into weeks of seven days, and the days they consecrated to the seven planets—a system of dividing time which, singularly enough, we find among the Greeks, the Romans, the Hindoos, the Goths, and generally and partially, among the Saxons.

Our Saxon ancestors, a heathen people, divided time into weeks of seven days, and our names of the days of the week are of heathen and not scriptural origin: thus, the day which the heathen nations of Northern Europe dedicated to the worship of the sun, the first day of the week, we still call Sun-day—a name which the puritanical notions of our New England fathers rejected as profanely impious, and in its place adopted the Jewish appellation of Sabbath.

The second in order is Monday, or Moonday, the day dedicated to the moon. Third, we have Tuesday, from Tuisco, the Saxon god of war; hence Tuesday, in old English, is court day, the day for legal combat, or for commencing litigation. The fourth is Wednesday, from Wodin or Odin, another Saxon divinity. The fifth is Thursday, or Thor's-day, the day consecrated to Thor, the god of thunder, answering to Jupiter of the Greeks or Romans. The sixth is Friday, the day of Freya, a divinity corresponding to the Grecian Venus. The seventh is Saturday, the day of Sater or Saturn, the most ancient of the gods worshiped by the Greeks and Romans, and known to our Saxon ancestors by the name of Seatur.

Thus we find here an intermingling of different systems of mythology. We find Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Hindoos, Goths, Germans and Saxons retaining the scriptural division of time, which they have introduced into their own religious systems, and even these latter, we shall find, have certain prominent analogies running through them, all traceable for their origin, in their prominent features, to scripture history itself. None will deny that this custom of dividing time, so prevalent among different and widely separated heathen nations, must have had an early and a common origin, and what one so satisfactory can be assigned as that to which the Bible attributes it?—Willson's Outlines of History.

PHYSICAL NOT PSYCHICAL.

Rev. Joseph Cook in his lectures on Spiritualism used language that drew down upon him the charge of being a spiritualist in belief. In a letter to the New York Observer, in language characterized by a contemporary as intense, he positively denies the imputation. On this general subject Rev. Dr. G. L. Samson furnishes the Observer an article under the above caption and which we recommend to the attention of our readers.

"The readers of Joseph Cook's statements in the Observer, and of the discriminating criticisms of the editor, must have observed that Mr. Cook designates the recently observed German phenomena as "psychical" in character. Every discriminating reader must have it suggested that the moving of tables, and phenomena like to this, witnessed in all ages, are not "psychical," but physical. Thorough investigations, begun in Washington when at the same time Professors Morse and Page were making their two applications of electro magnetism and the Fox girls were displaying their table rappings and tippings, suggested the law of these physical phenomena in 1845; those suggestions were confirmed at Cairo, Egypt, in 1848, where the acquaintance of the Count de Gasparin was made; and that law has since been traced back through Mesmer in Paris, when Franklin on behalf of the French Academy, investigated his experiments; thence to New England and Mediæval witchcraft; and thence through Grecian and Roman history to the earliest Egyptian, Chaldean and Indian magians.

"All the attested phenomena now called spiritualistic, or psychical, can be resolved into two classes, both following the physical law now familiar in electro-magnetism:

"First.—Solid bodies, such as pots, tables, &c., are moved by persons of an over-charged nervous temperament, being attracted and repelled as by a magnet. A case of this kind, witnessed in Angelique Cottin, was investigated in 1848 at the French Academy by men like Cuvier, Humboldt and Arago. In the witchcraft phenomena of Salem two centuries ago, in the Mediæval magic, in Pliny's history of Roman, Grecian, Egyptian and Indian magic, the same phenomena, now met by observing travelers in India and Egypt, have in all ages been witnessed.

"Second the muscles of animals, of delicate youth, and of nervous men, can be in like manner controlled and moved by men of strong muscle and of determined will. This is stated as an undoubted fact by Cuvier in his "Anatomie Compareo;" it was attested by Franklin in company with a committee of the French Academy, when Mesmer caused his subjects to move unconsciously about the stage at his will and to utter sentiments which were but the suggestions of his mind. This power, unconsciously exercised, was displayed at Salem when a girl supposed to be bewitched, read from books held before her by Cotton Mather, first Latin, then Greek, next Hebrew—languages familiar to Mather, who sat at her side; while she could not read Elliot's Indian New Testament, in a language unknown to Mather. The testimony of the ablest observers, some of them first misled by so-called "Clairvoyance," accords with the clear but uncomprehended fact stated by Miss Martineau: "The mind of the somnambule mirrors that of the mesmerist." This power, also, over animals, and over even the lips of others, can be traced through all history and is made a matter of historic record by Moses and Luke when it came into contrast with the miracles which attested the Divine inspiration of the Old and New Testament writers.

"The power, now, by which these phenomena are produced has in all ages been declared to be "physical" or "physiological." Hippocrates, the Greek physician, who wrote B. C., 450, and whose aphorisms in a pocket edition are still a text book in French medical schools, taught that through the medium of a fluid generated in the brain, to which he gave the general name "physis," the mind acts on muscles to contract and move them. When Franklin saw Galvani's experiment of contracting the muscles of a dead frog by the electric current flowing from his battery, he decided that the brain generates electricity; and Sir John Herschel, in his "Preliminary Discourse on the Study of Natural Philosophy," describes at length the action of the fluid thus generated in coursing along the nerves and contracting the muscles of the limbs, lips, &c. Modern physiologists—English, French and German—have determined that the fluid, thus generated and thus acting, is not electricity, but akin to electro-magnetism and governed by its laws.

"Two of the laws of electricity applied to the phenomena of so-called Spiritualism explain the two classes of phenomena above cited; and the simultaneous prominence given to those laws by Professors Morse and Page and by the Fox-girl table tippings and rappings if most significant as to their analogy. By the power of a small electro-magnet, wound with the coils of Professor Henry's discovered helix, Professor Page made an iron bar of a thousand pounds weight dance in the air; while Professor Morse, by the same power made his thought to be rapped out forty miles distant in Baltimore. Why, then, should not a person charged with the nervous fluid become a magnet to objects nigh; and why should not the thought of another person, at the will of a controlling operator, be rapped out on a table or be uttered from the lips of an unconscious agent employed by them? Two facts, observed and reported by intelligent French, English and American observers, will illustrate physical law of phenomena now reported as new,—phenomena familiar to men like Cicero, who in his "Divination" states that the experimenters declared to him they performed their feats by "a law termed by the Greeks physiological."

"An English merchant in India has lost his gold spectacles; he is sure one of his dozen or more servants has stolen them; and he sends for a Brahmin, who by one of many kindred physical methods knows how to detect the thief. The servants are all summoned and arranged in a semi-circle; a brazen censer is kindled; incense burned on it fills the air, and fearful incantations are uttered. When the nerves of the guilty man are sufficiently excited, the Brahmin declares he is "Divine," and will reveal the thief; he draws out a brazen dish and places it in the centre of the circle; he declares that dish will go to the thief; it does go to the man most excited because he knows his guilt; and so sure, before hand, is the Brahmin of the certainty of the law, that he is as confident as a modern "medium" in his experiments.

"Again, an American, in company with English travelers and with a Frenchman who shall be the Count de Gasparin, visits the celebrated Brahmin at Cairo. The incense-burning, the incantations, are gone through, when the quick eye of the magian detects the most nervously excited of his visitors. An Arab boy, by a stroke of the magian's hand, is unconscious; and, with his hand in the selected visitor's, the connected passes are made. The inquirer is now desired to ask any question he pleases about his English home and his family, as to which none but he knows. Through muscular and nervous connections the inquirer unconsciously moves the Arab boy's lips, which, like the telegraph, report his thought."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The Rev. Daniel Edward, Free Church minister of Breslau, writing on the subject of religious intolerance in Austria, states that the gendarmes appeared on a recent Sunday in a Presbyterian meeting house in Nedwes and took down forty-one names, which means that hearers and minister would alike be heavily fined.

The Church paper which attacked Bishop Ryle for marrying three times has under-stated the case. A clergyman has forwarded to the Archbishop of York a protest, in which he says: "Having read an announcement in the newspapers that your Grace proposes to consecrate Dr. John Charles Ryle a bishop on St. Barnabas' Day, I venture to draw your attention to St. Paul's express statement that a bishop 'must be * * * the husband of one wife' (1 Tim. iii: 2), on which I would respectfully remark that if this apostolic law does not mean one absolutely and one only, and not one after the other, it has no meaning at all, for it would then imply that a person not a bishop might have two or more wives at the same time. Now, as Dr. Ryle has married four wives in succession, it appears to myself and to many others that your Grace, as Guardian of the Truth in the province of York, might with no impropriety interpose your high authority and desist from consecrating that clergyman because of this undoubted bar."

An invitation having been sent to Mr. Spurgeon to attend the meeting to be held at Exeter Hall to memoralize the Queen, and to petition Parliament, against the appointment of the Marquis of Ripon as Viceroy of India on the ground of his being a Roman Catholic, Mr. Spurgeon writes to say: "My hands are more than full, or I would attend the meeting. I think Mr. Gladstone has made a great mistake in appointing a Roman Catholic Viceroy in India. So long as the Law of Settlement is in force, it seems to be involved in the Protestant succession to the Throne that all Viceroys should be Protestants also. Our predecessors judged from painful experience that Papists would not allow them their liberties if they mounted the Throne, and they therefore excluded them. I do not think that the English people are prepared to remove this safeguard, and, while it remains, it seems clear to me that Her Majesty's Viceroys must not be Catholics. On this and other grounds I am extremely sorry that the present government should thus expose itself to just criticism, and grieve its own supporters."

The report presented by Bishop Herzog at the recent meeting at Geneva shows that fifteen priests have been lost during the year to the movement: three have died at their posts; five have resigned in parishes where the popular election installed Roman priests, and two left their posts without waiting for the inevitable rejection; three priests have been discharged and two have seceded to the Vatican ranks. One of these latter was a young student of Berne, ordained by Bishop Herzog. Against the losses an ordination of two priests is to be placed, and the reception of Abbe Carrier, formerly M. Loyson's curate in Paris, while five candidates for priesthood are waiting ordination. Fifty-nine priests are now installed in Switzerland. The losses are wholly in the cantons of Berne and Geneva. In Berne ten priests have been lost, and since the Solothurn Synod twelve parishes in that canton have passed by popular election to the Romanists; but in three of these there are such numerous Christian Catholic minorities that Government aid has been invoked and is expected. There are 3,907 children under religious instruction, and 1,055 preparing for confirmation.

The Presbyterian.

JOHN McLAURIN · Editor

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 18, 1880.

THE COMPARATIVE SUMMARIES.

Some weeks since we presented a comparative summary of the Southern Presbyterian Church for the past five years. We now place the statistical summaries of the Northern and of the Southern Presbyterian Churches for the past four years before our readers contiguously that those who are interested may examine for themselves, or verify the notes which we shall make.

We intend no unkind comparisons; indeed were we unkindly disposed the generous manner in which the Presbyterian refers to our Church would estop us.

The first matter of special note is that in the Northern Church there is a decrease of candidates for the ministry, and this decrease has been regular and continuous during the four years under consideration. Seventy-two fewer candidates in 1880 than in 1877, with an increase of membership, presents a fact calling for serious thought. The candidates in the Southern Church are fewer than in 1879, and fall 31 short of 1877 which is a larger proportion of decrease than in our sister Church. Of licentiates there is a decrease of 27 North since 1877 and of 12 as compared with 1879; the Southern Church shows an increase of 6 over 1879, and a decrease of 4 as compared with 1877. This latter showing is in favor of the Church Sonth.

The increase in the number of ministers in either Church is very slight. In the Church North the percentage of increase over 1879 is a little over two per cent, and over 1877 five percent. In the Southern Church the percentage is one percent and three percent respectively.

In licenses and ordinations there has been increase in both churches though in neither has it been proportionate to increase in membership.

The increase of installations is noticeable and encouraging as indicating the growing into favor of the pastoral relation. In our sister Church the increase in this regard is 92 over last year and in our Church it is 15. In the Northern Church an increase of 33 in dissolutions of the pastoral relation and in the Southern of 7.

The Northern Church organized one church less the past year than the year before while the Southern organized 9 more; the former Church dissolved 12 more churches during the year closing in 1880 than in 1879 and the latter Church dissolved 8. Dissolutions are not necessarily indications of decline, as organizations are not of progress. A church which should not have been organized ought to be speedily dissolved.

On the subject church membership the Presbyterian says: "The ingatherings into these Churches from the world around form the least satisfactory portion of these statistics. In 1877 there were added to the churches on profession of faith, 49,370. In 1880 there were added 31,150 to the same churches, a decrease 18,220 in the number of additions. The Southern Church presents a more favorable report, in this respect, than does the Church North. The net gain of the Church North in the year just closed is 4,185. The net gain of the Church South in the year just closed is 3,273. But 5,000 ministers labored in the Church North, and only about 1,000 in the Church South. The figures seem to show that the Southern ministry is a more fruitful one than the Northern ministry, or may it be that they have fewer enemies to meet, or find a more general acceptance of the gospel."

Of infants baptized fewer are reported in the Southern Church for 1880 than for 1879; in the Northern Church the increase is more reasonable, but the inattention to the duty in this matter ought to receive attention.

In total contributions the increase is gratifying; the proportion of increase is largely in favor of the Southern Church though it is to be noted that the contributions of this Church for 1880 fall nearly $50,000 of those for 1877.

A comparison between the Churches in matter of contributions in detail cannot be readily instituted. In contributions to Foreign Missions the Northern Church advanced $38,859; the Southern Church $3,516. In Education the Northern Church advanced $26,481; the Southern Church fell back $3,599. In Publication our sister Church fell behind $2,027 while our Church advanced $1,066. The Northern Church fell behind in the items of Congregational and Miscellaneous taken together—including we suppose the salaries of pastors—$38,310 while the Southern Church gained $37,374. Thus the Southern Church increased in what was nearest home and the Northern Church in what was for the cause at large.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

Have we anything further to say on the subject of Education in North Carolina? Not a great deal. The position of Public Instruction as presented for the consideration of the citizens of North Carolina does not strike us as very prominent or from any point of view as very favorable.

Two great political parties which are in contest before the voters of the State for their favor, will have, each for itself, candidates for the superintendency of Public Instruction. The standard bearer of one party has been prominently before the people, and is now filling the office to which a re-election is asked. His character and qualifications have endorsement of the party which with confidence places him before the people. On the other hand the party in opposition will doubtless select for the office a candidate whose moral character will not be subject to impeachment, and who it may be supposed will fully avail himself of such facilities as are offered for the discharge of his duties.

We may not be accused of partisanship, in saying that no question will likely arise as between the candidates personally. So far as we can see indeed, and we are disposed to deplore it, there will be no matter of difference between the parties on the abstract question of Public Instruction. Disposed we are to deplore it, because a serious difference in views would insure a vigorous discussion and arouse the spirit of the people. That education is of such transcendent importance and of such universal application as that it should be kept out of the domain of politics is the opinion of many. In their view some one specially qualified should be presented to the people without distinction of party for the headship of the department of education by the State. But this can be possible only when the indifference on the subject is so profound that even the office shall go a-begging, or the enthusiasm is so general and so intense as to push aside all other considerations. Happily we are not in the depths implied in the former alternative; unfortunately we are not elevated to the heights of the latter. The advantage of having any matter espoused by political parties consists in having plans and modes, past conduct and future intentions so earnestly antagonized and searchingly discussed, that the people shall have the subject presented to them—forced even upon their attention—and that they shall be thoroughly enlightened in all that concerns it. Failing in this what is effected?

So far as we can see the subject of public instruction is merged by our political parties in other questions of state concern, or in questions of national interest. The candidates for control of the educational interests of our great State will simply stand or fall along with their associates on either party ticket. Educational matters of a public character are not, we assuredly think, in a state that admits of no improvement. But has either party an avowed policy looking to improvement? Has either party any policy, plan or purpose, deliberately thought out and definitely settled? If so why may not the people know it? If money is needed, cannot one party or the other boldly come before the people with a plan for raising it? If the trouble is found in an indifference of the people, indicated by their not using schools when they are offered, would not a compulsory school law afford a solid plank in a party platform?

The apathy of the people on the subject of education is doubtless the prime cause for the indifference manifested by political parties, and (sadly we say it) we see no immediate hope of breaking that apathy. Right nobly and with conspicuous ability have several of our secular papers, those of greatest influence, pressed the importance of education upon the people; but we see no rift in the clouds that hang over us in fearful gloom.

GERMAN PHILOSOPHY.

Our readers will be glad to know that Rev. Dr. R. L. Dabney, a close observer, a deep thinker and a man of singular penetration on theological subjects, does not regard the speculations of German philosophy as having any influence over the German preachers. Altogether Dr. Dabney's article to the Christian Observer as given below is calculated to inspire hope:

"It is apparent that we are not to hope for an entire cure of the unhealthy state of German philosophy and theology, while the causes continue which have produced the disease. Our wisdom will be to appraise these ever-varying speculations at their real value. For us, they are entitled to have no serious significance. Indeed, from what I learn here, they are allowed to have no serious significance at home. They serve their turn, attract attention and secure places and salaries for their authors, furnish the intellectual amusement and discussion which the literary world craves, give temporary scope to the restless activity of the hook-making world; have their day and die into forgetfulness. The Germans know all the time that they were going to die; it is understood that the fashion is to keep changing, in order to satisfy the restlessness of an over-crowded literary class; just as the fashions of bonnets are certainly to change, to please the fashionable world. But all the time they have almost no influence on the actual preaching of German pastors, who are all University men. They did not preach Strauss while Strauss was fashionable, nor Baur while he was in fashion; nor do they preach the prevailing craze of the day, be it "Wellhausen's Historical Criticism of the Pentateuch," or what not. They go on preaching old-school Lutheranism. They would be excessively amused at learning that American pastors took their novelties in any other than a "Pickwickian sense."

It may be added, also, that the highest teachers in the universities, and those of most established reputation, give least weight to the novelties. The old fable is realized, the few frogs make far more noise than the great herd of bullocks in the meadow. Thus, English materialists parade the names and words of the naturalists, Hæckel and Carl Voght, as great theistic lights. But the men who really lead here, Virchow and Helmholtz, and such like, make no account of their views; and one hears currently such declarations as this from well-informed men—that this materialistic physics is mere sciolism in a scientific point of view, the ventilation of which has justly consigned these men, here, to an insignificant place. They count for very little in Germany.

"Now, it should not be assumed that there is no vital piety in Protestant Germany. There are, doubtless, the 'seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal.' It is to be hoped that there is much unobtrusive piety, especially among the women, who excel in the domestic virtues. But, on the other hand, it should not be supposed that the theological vagaries described have failed of their poisonous effects on the German mind. The educated young men all know at the time that the fashionable phase of theological rationalism, whatever it may be, is not to last, but none the less is the total result of the changes this: to make them feel that the professed friends of the Bible do not believe in its real authority, but dread it as a 'nose of war,' to be twisted for their interest or vanities.

"There is little real reverence for the Bible or the worship of God. It is common to hear university students ('confirmed' members of the Church, bear in mind) boast that they have not been inside a church in a year. Sunday is their holiday. Gottingen has a thousand students, probably a hundred students of theology. The University church is opened only once a fortnight, and the attendance of students then varies from six to twelve. Coupling this with the retiring, undemonstrative nature of German piety where it really exists, and one easily sees that the palpable religious atmosphere is one of spiritual frost, almost of spiritual death."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Last week the Criminal Court of New Hanover county sentenced a wretch to be hung for the murder of his wife's mother. The sentence will be executed on 3rd September prox. By the laws of North Carolina capital executions must be private, unless the Board of County Commissioners of any county direct otherwise. Already we learn that certain persons, principally negroes, are clamoring that this execution may be public. For the sake of humanity, for the sake of good morals, it is to be hoped that the Commissioners of New Hanover will not yield to the clamor of those who desire to feast their eyes on the dying agonies of a fellow being. The change making private executions the law is a stride towards civilization. Let us not insist on going back to barbarism.

Bishop Coxe is making himself ridiculous in opposing the new Bible revision. The Christian Union goes for him direct:

Bishop Coxe has not strengthened his opposition to Bible revision by his recent communication in the Churchman. So long as he planted himself on what he considered to be the principles at stake in the matter there were many who respected his opinions even while they differed from them; but when he shifts his ground, and plants himself on the fact that the Episcopal Church in America has not been sufficiently recognized and consulted in the work of revision, we venture to say that he will have few to follow him even among Episcopalians. The question is not what ecclesiastical body shall give us a new translation, but who shall give us the best translation. The present revisers represent the best Christian scholarship of the day, and Bishop Coxe makes a great mistake when he calls their fitness in question or shows his own imperfect conception of the work by demanding that it be committed to any Church as a Church.

The Christian at Work brings the Disciples' Church forward in connection with Genl. Garfield. The strength of the denomination will surprise many of our readers. The Christian at Work says:

The Christian or Disciples' Church to which a more than usual attention has been directed, from the fact that General Garfield, the Republican nominee for President is a prominent member, ranks in point of numbers fourth in order in the United States, having 828,000 communicants. It also has a large membership in the Dominion of Canada, Jamaica and the British Isles. It has also a large number of congregations in Australia. It has mission stations in Paris, Copenhagen and other European cities, and has recently sent a missionary to Constantinople. In the United States and Canada the church has some thirty different publications, there being eight or ten weekly papers, among the number. It controls three universities, fifteen colleges and about one hundred seminaries and high schools. This church has given four Governors to as many different States; several members of the Cabinet, among them Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, of Buchanan's Cabinet. Nine of the present United States Senators, with a number of Congressmen, are also members of the Church.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Rev. W. C. Dunlap, D. D., of Shreveport, La., preached the dedication sermon for Smyrna church on the 4th Sabbath of July (25th). A very large congregation was present and seemed greatly delighted with the "good sermon." Owing to sickness in his family the Doctor returned home on Monday, but services were continued during two more days. Two young men and one young women were added to the church.

This house cost the people but $280, they doing the work among themselves without aid from abroad.

The church organization is but two years old and numbers but twenty-one.

CYRUS HARRINGTON.

A BUDGET OF NEWS.

The church at Milton, N. C., gave their pastor Rev. H. T. Darnall, a furlough of a month, and the time was improved by a delightful and invigorating rest. While on the general subject of the Milton church we note that on 11th July last six persons were received into its communion on profession of faith in Christ, making in all twenty-eight persons received during the summer. Along with this good news comes the announcement that Mr. Darnall has been called to the Durham church and has accepted the call, subject to the action of Orange Presbytery—and this is good news for Durham. Mr. D. will probably remove to Durham about 1st Sept. prox.

Rev. Kenneth McDonald, as appears from complimentary resolutions which are published elsewhere has ceased to supply Moore's Creek church, and by the assignment of Wilmington Presbytery takes charge of Richlands, Cobb's Mill and White Hall. After the 1st of September his post office address will be Jericho, Wayne county, N. C., instead of Magruder, N. C., as now. Correspondents are requested to note the change.

Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, has left his post for an absence of some weeks. During Dr. W.'s absence he will attend the General Council of the Presbyterians throughout the World, which meets in Philadelphia on September 23d. He is expected to present to the Council a paper on the subject of Evangelization.

Rev. Dr. J. L. Girardeau in a letter to Rev. Dr. Palmer, President of the Alumni Association of Columbia Theological Seminary announces that he yields to the urgent request of the Alumni and will return to a professorship in the Seminary. We do not publish the correspondence in full, expecting in our next issue to give our readers the letter of Dr. Girardeau to the Directors of the Seminary.

In this connection we note from the Columbia Register that the Rev. Dr. James Woodrow was elected Professor of Mineralogy, Geology, Botany and Zoology, in the Agricultural and Mechanical Institute of South Carolina, located at Columbia. This is the chair which had been offered to and declined by Dr. Joseph LeConte. Professor Woodrow signified his acceptance of the same.

From the Greensboro (N. C.) Patriot we learn that the congregation of Dr. J. Henry Smith having tendered him leave of absence, he has left for a brief tour to the mountains of Piedmont Carolina. Dr. Smith will be accompanied by his brother Samuel C. Smith and by four sons, Rev. Samuel M. Smith being among them. The travelers will go about their trip in a sensible fashion. They will go by private conveyance camping out on the route, and enjoying themselves in the old fashioned way, before the days of railroads and telegraphs.

MARK'S CREEK, FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

The Rev. S. C. Alexander, who had just returned to his home in Wadesboro, N. C., writes, August 16:

"We closed last Friday a meeting of seven days at Mark's Creek. The Lord was with us in mighty power. The people seemed to be greatly refreshed and revived. Sixteen members were added to the roll of that church on profession of their faith in Christ. On the last day of the meeting there were twenty-nine baptisms, six of them on their own faith in Christ. To God be all the praise. The people of this congregation are generally poor; but they have fine crops, and are more prosperous now than they have been since the war. The Lord has blessed them greatly in temporal and spiritual things, and I hope they will soon become rich in faith and good works. There was truly a shaking of the "dry bones" in the valley of Mark's creek.

"I hope soon to get them all to take the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN."

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN THE PRESBYTERY OF EASTERN TEXAS.

Mr. Editor: This subject should engage the attention of our whole Church, and especially of our Committee of Home Missions at Baltimore.

There was a church organized near San Augustine, Texas, in the year 1838, by Rev. Hugh Wilson, who was sent out as a missionary to the Republic of Texas. I am told he was a North Carolinian, and I would like to know more of him. He ministered to the little flock a part only of one year. Rev. J. M. Beeton ministered to the church from 1840 to 1843 inclusive; Rev. P. W. Warriner from 1844 to 1848; the church was vacant from 1849 to 1853. Rev. A. J. Longbridge served the church a portion of the years 1854, 1855 and 1856; Rev. E. Eells from 1857—1859. From 1859 until 1877 it was vacated. Rev. J. D. Porter, Evangelist, labored here a portion of the years 1877, 1878 and 1879. In 1879 he died while in charge of this church.

Rev. S. F. Tenny preached here a few times during the present year. This is now one of my preaching points. San Augustine has never had a Presbyterian church building, and we are now trying to build a plain house of worship. About fifteen members belong to our church, only two of whom reside in town and they are ladies. In fact there was not even one male member when I came here, and now there are only two and they both live some distance from the church in the country.

What would our North Carolina friends say as to helping us in this matter? I find here some good old ladies that were raised within the bounds of Buffalo congregation, N. C. Would not that good people like to make the hearts of these good old ladies glad by sending some help in this matter?

But I started out to say something in regard to the general work in this section. My labors at present are confined to the counties of San Augustine, Shelby and Panola. In the two last named the people say that before I came among them they had never seen an Old School Presbyterian minister. Even now there are many counties in which there is no Presbyterian preaching at all. The work here is perhaps the hardest that is to be done anywhere, and requires men of great power of mind and of great physical powers as well; great prudence and inexhaustible energy. A minister here has to contend not against one error but against nearly every error, and many of them, too, that are clinging to men of brilliant intellects. Nevertheless, you can find some very pious persons here. The people are all kind, but as regards our Church they are not in an organized or working condition.

The work here, it seems to me, should be managed by our committee just as it is in foreign lands. I mean as respects the laborers here; the manner in which they are put into this field and the manner in which they should be supported. They should be paid a regular salary as is the man who goes to the foreign field, and what is collected should go into our treasury. When this is done the work will flourish. It is altogether desirable that our people and our committee will look at this important work in the true light.

Yours, D. A. MCRAE.

THE OLD PREACHER'S STORY.

This delightful novelty (by Rev. L. P. Bowen, published by Presbyterian Publishing Company, at $1 50 per copy) has fallen in our way. Were it advertised as it should be it would doubtless be widely known. A novelty—for it is a combination of most entertaining story-telling—of Presbyterian advocacy, and profitable spiritual instruction, taught by living impersonations. Few mere stories rivet the attention more closely; few excel it in evangelical suggestions for spiritual growth and the development of church life in the Sunday-school, prayer-meeting and sanctuary, and none compare with it in its bold and attractive advocacy of Presbyterianism and Calvinism. Its novel form will induce many unprejudiced minds to read and reform their views. The reader is brought in contact with many heresies of the day, as the following names will suggest: Elder Camel Baptow of the Ishmaelites, Darby Plym, Rev. Mrs. McManish, and Rev. Mark Anthony Love of the Universalists, as well as the "higher life" brethren, etc. The book is full of happy hints and hits so interwoven with the story that attention does not flag. The reader will not miss the allusion in the following sentences:

"Let us ignore old grudges."

"We are not conscious of a single grudge against a mother's son of you," said Phales.

"You must remember that you are seeking us in this conference, not we seeking you," said Lardner. "The offence is all on one side. You disowned us as a part of Christendom; you virtually unchurched us. We did not resent it; we let you enjoy your deliverances; we never retaliated. Now, when you come talking of friendly relations the thought is forced forward that in your former words and acts you were either right or wrong. If right then we are still unworthy of confidence, for we have not repented under your accusation. If wrong, it is the part of honest men to say so; with dishonest men we do not know how to confer." Again, "They ought not to be asked to humiliate themselves by marring the illustrious annals of heroic days."

"We have no assurance," said Lardner, smiling, "that you will not use your very first opportunity to make some more history after awhile."

These have always been our sentiments. A Church which professes to be too big and too proud to retract an acknowledged wrong, renounces the fundamental principles of Christianity, and may not be trusted.

In our judgment this "Presbyterian novel" will do good, and attract our young people more strongly to the Church of their fathers and of the martyrs. Its high tone and dramatic interest places it immeasurably above Edward Eggleston's trash. J. W. P.

CONGREGATIONAL MEETING.

At a meeting of the congregation of Moore's Creek Presbyterian church held at Colvin's Creek Academy, Aug. 15th 1880, Mr. James N. Henry was called to the chair, and Mr. A. M. Colvin elected secretary. After which, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

WHEREAS, The Rev. Kenneth McDonald, who has been serving our church as stated supply for the last two or three years, has been called, in the providence of God, to remove from our midst to labor in another field.

Resolved, That we deeply regret that, for the want of co-operation on the part of other churches, we cannot secure his continued service in our midst.

Resolved, That we take this occasion to express our high appreciation of his character as a man, and of his earnestness and efficiency as a minister of the gospel.

Resolved, That he has served this congregation; preaching the gospel faithfully, visiting his people and comforting the sick and afflicted. And we hold him in the highest esteem for his character, his talents, and his services. He has endeared himself to the hearts of this people, and our prayers and best wishes will follow him where he goes.

Resolved, As a further testimony of our regard and the high esteem in which he is held by us, that the proceedings of this meeting, together with the preamble and resolutions, be transcribed on our church book, and that a copy of the same be sent to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

JAMES N. HENRY, Chairman.

A. M. COLVIN, Secretary.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE HEIGHT OF ABSURDITY.

Church and Home:

Can anything be more absurd than the political economy that puts one dollar into the public treasury by licensing the making of criminals, and then spends ten for their prosecution and punishment? This is exactly what most of the American States are doing with the liquor traffic.

THE REASON WHY.

Appeal:

One of the common reasons why Christ is followed at a distance by so many of his disciples is the disregard of conscience in comparatively small matters. One need not strike a large nail in order to dull his sharpened tool; a small one is sufficient to destroy the edge. No saint becomes a villain at a single step; he begins the transformation by permitting himself to indulge in little sins, and these indulgences make him less able to withstand the greater temptations. A little sickness, neglected, has filled many a grave; a tiny insect has laid low many a majestic tree; a little spark is the beginning of every great conflagration.

A PAINFUL DARKNESS.

Religious Herald:

It is certainly a very sad result of theological training when a young tyro just from the mint expends himself largely in telling a surprised people what parts of the Bible are not inspired, and what is not proper preaching, and what is not the truth. Yet every now and then we have such a prodigy sent out among the churches, and he secures a wonderful following and for a time promises grand returns. The more he berates the old ministers, and ridicules the old ways, and disavows the old standards, the larger following he has, and the more wonderfully wise he seems to be to those who are attracted by such arts. But when the eloquence of tirade becomes stale, and there is a call for constructive force, suddenly the star falls and there is a painful darkness.

VALUE OF PUBLIC OPINION.

Methodist Advance:

To prevent crime the law must be executed. For law to be executed, public opinion must demand it. Therefore, the safety of life and property roots itself in a virtuous public opinion, which it is the bounden duty of the school, the pulpit and the press to foster.

PRUDENCE REQUIRED.

United Presbyterian:

No one in the Church ought to permit himself to be too tenacious about anything relating to its management. A fundamental matter may be fought for, but a circumstantial affair that has only a transient existence, and is not of much account at best, can be treated with a good deal of liberality. Many a good man has fretted himself about a point that did not matter a farthing whether it was maintained or laid aside. Whole churches also, have, through the unnecessary zeal of some pious member, been thrown into a fever and disturbance, and the life of their worship and work incalculably hindered. There is much to be gained by proper concession, even in things that have some importance, but when it comes to those that are not so, concession is the first duty. "Fidelity," as it is then sometimes called, is simply ignorant stupidity.

THE HOWE MEMORIAL FUND.

Last May the doors of the Columbia Theological Seminary were closed for an indefinite period. Of the two great reasons one was for the want of funds. The Alumni, at their meeting in Charleston, resolved to remedy this and to reopen their beloved institution by raising $38,000 to endow the chair of Biblical Literature. In honor of Dr. Howe, whose fiftieth year of service as Professor in the Seminary ends next January, this endowment is to be called the "Howe Memorial Fund."

The raising of this endowment has actually begun. The plan adopted consists of two parts: first, to ask each alumnus to raise a certain sum; secondly, to ask those who are friends of the Seminary to aid in this matter as much and as quickly as they can.

The first contribution was from a gentleman in a Northern State, who has often before shown himself to be a staunch friend of our Church, and who is a member of the Associate Reformed body. Hearing of the cause, he gave liberally, and at once, as the following extract from his letter will show: "About one hour ago I received yours of the 23d. I send my check for $100 to the fund, and regret that pecuniary difficulties prevent my doing more at this time."

A FEW PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. If a member of another Church delights to give $100 to reopen our Seminary, are there not members of our own Church who ought to be glad to do the same, or even more?

2. If one, not an Alumnus, is thus ready to respond to the needs of the Seminary, ought not the Alumni to be equally willing to respond to the cry of distress from their own Alma Mater?

3. If we admire and praise the promptness of our liberal friend, should not we be moved to give at once—and go to work at once to raise our appropriate part of this endowment?

The proverb, "He gives twice who gives quickly," applies in this case. So also the words of the wise man, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—M., in Southern Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The Presbytery of Roanoke will meet at Boydton on Wednesday, the 18th day of August, at 7 p. m. H. A. BROWN, S. C.

The 221st Session of Orange Presbytery will be held in Reidsville, N. C., on the first Wednesday of September, (first day), 1880 at 8 p. m.

F. H. JOHNSTON, Stated Clerk.

Delegates and visitors to Orange Presbytery at its next session, in Reidsville, will note the following: W. & W. R. R. instructs agents to sell round trip tickets at three cents per mile each way, to and from Goldsboro; R. & G. and R. & A. Air Line R. R. issue return tickets at three cents per mile round trip; A. & N. C. R. R., the same. Tickets good on these roads from August 30th to September 8th, inclusive.

J. W. P.

Written reports on the state of religion are not required at the fall meeting.

Churches reported delinquent at last meeting in payment of assessments, salaries, &c., are required to report in writing to the fall meeting what they have done to repair the failure.

The Richmond & Danville Railroad, with N. C. Division and Salem branch, will sell round trip tickets to delegates and visitors at six cents per mile—three cents each way. Tickets must be purchased on 30th and 31st of August and 1st of September, and will be good for ten days from date of sale. Tickets may be had on the R. & D. R. R. as far down as Smithville's Depot, Va. Close connections at Greensboro with all passenger trains on the N. C. R. R.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg will meet in Lincolnton on Wednesday, September 8, 1880, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Churches are advised of arrears for Presbyterial Fund, and are expected to pay their assessments in full before this meeting, or show cause of failure. R. Z. JOHNSTON, S. C.

The Staunton Vindicator states that Rev. Dr. C. R. Vaughn has been called to New Providence church, in Rockingham county, Virginia.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

From the Central Presbyterian we learn that Rev. R. R. Howison has been invited to supply the pulpits of Beulah, Salem and Bethlehem congregations, composing the Samuel Davies church, Hanover county, Va.

Rev. M. L. Lacy writes to the Central Presbyterian: "Greenbrier Presbytery met in Lewisburg on the evening of the 3d of August, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. D. S. Sydenstriker. There were present six ministers and six ruling elders. The object of the meeting was to examine and ordain Mr. Absalom Sydenstricker. Mr. S. passed all his parts of trial with great credit and was, on the morning of the 5th, duly ordained and set apart as an evangelist to labor in foreign lands. The services were of a deeply interesting character, and seemed greatly to impress those present. Mr. and Mrs. Sydenstricker expect to sail for China in a few weeks. They will doubtless be a great acquisition to the mission, and their going forth ought to be an event of great interest to the people of God in all this region. They, with Mrs. Raudolph and Mrs. Hall, make four representatives of our Presbytery in foreign lands."

A correspondent informs us that on the 5th inst. a series of special services, conducted by Rev. Dr. G. B. Strickler, closed at Mt. Zion church in Rockingham county, Va., in the bounds of the missionary field now in charge of Rev. A. H. Price. Great interest manifested, and steps have been taken looking to the organization of a church.—Central Presbyterian.

We are glad to learn that Dr. Grasty's congregation in Mexico have begun the building of a manse and will push it to completion. Many a congregation would find it economical to imitate this example.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

The Mecklenburg Bible Society held its annual meeting at Sardis church Wednesday. Rev. W. T. Waller of Charlotte preached and an address upon "The Verbal Inspiration of the Bible" was delivered by Prof. Lawrence of Biddle University. The election resulted in Gen. J. A. Young being chosen president, E. K. P. Osborne treasurer and Maj. S. W. Reid secretary.—Southern Home.

Items from Southwestern Presbyterian:

We have just learned from Rev. J. Woodbridge that in seeking the lost records of Mississippi Presbytery the papers of Dr. Chamberlain have been found, and are on their way to this country from Scotland, through the courtesy of Rev. W. R. Dick. They had been in the hands of the late Rev. William Riddle.

Our last information as to the condition of Dr. Robert Nall is less favorable. He was supposed to be improving. A letter from Versailles, Ky., informs us that the temporary improvement has been followed by a relapse, with an increase of fever and of pain. His friends are much concerned at his condition. His brethren throughout the Church will not withhold their sympathies and prayers.

Items from the Christian Observer:

Into Shady Grove Church, South Carolina, five members were recently admitted.

The Clinton Church (Laurens county), under the pastoral care of Rev. Wm. P. Jacobs, who has been its pastor for eighteen years, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary on the 28th of July. The church numbered, in 1864, forty-three members; it now numbers one hundred and fifty-three, and is self-supporting. A meeting has just closed in which twenty-two were added. On the afternoon of the 28th, the corner stone of "Faith Cottage," Thornwell Orphanage, was laid with religious services. The church is greatly refreshed and encouraged. Its Sabbath school is now the largest Presbyterian Sunday school in the State, except that of the Second church, Charleston, and yet Clinton has only three hundred and fifty white inhabitants—nearly all Presbyterians.

Rev. J. S. Arbuthnot, D. D., writes from Etta's Chapel, Rutherford county, Tenn., under date of August 2d: "We closed a meeting of ten days continuance at Etta's Chapel, about eight miles from Murfreesboro. The Lord was with us from the beginning of the meeting, and some fifteen or sixteen professed faith in Christ; eight of whom joined the Presbyterian church."

Rev. W. T. Howison writes: "Again it gives me pleasure to chronicle another very pleasant communion service. Carolina church is situated about seventeen miles west of Arkadelphia, (Ark.,) in a fertile country, and composed of sturdy North Carolinians. The services continued from Friday night through Tuesday night. Three young persons bordering on manhood were received on profession of faith—one on the Sabbath and two on Tuesday.

Twenty members have been received into the church at Murfreesboro, Tenn., since the spring meeting of Presbytery.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

On the 4th of August the Committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church on the Revision of the Form of Government and Book of Discipline, met at Long Branch to resume the work in which it has been engaged for several years. The committee is as follows: Rev. Dr. E. F. Hatfield, New York city; Rev. Dr. A. T. McGill, Princeton, N. J.; Rev. Dr. W. E. Moore, Columbus, Ohio; Rev. Dr. E. B. Craven, Newark, N. J.; Rev. F. L. Patton, Chicago, Ill.; Rev. Dr. N. West, Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. R. W. Patterson, Chicago, Ill.; Judge William Strong, Washington, D. C.; Judge Nixon, Trenton, N. J.; Judge S. M. Moore, Chicago, Ill.; Judge Breckinridge, St. Louis, Mo., and Judge Allison, Philadelphia.

The death of Rev. W. H. Dean is reported at Tucson, Arizona, whither he had gone to take charge of a Presbyterian church.

Mrs. George Brown of Baltimore has given a handsome sum to Princeton Theological Seminary, to be used in perfecting the drainage and other sanitary arrangements in connection with Brown Hall, which was erected several years ago by her munificence.—Presbyterian.

The Central church of Denver, Col., received, June 5th, 49 members, making an addition of 131 since Rev. H. C. Westwood, D. D., became pastor, about six months ago.—Baltimore Presbyterian.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

A correspondent of the Living Church, speaking of Rev. Samuel Nichols, who recently died at the age of 93, says he was probably the oldest presbyter in the Church—certainly there is but one older. When he was ordained he was the 387th clergyman ordained in this country, where now the ordinations are not far from 4,000. There were, when he entered the ministry, but seven bishops, and the last one consecrated was the 121st. The thirteen missionary jurisdictions and forty dioceses, now spread all over the land, numbered at that time seven.

The Episcopal Church reported the number of communicants in 1877 as 281,970; in 1878, 314,367; in 1879, 320,000, and in 1880, 322,713.

The Church Messenger announces that that journal has passed into the hands of its permanent editor and proprietor, Rev. Chas. J. Curtis. It says further that since the retirement of its former editor Mr. Armand DeR. Meares has in the main conducted the Messenger, and deserves thanks from all for his disinterested labors.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Peter Smith, a deacon of the Congregational Church, died lately, leaving $10,000 to Andover Seminary for the library. His gifts to Andover while alive probably reached fifty thousand dollars. Along with a few others he gave, not long since, $40,000 to endow the Principal's chair in Phillips' Academy.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

The Reformed Presbyterian Synod (Old School) reports 110 ministers and 118 congregations, 821 new members during the year, 1,087 Sunday school teachers, and 10,097 scholars. The contributions for the year were $180,577, being $17 76 per communicant. The pastors' salaries in 1865 averaged $576, in 1870 $1,046, in 1880 $9 67.

ASSOCIATE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. J. I. Bonner, editor of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian, published at Due West, and Professor in Erskine College, was some months ago quite ill and required travel. He writes to his paper: "For about three months I have been drinking mineral water, first at Glenn's, then at Cleaveland's and lastly at Catawba. By all of these waters I have been benefited. Digestion has been strengthened, the liver has been invigorated, and the whole system has been toned up, until I begin to feel like myself again. By the 1st of October I hope and expect to be able to enter fully upon the discharge of my usual duties in the college and on the paper. Thanks to a kind Providence and the mineral springs."

METHODIST PROTESTANT.

The Methodist Protestants are building a church in Henderson, N. C. A writer in the Central Protestant informs the readers of that paper that Mr. Wm. A. Harris has given a lot worth $500 and also $500 towards the building.

METHODIST.

The Tabernacle church, Kansas City, has been sold, and has fallen into the possession of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.—Presbyterian.

The Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, has in its German Conference 1,127 preachers and members and 859 scholars; in its Indian Conference, 5,723 preachers and members, besides 135 Echita Indians in North Carolina. It has in the province of Kiangsee, China, 5 missionaries, 8 native preachers, 2 women missionaries, 6 Bible women, 19 Sunday school teachers, 11 day school teachers, 97 members, 186 scholars in Sunday schools and 105 in day schools. In Central Mexico it has 30 stations, 14 preachers, 10 teachers, and 15 Sunday schools and 531 members. In the Mexican Border Mission (along the Rio Grande) it has 13 stations, 14 missionaries, 651 members (169 joined during the year), congregations of 4,800, 25 Sunday schools, with 472 scholars. In Brazil it has stations at Rio de Janeiro and Piracicaba, with 2 missionaries and 36 members.—Christian at Work.

BAPTIST.

From January 1, 1869, to January 1, 1880, the First Baptist Church of Rochester raised and expended more than $200,000. This is an average payment by the congregation of more than $18,000 per year, which is a record which churches in general will do well to emulate.—Christian Union.

The Baptists have completed the great Tabernacle and hotel at Point Chautauqua. Their location is on an elevated site at a point of the lake nearly opposite Fairpoint. In point of shade Fairpoint has the advantage, its whole area being covered with a dense growth of primeval forest trees. The accommodations at the Baptist place of gathering are more commodious than those at Fairpoint. The annual session of the Baptist National Union was held at Point Chautauqua last week.—Ib.

REFORMED GERMAN.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas G. Apple, President of the Franklin and Marshall College, and Professor of Church History and Exegesis in the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church, will read a paper before the Pan Presbyterian Council that meets in Philadelphia next month. The subject of Dr. Apple's paper will be "The Theology of the German Reformed Church."—Presbyterian

THE OLD PEAR TREE.

Mr. Editor: Doubtless you will be surprised, as well as many of your readers, to learn that there is a pear tree in the village of Huntersville, Mecklenburg county, N. C., which measures eight feet eight inches in circumference, six feet above the surface of the ground. This noted tree is now owned by one of our citizens, Mr. H. A. Hunter, who is now enjoying a rich harvest from it. Tradition says this tree sprung from a riding switch from the hand of an old lady, Mrs. Alexander Monteith, about the year 1800. On her return from a sick neighbor's house she brought this switch, and, after dismounting and before entering the house, she remarked to one of the family, "I have a pear switch, which I will stick here in the corner of the fence and probably, if it lives and does well, it may make a fruitful tree some day." If tradition be true, it has surely done its duty so far. How much longer it may continue to bear the writer is unable to say. It appears to be perfectly sound and in a growing condition. The pear is of medium size and, when fully matured, it has a delightful flavor. It seldom ever fails entirely, and some years has a very full crop. The owner says he has seen as high as thirty bushels on it at one time. This year it has about half a crop, very fine. The wood of this tree is very curly, equal to any maple I ever saw. The owner thinks it would make nice furniture, as the wood is very soft and easily worked. It cuts similar to cedar.

If any one can convince me that he can produce a larger, older or more prolific tree than this one, I wish he would send me his address, and I will express him a box of pears prepaid. Address OLD PEAR TREE, Huntersville, N. C.

CONSTIPATION has been called the father of disease, therefore it should not be regarded as a trifling ailment. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails. Take a half-tablespoonful of Simmons Liver Regulator after each meal, the bowels will be gently moved, as naturally as if no medicine had been taken. Regularity in taking the medicine daily will effect a permanent cure.

"Have used Simmons Liver Regulator for Constipation of the Bowels, caused by a temporary derangement of the Liver, for the last three or four years, and always when used according to directions, with decided benefit. I think it is a great medicine for the Derangement of the Liver; at least such has been my personal experience in the use of it.

CUT THIS OUT AND SAVE IT.

Those persons laboring under disease proceeding from vitiated humors in the blood; causing Ulcers, White Swellings, Coxalgia or Hip Joint Disease, and the class of diseases termed Scrofulous, proceeding from hereditary taints, where the bones are destroyed, defying the usual treatment of physicians, will procure Swaim's Panacea, they will find a remedy which has saved thousands of lives; and thoroughly tested by the late Professors Chapman, Dewees and Gibson of the old University of Pennsylvania; besides hundreds of medical men eminent in their profession, continues to be a "forlorn hope" to sufferers worthy of its fifty years' reputation.

Swaim's Panacea is imitated and a preparation sold for it by druggists with a name somewhat similar. Purchasers therefore must be careful and see they get that containing the recommendations of the distinguished professors alluded to. It is seldom advertised in our public papers.

At Milton, N. C., July 19, 1880, Mrs. M. A. HUNTINGTON, in the 81st year of her age.

She was for fifty years a truly consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, and was the oldest person in the community. She had been confined to her room for more than two years, unable to walk, yet she bore her confinement and suffering with great patience and cheerfulness, and seemed even to the last to exhibit that unselfish spirit that through life marked her character. Her end was perfect peace. D.

At the residence of her son, Mr. J. C. Wright, in Sampson county, on the 25th of July, Mrs. ELIZA WRIGHT, aged 72 years.

For forty-eight years Mrs. Wright has been a member of the church, and though being ten miles from the church of which she was a member, was always a regular and steady attendant on public worship. No ordinary sacrifice of personal convenience, prevented her from enjoying the privileges of the sanctuary.

Her private character was that of great natural amiability, and fine sense, adorned by earnest faith and warm charity. Though greatly afflicted for months past, her last thoughts were of the poor, and sick. Though herself needing the constant care of others, she was ever desiring to minister to the wants of the afflicted. She was one of those Christians whose death makes the world poorer, but whose example is true wealth to the Church. The only surviving daughter and two sons, taught by the example of a venerated mother, have long since consecrated their lives to the Saviour. And thus, though dead, the force of her Christian life will go down to the next generation. B. F. M.

Departed this life, near Black River Chapel, on the 18th of July, Mrs. MARGARET ELIZA McMILLAN, relict of the late Henry McMillan, in the 64th year of her age.

She was a consistent member of Black River chapel for years past. Truly a mother in Israel has passed away. On the holy Sabbath eve' her spirit, calm and peaceful, entered, as we verily believe, into her rest above. She exemplified the Christian character in going about doing good; again she fulfilled the Scriptures in "doing good to all and especially to them who are of the household of faith." No murmur fell from her lips during her sickness of three weeks or more. On one occasion she asked that we sing her favorite hymn, which begins—

"When languor and disease invade
This trembling house of clay,
'Tis sweet to look beyond my pain
And long to fly away."

Her voice, though weak, would at times during the singing of this hymn sound forth the sweet notes of praise.

She leaves five children and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. May the grace of God be sufficient for them as it was for her, and may He grant to each such a peaceful transit into their rest.
K. McD.

IN MEMORIAM.

At a called meeting of the Session of the Brandon Presbyterian church, held on the 30th day of July, 1880, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, We are called upon in the death of DR. HUGH C. McLAURIN, a most highly esteemed and dearly beloved member of this Session, to recognize, in a special manner, the solemn fact that there are forms of bereavement in this world which no argument can reach, except that derived from the sovereignty of God, and that it well becomes each of us to exclaim with the Psalmist: "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because Thou didst it;" yet, while in the spirit of Christian resignation we are constrained to say, "Not our will but Thine to be done," it is still our privilege to cherish as a rich heritage the many virtues and lovely traits of character in which he so adorned the doctrine of God our Saviour, that his life became a living epistle known and read of all men; therefore, be it

Resolved, 1. That while we fully recognize and bow with sacred deference to the supremacy of God's will, in this dispensation of his providence, it has nevertheless become our sad lot to mourn the loss of one who had endeared himself to us by every consideration that can secure, strengthen and beautify the bond of Christian fellowship on earth. As an associate, Dr. McLaurin was gentle, affectionate and sincere in all that he said or did. As a counsellor, he was practical and wise. His judgment was rarely or never at fault. With the afflicted and distressed his sympathy was felt to be a tender solicitude, in the exercise of which he forgot himself for the good of others. As a supporter of the Gospel, he was systematic and liberal. He regarded it as both a sacred duty and a disciple's privilege to contribute of his means for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. As a ruling elder, he was conservative in all his views of Church polity, and active and faithful in the performance of his ecclesiastical duties.

Resolved, 2. That while we, as members of the Session, feel deeply our loss, we cannot be unmindful of the congregation to whom our brother, in his upright walk, always appeared as a shining light. And knowing that their hearts are smitten with sorrow, we can only ask them to unite with us in cherishing his good name, and in cultivating those Christian graces which so signally adorned his life to its closing day. For in him we have all had an exemplification of the truth of Scripture as to the blessed influences of a spotless reputation, and "he being dead, yet speaketh."

Resolved, 3. That we would consider these resolutions of condolence as incomplete did we not embrace in our kindest remembrance not only the members of this congregation but the whole community. As a prominent citizen, a skillful physician, a kind neighbor and a devoted friend, he held, through a long life of active benevolence, the good-will and confidence of all classes and conditions of men. As love to God and man was the ruling motive of this brother's life, so we would embrace within the scope of our sympathy all who loved him.

Resolved, 4. That the Session, in behalf of themselves, and the congregation uniting, extend to the bereaved family of our deceased brother their deepest sympathy and tender regard in this their severe affliction, praying that the sustaining and comforting influences of God's grace be multiplied unto each of them through His great mercy, bringing consolation and peace to their sorrowing hearts. So that they may be enabled to say, with sweet resignation: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors."

Resolved, 5. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased, that they be spread upon the sessional records of the church, and that they also be read from the pulpit on the first day of public worship.

G. S. ROUDEBUSH, Moderator.
P. FAIRLY, Clerk of Session.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Rights of Woman.

The rights of woman, what are they?
The right to labor, love and pray,
The right to weep when others weep,
The right to wake when others sleep.

The right to dry the fallen tear,
The right to quell the rising fear;
The right to smooth the brow of care,
And whisper comfort to despair.

The right to watch the parting breath,
To soothe and cheer the bed of death;
The right when earthly hopes all fail,
To point to that within the veil.

The right the wanderer to reclaim,
And win the lost from paths of shame;
The right to comfort and to bless
The widow and the fatherless.

The right the little ones to guide,
In simple faith to Him who died;
With earnest love and gentle praise,
To bless and cheer their youthful days.

The right to live for those we love,
The right to die that love to prove;
The right to brighten earthly homes,
With pleasant smiles and gentle tones.

"Unto one of the Least."

BY MRS. MARY BRADLEY.

"Would you mind doing me a favor, Miss Alice?"

"Not if I can, Maggie; what is it?"

"If you'd just see to the door while I'm out, I could run over and help me mother a bit wi' the children. There's cold meat for the dinner, and I'd be back in time to cook the vegetables."

"Your little brothers and sisters have got the measles, haven't they?" asked Alice.

"Yes, miss, all four of them; an' me mother is worn out with the nursing."

"I'll mind the door," said Alice.

The Irish girl, who did general house-work for the Thornburn family, went off thankfully; and Alice, a school-girl of thirteen, sat down to a quiet afternoon with her crotchet-work. She was making a mouchoir case for her elder sister, Clara; and as Clara and her mamma were spending the day in New York, Alice thought she had an excellent opportunity to finish it without being interrupted. She did not think that "minding the door" for Maggie would hinder her plans; but she had hardly seated herself to her work before the bell rang, and a little ragged boy came to beg for cold pieces. Alice gave him some bread, some cold potatoes which she found upon a plate in the kitchen, and a very nice sugar coated cooky.

"Poor little monkey! It was worth while taking the trouble to make him so happy," she thought, and sat down to her work again in a very pleasant humor. But hardly had she done three stitches before the bell rang a second time; and there were two more little ragged boys at the basement door, with pitiful faces and whining voices: "Please, miss, give us somethin' to eat. We're awful hungry!"

Alice had a suspicion that the cooky given to the first boy was the reason why the others were "awful hungry." But the good naturedly supplied their wants; gave each of them a slice of bread and a cooky, and climbed the stairs a third time to attempt her work. She crocheted three rows, a white one, a blue one, and another white one, before she was interrupted again. Now it was the gong at the upper hall door that sounded, and two very much dressed young ladies inquired for Miss Thorburn.

"My sister is not at home," said Alice.

"Oh, are you Miss Thorburn's sister? Please tell her that we are sorry we missed seeing her," said one of them, handing the little girl her card. And then the two rustled off with a great flutter of fringes and flounces, and Alice went back to the parlor.

"Oh dear, there's that basement bell again! How many more times will I have to answer it, I wonder? This is more than I bargained for, a great deal!"

She went down stairs with an impatient feeling that was not relieved by the sight of a rough looking man, with potatoes in his hand.

"Pitatics? apples? oranges? Here's yer fine Havannies, two shill'n a dozen!" he shouted at her.

"I don't want any. We never buy things from the street wagons," answered Alice sharply, shutting the door in his face. But by the time she had reached the parlor again she was sorry for her rudeness. "The poor man wants to sell his things, I suppose," she thought. "But what a nuisance to have to go to the door so often! I wonder if it keeps on like this all day?"

Ting-a-ling as if in answer to her question, there was the bell again! A Jew peddler, this time, with brass jewelry to sell; and five minutes later, an old woman with matches and shoe-laces; ten minutes afterwards, a man with charlotte russe in a tin box: "Very nice, miss; fresh this afternoon; only five cents apiece!" And within the next half-hour the postman, three beggars, one after the other, a boy with fresh eggs, and a man that wanted to buy rags!

I am afraid Alice lost her temper more than once that afternoon. Her crotchet-work got on but slowly, as one may guess, and her feet were weary with much running up and down stairs. Over and over again she exclaims impatiently, "How long Maggie stays away!" Papa would be at home to his dinner presently, and mamma and Clara; and there were the vegetables uncooked, the table not laid, nothing done at all, and Maggie still away!

"Something must have happened," thought Alice. "Perhaps one of the children is very ill, or dead." And with that fear came a quick feeling of shame. "Oh, how cross, how selfish I have been! Poor Maggie has to work so hard, and here am I complaining because I have given her a chance to help her mother a little. What if the bell did keep ringing? Maggie has to answer it, and do her work all the same. And now she'll get home all tried out and worried, and perhaps papa will scold at having to wait for his dinner. I'll go and cook those vegetables myself."

Alice rolled up her work and put it away with quick fingers. Hurrying out to the kitchen, she brightened the fire, and put on the potatoes and the asparagus to boil; then she set the table, and got the bread, the butter, the pickles, the cheese, and all the other little accessories, in readiness. By the time her father came in there was a very fair prospect for the usual, orderly dinner at the usual hour; and by the time poor Maggie came in, flurried, out of breath, and frightened at being so late every thing was ready, all her work done for her, and the vegetables only waiting to be "dished."

"O Miss Alice, how good you are!" she cried, gratefully. "And didn't you think it was mean of me to stay so? But I couldn't help it; indeed I couldn't. Little Katie was took with a spasm, an' me mother was almost out of her sinses. I couldn't leave her at all, at all, till the child was a bit better."

"I'm glad you didn't, answered Alice promptly. "And you needn't have hurried yourself so much, anyhow. I got on very well without you, now didn't I?"

"Sure, and you did! But it isn't every young lady would have had the since itself, let alone the kind heart," was Maggie's answer. "I'll not forgit you for this, Miss Alice."

Alice went up stairs to wash her face, which [illegible] flushed, and brush her hair for din[ner]. [On] her looking-glass hung a little text-[book whose] leaves that turned over backward, [with a] new verse for each day. The one [that met] her eyes just now was this: "Inasmuch [as ye have] done it unto one of the least of [these, ye] have done it unto me."

Alice had her reward.

Ten-Minute Sermons to Children.

"A tree planted by the waters."—Jer. xvii: 8.

There is a great deal said about trees in the Bible—trees of knowledge, life, righteousness, fruitfulness and unfruitfulness. I shall take the tree for my subject. St. Paul tells the Romans that before they were grafted into the Christian Church they were wild olive trees. Now every boy who has lived in the country knows that the fruit of a wild apple or cherry or plum tree is not good for much, and tastes very sour and puckery. Children who are allowed to run wild, and never go to church or school, and grow up without learning anything, are very likely to bring forth only "evil fruit."

In all matters it is very important to start right. If you should go into a nursery of young trees and tie a stone to the top of one of the saplings so as to bend it over in a curve, and leave it so for two or three years, you could never straighten it again. When I was ten years old I was sent away to a boarding school, and the day before I left home I planted two horse chestnuts in my father's garden, that I might have something to remember the time by. On my return home I found them both growing very finely; but one spring day, when they were about a foot high, somebody knocked off the rich, thick bud that grew just on the end of the stalk. The little tree was not killed, but it received a shock from which it never recovered. Fifty years ago or more, when they were quite small, these two horse-chestnuts were transplanted into the street, where they still stand, having grown, of course, into gigantic trees; but one of them is much more beautiful and shapely than the other—the poor unfortunate who lost his top-bud when he was young continues to this day to show the effects of that calamity. If you get a bad twist, or lose any of the advantages that are offered you, if you acquire any ugly habit while you are young, the bad effect may cling to you as long as you live.

A tree is sometimes very much benefitted by pruning, especially when it is young. I once saw the Rev. Dr. Wayland—of whom you may have heard, as he was one of the great men of the age, and with a great deal of reserve power—directing a working man who was digging away a portion of the rich soil around the roots of some peach trees and filling in with hard-coal ashes, which are not very nourishing. I asked him what he was doing that for, and he said that the trees were growing to fast, and everything was running to wood and leaves, so that he could get very little fruit. God sometimes treats his children in a similar way, and feeds them with the ashes of affliction to keep down the rank growth. Christ tells us how the faithful husbandman purges, or prunes, the branches that they may bring forth more fruit. You may wonder that you are so often thwarted in your plans, called to endure so much hard discipline, disappointed in your highest hopes; but this is just what you need in order that the fiber of your soul may be made strong. Children who have the easiest time do not always make the best men. There are none who do not need some pruning. It may hurt when you feel the knife cut, but by and by you will be thankful for that which makes you ache now.

And now let us consider some of the ways in which trees are liable to be injured or destroyed. Our texts alludes to a "tree planted by the waters." In that part of the world where the prophet Jeremiah lived there was not the same amount of steady rain that we enjoy, and trees were likely to thrive best which grew near some water-course. In the absence of water they were sure to die. Nothing can live without it. The desert is a desert simply for want of water. Let the clouds begin to distil upon the earth, and after awhile the wilderness would be turned into a garden. If you children would thrive, you must drink of "the water of life" freely. And where that water is to be found you all know: "If any man thirst," says the Saviour, "let him come unto me and drink."

Many years ago I had a number of peach trees, trained against a wall, which were very thriving and bore an abundance of delicious fruit. But one summer the leaves began to curl up and wither, and the peaches before they were half ripe shriveled and fell to the ground. It was very difficult to account for this sudden blight—the soil was good, the season favorable, and there was no mark of disease on the surface of the trees. But digging down a little below the ground we found the root perforated with a small hole, and running a wire a foot or so up into the tree we drew out what is called a borer, a little white worm about an inch long, with a sort of hard, black auger in its head, by means of which he had worked his way into the very heart of the tree and sapped its life at the fountain head. There was no cure for this, and the trees were cut down, fit only to be burned. Do you not see the application? There works its way into your heart some vile worm, some ugly thought, some low desire, and infects with its poison the very center of your being. "It is nothing but a thought," you say to yourself, "and cannot do much harm. I can dismiss it from my mind whenever I please. I can say just how far it shall go and then stop it." My young friend, you might have kept it out of your soul if you had chosen to do so, but once in it is not for you to say what it shall do. Remember this: all the crime and all the sin that exists in the world began with a bad thought. If that had been repelled in the beginning these bad men would not have been groaning in prison, or swinging on a scaffold, or gradually dying of inward corruption.

But, some of you may ask, is there no way of reviving a tree that has begun to decay, and bringing the soundness back to it again? In many cases there is, and I trust that none of you have got beyond the point of redemption. One of the strangest devices for doing this that I ever heard of was in the case of a tree the bark of which was decaying all around the lower part of the trunk, while at the same time the roots below were sending up about the stump long, vigorous suckers, as they are often called. The owner of the tree, which was a valuable one, thought he would try the experiment of grafting the tops of these suckers into the trunk a little above the decayed part; and to his gratification, they took firm hold and increased in size until at last they were able to supply the tree with the sap which it needed after the original source of supply was cut off. This is what might be called a vicarious operation; the definition of "vicarious" being "acting in place of another." Now, what you are unable to do yourself may be done for you by another. Of course you cannot atone for your own sin, neither can you heal your own soul of its wounds, but you can put yourself into the hands of One who will do it for you. If you are really sorry for your sin, and are ready to repent—or turn square round, which is what the word means—and believe, that is, trust, then Christ will take you into his hands, and save, and sanctify, and bless you.—Rt. Rev. Thomas M. Clark, in Christian Union.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Alexander Pope.

I fancy that under Pope's elaborate masks of hypocrisy and mystification there was a heart always abnormally sensitive. Unfortunately, it was as capable of bitter resentment as of warm affection, and was always liable to be misled by the suggestions of his strangely irritable vanity. And this seems to me to give the true key to Pope's poetical as well as to his personal characteristics. To explain either, we must remember that he was a man of impulses; at one instant a mere incarnate thrill of gratitude or generosity, and in the next of spite or jealousy. A spasm of wounded vanity would make him, for the time, as mean and selfish as other men are made by a frenzy of bodily fear. He would instinctively snatch at a lie even when a moment's reflection would have shown that the plain truth would be more convenient, and, therefore, he had to accumulate lie upon lie, each intended to patch up some previous blunder. Though normally the poet of reason, he was the antithesis of the man who is reasonable in the highest sense; who is truthful in word and deed because his conduct is regulated by harmonious and invariable principles. Pope was governed by the instantaneous feeling. His emotion came in sudden jets and gushes, instead of a continuous stream. The same peculiarity deprives his poetry of continuous harmony or profound unity of conception. His lively sense of form and proportion enables him indeed to fill up a simple framework (generally of borrowed design) with an eye to general effect, as in the "Rape of the Lock" or the first "Dunciad." But even there his flight is short; and when a poem should be governed by the evolution of some profound principle or complex mood of sentiment, he becomes incoherent and perplexed. But on the other hand he can perceive admirably all that can be seen at a glance from a single point of view. Though he could not be continuous he could return again and again to the same point; he could polish, correct, eliminate superfluities, and compress his meaning more and more closely, till he has constructed short passages of imperishable excellence. * * The standard of good writing always implicitly present to his mind is the fitness of his poetry to pass muster when shown by Gay to his duchess, or read after dinner by a party composed of Bolingbroke, and Congreve. That imaginary audience is always looking over his shoulder, applauding a good hit, chuckling over allusions to the last bit of scandal, and ridiculing any extravagance tending to romance or sentimentalism * * It is only too easy to expose their shallowness, and therefore, to overlook what was genuine in their feelings. After all, Pope's eminent friends were no mere tailor's blocks for the display of laced coats. Swift and Bolingbroke were not enthusiasts nor philosophers, but certainly they were no fools. They liked in the first place thorough polish. They could appreciate a perfectly turned phrase, an epigram which concentrated into a couplet a volume of quick observations, a smart saying from Rochefoucauld or La Bruyere which gave an edge to worldly wisdom; a really brilliant utterance of one of those maxims, half true and not over-profound, but still presenting one aspect of life as they saw it, which have since grown rather threadbare.—Leslie Stephen.

Talking About Jesus.

Old Dr. Wisner, of Ithaca, used to tell of a little girl who kept coming to him, while superintendent of a Sabbath school, with a request to be transferred to a neighboring class. For a time she would not give her reason.

"Is not your teacher kind?"

"Yes, very."

"Does she not know the lesson, and tell you a great many good things?"

"Oh, yes."

"Does she make the lesson interesting?"

"Yes, we all like to hear her talk, but—"

"But what?"

"Well, sir, I can't help hearing what Miss ——, the teacher of the next class, says to her scholars; and I find myself listening to her instead of our teacher."

"What is that?"

"Oh, sir, she is all the time talking to them about Jesus, and it sounds so good and sweet. My teacher scarcely ever talks to us about Jesus."

The Livadia.

The Livadia, the new Russian imperial yacht, was launched from the building yard of Messrs. John Elder & Co., Govan, near Glasgow, on July 7.

She is the latest development of ideas that may fairly be said to be revolutionary and subversive of all established principles of shipbuilding, and of which the earlier specimens are found only in the circular ironclads of Admiral Popoff. Speaking roughly, the Livadia must be imagined as a broad and shallow oval, half submerged, and carrying on its surface extensive lofty and sumptuous saloons and other apartments. It resembles a vessel of ordinary kind, reposing upon a white air cushion. Its principal dimensions are: Length, 260 feet; breadth, 150 feet; depth, 50 feet; tonnage, 11,609; and displacement, 4,000.

The propelling power consists of three sets of engines, each having three cylinders, the diameters of which are: for the high pressure, 60 inches, and for the low pressure, 78 inches, with a stroke of 3 feet 3 inches. The propellers themselves are of manganese bronze, thus securing strength and lightness; and, with the view of obtaining the greatest possible power, steel has been largely used in the construction of the engines and boilers, which will be the most powerful in the world for their weight. The indicated horse power is 10,500, and the vessel is expected to make 14 knots an hour. The launch of the Livadia was the one great event at Glasgow.—Scientific American.

A Hint for the Girls.

A wood engraver, being asked why he did not employ women, replied, "I have employed women very often, and I wish I could feel more encouraged. But the truth is, that when a young man comes to me and begins his work, he feels that it is his life's business. He is to cut his fortune out of the little blocks before him. Wife, family, home, happiness, are all to be carved out by his own hand, and he settles steadily and earnestly to his labor, determined to master it, and with every incitement spurring him on. He cannot marry until he knows his trade. It is exactly the other way with the girl. She may be as poor as the boy, and as wholly dependent upon herself for a living, but she feels that she will probably marry by and by, and then she must give up wood engraving. So she goes on listlessly; she has no ambition to excel; she does not feel that all her happiness depends on it. She will marry and then her husband's wages will support her. She may not say so, but she thinks so, and it spoils her work."

SECULAR NEWS.

The damage done to crops by the recent rains and the loss by washing away of bridges, mills, &c., has been very heavy. The east and centre of the State have probably suffered most, but the west has not escaped. A correspondent writing to the Raleigh Observer from Beaufort county says: "We are having frequent and heavy rains, which are very damaging to the cotton crop. A week ago this crop was regarded as the most promising ever seen in the eastern counties, but the prospect, so cheering to our farmers, is now in great peril. Another week of rain and the crop will be ruined." The Concord Sun says: The low lands are now one sea of water. Travel to town has almost entirely been cut off. No mail was received from Mt. Pleasant Thursday, as the carrier could not get across the streams. From all directions we hear of fences leaving their owners and corn fields being washed out. The rain is general and is doing considerable damage throughout the country.

Dr. Robt. P. Reinhardt, of Catawba county, raised this year 1,600 bushels of good wheat and 500 bushels oats. To every acre sown to oats he averaged 37½ bushels.—Lincolnton Progress.

The two houses of W. S. Moore and Houston Brothers, bought during the past year 1879-'80, fur season, the enormous amount of 274,851 rabbit skins, 1,022 coons, 7,566 opossums, 59 cats, 280 fox, 31 skunks, 5 beavers, 1,826 minks, 28 otters, 8,114 musk rats, costing $11,064.—Greensboro, (N. C.) Beacon.

AN ITEM OF APPROPRIATION.

In telling of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the "Republican," N. Y., says in its Washington Items: "It seems to be generally understood that an especial appropriation will be made for the purchase, for the use of the members of the Senate and House, Warner's Safe Pills and Warner's Safe Bitters."

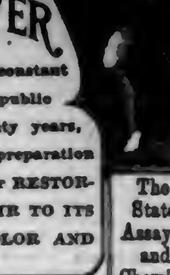
HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

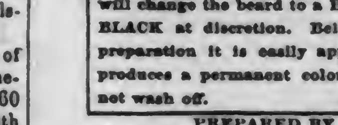


Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, sweet and healthy.

The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.



BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS will change the beard to a BROWN or BLACK at discretion. Being in one preparation it is easily applied, and produces a permanent color that will not wash off.

Young's Analytical

Bible Concordance.

A Concordance. A Greek and Hebrew Lexicon. A Scriptural Gazetteer. 30,000 various New Testament Readings, 311,000 References—118,000 beyond Cruden.

THIS is perhaps the most important work in religious literature which the present century has produced. Being designed for the simplest reader of the English Bible, though greatly helpful to scholars of the most profound learning, it is, of course, important that its cost shall be brought within reach of those of most limited means. The reception already given to our prospectus assures us that the superlative merits of the work are appreciated by students of the Word of God, and that we may confidently anticipate an extremely large sale. We have therefore decided to make the price, until further notice, lower than any work of equal magnitude and value which has ever before been published.

Price, Complete, $1.50 and upwards, in various styles. Full particulars sent free on request.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"It fills a place which no other work in the English language even aspires to fill."—The Evangelist, January, 1880.

"Bible students of all classes will find it saves them much labor."—Illustrated Missionary News, November, 1879.

"Any intelligent student of the Scriptures may use it with great advantage without the slightest acquaintance with either Hebrew or Greek."—The Lay Preacher, January, 1880.

"No minister's library should be without a copy.—London Weekly Review, December 13th, 1879.

"This is the best concordance we know."—Belfast Witness, December 19th, 1879.

"There is no other to be compared with it."—The Methodist, November 28th, 1879.

"To ministers it will be simply invaluable."—The Primitive Methodist, October 30th, 1879.

"Inestimable in its worth."—The Baptist Magazine, November, 1879.

"Of immense value to independent students of the Word of God."—The Presbyterian Monthly, November, 1879.

PERFECTLY SAFE IN THE MOST INEXPERIENCED HANDS!

For Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cramps, Cholera,
AND ALL THOSE NUMEROUS TROUBLES OF THE STOMACH AND BOWELS
SO PREVALENT AT THIS SEASON,

No Remedy known to the Medical Profession has been in use so long and with such uniformly satisfactory results as

PERRY DAVIS'
VEGETABLE
PAIN KILLER

It has been used with such wonderful success in all parts of the world in the treatment of these difficulties, that it has come to be considered

AN UNFAILING CURE FOR ALL SUMMER COMPLAINTS

and such it really is when taken in time and according to the very plain directions inclosing each bottle.

In such diseases, the attack is usually sudden and frequently very acute; but with a safe remedy at hand for immediate use, there is seldom danger of the fatal result which so often follows a few days' neglect.

The inclination to wait and see if the morrow does not bring a better feeling, not infrequently occasions a vast amount of needless suffering, and sometimes costs a life. A timely dose of Pain Killer will almost invariably save both, and with them the attendant doctor's fee.

It has stood the test of forty years' constant use in all countries and climates, and is perfectly safe in any person's hands.

It is recommended by Physicians, Nurses in Hospitals, and persons of all classes and professions who have had opportunity for observing the wonderful results which have always followed its use.

THE BEST EVIDENCE:

I have long used the medicine known as PERRY DAVIS' VEGETABLE PAIN KILLER in my family and would not on any account be without it. [illegible]
F. H. [illegible], Galena, Illinois.

Messrs. PERRY DAVIS & SON:
I know you need no testimonial to convince you that your medicine is all that you claim for it, but I cannot restrain the impulse to communicate to you the fact that in my family it has truly done wonders. I administer it to my children (one eighteen months, and the other three years old) with perfect success. It regulates their bowels, and stops all diarrhœa. Myself and wife resort to it in all cases, both for internal and external use. I've used it in my family for five years, and will not be without it. Feeling myself under much obligation to you, in many times being relieved from pain, I am very truly yours,
L. F. MOORE, Bangall, Dutchess Co., New York.

No family can afford to be without it, and its price brings it within the reach of all. The use of one bottle will go further to convince you of its merits than columns of newspaper advertising. Try it, and you will never do without it.

Price 25c. 50c. and $1.00 per bottle. You can obtain it at any drug-store or from

MORALITY AND RELIGION.

Among men there are different classes of persons, resulting from differences in original or acquired abilities, social position, influence, attainments, affluence and power; even as there are various religious denominations resulting from different interpretations of the Scriptures. No such earthly distiuctions, however, are recognized by the omniscient Jehovah, and in the grand final assize all men will be regarded and treated as religions or irreligious, believers or unbelievers. It is absolutely impossible, from the nature of the case and from Scriptnre, for a moral being to be neither holy nor siuful. There is no neutral ground between these two states. The line of demarcation between virtne and vice in God's moral government is distiuctly drawn and although it often transcends the power of finite faculties to perceive it, still it is clearly seen by the uncreated mind.

But if all men are good or bad they are not equally good or bad. There are innumerable gradations, both in virtne and vice, in faith and unbelief. Certainly, faithful Abraham could not be classed with donbtful Thomas; nor the thief on the cross with Paul. Nor would we place one matnre in every kind and degree of vice in the same category with the strictly moral man. Bnt however near the beautiful moralist, either in or ont of the church, may approach trne Christianity in appearance, still he is "in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniqnity," and in these times of latitudinarian tendencies and superficial religions views, it is well to disturb if possible his carnal security, by the application of the infallible tests of God's Word. And in so doing we must not contemplate so much his external actions as his interual principles. Many are apparently very religions; so were the Pharisees of old. They, thinking themselves more holy than others, separated themselves (as their name implies), and especially contemned sinners and publicans. They paraded their good works before men, prayed long prayers, fasted often, contribnted large amounts ostentatiously and paid the tenth of all they possessed; and yet Christ says, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." The young rnler who went to Jesns to inquire what he must do to inherit eternal life doubtless expected to be commended for his unusual moral attainments by the divine Teacher. He said he had kept the commandments from his youth. Jesns beholding him, loved him; but the Searcher of hearts scanned his soul and found genuine spiritnality absent, for when he was told to go and sell all he had he had went away sorrowful. He could not endure the test; he loved his money more than Christ. He was a beautiful corpse—a whited sepulcher.

Thus it is with numbers in modern times. They are intellectual, courteous, amiable, honest, truthful, kind, generous, philanthropic and even conscientious, and they constantly manifest laudable dispositions in divers ways. They have what the ancients called the cardinal virtues—prudence, justice, temperance and fortitnde—and think these qualities necessarily make them religions. They perform with scrnpnlous care many of the social and civil duties of life, attend church, listen attentively, read their Bibles, support Christ's cause, and are guilty of no flagrant crimes. Such persons deserve high commendation; but we are compelled to affirm that they may do these things, and exercise these dispositions, and still be the enemies of God: for they may be actuated by sinister motives, and God judges and rewards or pnnishes actions in accordance with the motives which prompted them. The motive may be desire for applause or desire to remain or become respectable, or it may be the best policy to act thus, or they may be simply acting out their constitution. For, if the Fall did impair, it did not annihilate our powers. A great many marks of pristine sublimity remain. The soul still exercises natural affections; the will is in bondage only in spiritual concerns; the conscience approves of virtnous and disapproves of vicious conduct; reason, too, has survived the shock, and so proud is she that she often arrogates to herself the prerogatives of Deity and scorns other light to guide her through this wilderness of death. Moral and religious men have so far a community of attributes and in moral men constitutional loveliness may be much greater than in religious men. Bnt moralists may possess all these natural powers, and still all their states of heart, thonghts, words and actions be abominable in God's sight.

What, then, is the great distinction between morality and religion? The answer is: Christian love. The essence of religion, like the essence of its Author, is love, while the essence of morality is selfishness. Supreme love to God and love to our fellowmen as ourselves are the two pillars on which Christianity rests. The ethical systems of Confncius, Socrates, Zorosster, Aristotle and Seneca were utterly destitute of this Bible principle. Genuine Christian love is the all-pervading, all-regulating principle in the Christian heart. It is a spotless flower, planted and cultivated by the divine Hand, which sheds its fragrance through the garden of the soul. It colors the streams of thought, word and deed, which flow from the fonntain of our being. It sees and delights in God; in the beauties of nature; the mysteries of providence, and the unparalleled glories of redemption. It assimilates its possessor to the greatest and best Being in the universe. By love to Christ the Christian is actnated to consecrate his talents, time, means, influence, energies, and even his life, to His service. The love of which we speak is long-suffering and kind; does not envy; rejoices in the truth; thinks no evil; bears, believes, hopes and endnres all things; is disinterested and humble, and is greater than hope and faith. It moves Christians to offer their bodies as "living sacrifices" to Christ, that they may embrace His declarative glory; it harmonizes all the faculties of the soul, imparts additional beauty and loveliness to constitutional graces, and more than any other celestial gift prepares the heart for a heaven of pnre and endless love. For love to Christ Christian ministers preach, parents teach, martyrs burn, confessors suffer, missionaries toil, and all His faithful followers unite in their efforts to usher in millennium glory. Of this mighty power in the soul, which thus manifests itself, the moralist, by experience, knows nothing. He makes all the lines of action terminate in self. Religion is unselfish; morality, selfish. Religion is humble; morality, proud. Religion exalts grace; morality, works. The system of the moralist is, therefore, cold, narrow and inadequate. It is to be feared that it has many adherents. Let Christians, however, exemplify by holy lives the truth of the golden words, "For the love of Christ (Christ's love to us) constraineth us; because we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again."

THE FALSE THEORIES OF GEOLOGISTS.

"Calvin" furnishes the following to the Presbyterian:

Professor Andrews, of Chicago, a gentleman whose rare scientific attainments are acknowledged by every one capable of appreciating them, and whose authority in matters of science cannot be successfully questioned, recently delivered at Lake Bluff an interesting lecture on "The Age of the World and of Man." A short but carefully prepared abstract of this lecture was published in the Chicago Times. I have studied this abstract in the hope that I could condense it and still present its interesting salient points to your readers in my regular "Notes." Finding this a work of great difficulty I send the abstract as it was published, believing it will prove interesting to hundreds of your subscribers. After reading it they will probably have no high opinion of the assumptions of geologists, and will be reminded of the recent assertion by Professor Tyndall, that "without verification a theoretical conception is a mere figment of the intellect." How many "mere figments of the intellect" there are in the self-styled science of the present! Professor Andrews has diminished the number. But here's the abstract aforesaid:

"The age of man is not accurately known, but it can be approximately determined. Unfortunately, the study of this problem has not always been pursued with candor. A considerable number of men have discussed it in a spirit which showed no obvious intent to stretch the time to its utmost possibility. They have quoted with great admiration and approval in one and the same book calculations which contradict each other by millions of years, most of which must of necessity be false, and had no common merit but that of being longer than Archbishop Usher's six thousand years. It was painfully evident that they wrote under a strong bias, and not a desire for truth. In science one error is as bad as another, but in these men's books no calculation is bad if it only tells against the Bible. Their maxim seems to be 'Any thing to beat Moses.'

"A few samples of the scientific errors promulgated by such high authority as Sir Charles Lyell and Sir John Lubbock may illustrate this straining after a prodigious human antiquity. In the valley of the Somme, in France, a bed of peat is found overlying a bed of gravel. The peat contains Roman remains at various depths, and down below in the gravel are the flint implements and bones of the savages who fished in the Somme before the peat began to grow. M. Bnoher de Perthes, quoted and indorsed by Lyell, Lubbock and others, concluded that the peat grew about a foot in a thousand years, and as it was about thirty feet deep it must have required thirty thousand years to form the bed. The folly of this calculation is shown by the fact that Roman coins and implements have been found far down in the peat, and from the very bottom of the bed was exhumed a boat loaded with Roman bricks. These calculators estimated that the gravel below the peat required two hundred thousand years to produce it. The speaker found places in these gravel beds where the accretion had been so rapid that blocks of ice, four feet in diameter, have been covered by the deposit before they had time to melt, and by their subsequent liquidation and disappearance caused the overlaying strata to drop in and fill the cavity. These and other decisive phenomena showed that great floods had formerly swept down the valley, piling up banks of gravel with greaty rapidity, and that no proof of great antiquity existed for the relics found among the pebles, Mr. Taylor subsequently surveyed the valley with the help of French engineers, and came to similar conclusions. Another singular blunder occurred in Switzerland, which was eagerly indorsed all over Europe, until a mathematical error in the calculation was exposed by the speaker. The torrent of the Tiniere brought down a steep gulch of the mountain a certain amount of gravel every year, and deposited it in the form of a half-cone on the flat at the base of the cliff. A railway having been cut through the cone it was found that there were Roman remains in a stratum four feet below the surface. Dividing the depth of four feet by the number of years back to Roman times Professor Morlot thought he had a measure of the rate of deposit, and applying it to the height of the cone he estimated its age at ten thousand years.

"The error was this:—In conical deposits the superficial annual layers are the thinnest, hence to apply the scale from them to the thicker ones below is a mathematical blunder. Correcting this mistake the cone was found to be only thirty-five hundred years old."

ROME AND THE PRIESTHOOD.

Rev. Dr. T. D. Witherspoon writes to the Central Presbyterian:

PETERSBURG, VA., Aug. 10th, '80.

Messrs. Editors:—I announced last week my purpose to discard "Rnfus" as an exponent of Roman Catholic doctrine, and to accept in his stead "Father Muller," whose teachings have the strongest endorsement of the dignitaries of his Church as being "in the spirit of St. Alphonsus; its theology sound and solid, its spirit most devout, and its language simple and popular."

I have therefore procured a number of the works of this Divine, and propose to give you copious extracts from them that your readers may know what are the real doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church. The first of these works has the following title page—

THE CATHOLIC PRIEST. By Michael Muller, C. S. S. R. Priest of the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer. Baltimore: Published by Krenzer Brothers, 30 North street. 1876.

It will be seen that this work is not written by some neophyte like "Rufus," who does not know what his Church teaches—or by some lay-rhapsodist, who in his foolish devotion to the priesthood of his Church indulges in language whose extravagance his own religious teachers would condemn,—but by a priest, one commended for his orthodoxy, soundness, and solidity of doctrine. When therefore he tells us what the position and power of the priesthood is, we may accept it as the authoritative teachings of the Church in which he ministers. Let us then open the book and read some extracts from it.

"Every priest can say in some measure with Jesus Christ who sent him: 'All power is given to me in heaven and earth.'" (Page 70.)

"His power reaches to the highest heavens, it penetrates even to the very gates of hell. The treasures of kings are silver and gold—perishable metals—but the treasures of the priest are the imperishable merits and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Kings have power only over the bodies of men, but the priest has power over their souls. Kings have power only over their subjects, but KINGS AND EMPERORS ARE THEMSELVES SUBJECT TO THE PRIEST. (The italics and capitals, except where otherwise specified, are mine.) Kings have power to open and close the prison gates of earth, but the priest has power to open and to close the gates of heaven and of hell." (Pp. 71–72.)

"The priest has the power to free the sinner from the bonds of sin and hell and to open to him the gates of heaven. He has the power to transform him from a slave of the devil to a child of God." (Page 77.)

"Seek where you will, through heaven and earth, and you will find but one created being who can forgive the sinner, who can free him from the chains of sin and hell, and that extraordinary being is the PRIEST, the Catholic priest. 'Who can forgive sins except God?' was the question which the Pharisees sneeringly asked. 'Who can forgive sins?' is the question which the Pharisees of the present day also ask; and I answer there IS a man in earth that can forgive sins and THAT man is the Catholic priest. Yes, beloved brethren, the priest not only declares that the sinner is forgiven, but he really forgives him. (The italics here are his.) The priest raises his hand, and he pronounces the word of absolution, and in an instant, quick as a flash of light, the chains of hell are burst asunder, and the sinner becomes a child of God. So great is the power of the priest that THE JUDGMENTS OF HEAVEN ITSELF ARE SUBJECT TO HIS DECISION." (Pp. 78–79.)

It might be supposed that the author really did not mean in this last phrase what it plainly signifies, viz., that God's forgiveness is conditioned upon that of the priest. But his subsequent writings on the same point leave no doubt, as witness the follow:

"It is to the priest that God speaks when He says 'Judge between me and my people.' Judica inter me et vineam meam. (Is. v.) 'This man,' says God, speaking to the priest, 'this man is a sinner, he has offended me grievously. I could judge him myself, but I leave this judgment to your decision. I SHALL FORGIVE HIM AS SOON AS YOU GRANT HIM FORGIVENESS. He is my enemy but I shall admit him to my friendship as soon as you declare him worthy. I shall open the gates of heaven to him as soon as you free him from the chains of sin and hell." (Page 82.)

You may say that the possession of such power as this really makes a God of the priest. Well, our author does not hesitate to claim for himself equality of power with God. He says:

"God has placed on his (the priest's) finger the ring of authority and power. He has given the priest the ALMIGHTY POWER of forgiving sins." (Page 84.)

"To have the power to create new worlds is to partake of God's own omnipotence, but to have the power of forgiving, of destroying sin, IS TO HOLD THE VERY PLACE OF GOD HIMSELF, it is to perform one of the greatest works of God's almighty power." (Page 85.)

This self-exaltation, (for you must remember that it is a priest claiming this power for himself, and not some blind devotee claiming it for him) by which a mere creature arrogates to himself the power and authority of Almighty God is surely sacrilegious enough—but what shall I say of the language that follows in which this priest declares that in the celebration of the Mass, God himself becomes subject to the authority and control of the priest?

"The eternal, Omnipotent God, in whose presence the pillars of heaven tremble, that God before whom the earth and all that dwells thereon, before whom the boundless universe with all its countless suns and planets, before whom all created things are but as a drop of water, as a grain of dust, as if they were not; that God of infinite majesty and glory IS SUBJECT TO THE PRIEST. He instantly descends from heaven IN OBEDIENCE TO THE VOICE OF HIS PRIEST." (Page 95.)

"There is a man who opens at will the gates of heaven, who speaks to the eternal Son of God, and at his voice the God of heaven descends on earth and SUBJECTS HIMSELF TO HIS CONTROL." (Page 96.)

"When we see a weak sinful man possessing power over God himself, possessing power to bear Him, to place Him, to give Him to whom he wills, we cannot help exclaiming in amazement, 'O wondrous miracle! O unheard of power!'" (Page 97.)

And when we hear "a weak sinful man arrogating to himself this power, for which there is not the shade of a shadow of authority in the word of God, we are painfully reminded of that "man of sin" whose coming Paul predicts in his 2d epistle to the Thessalonians, "who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

After following this writer thus far, our readers probably think that nothing he can say will be extravagant enough to surprise them, but there are two or three passages that will even yet startle them. First to be told that Christ did not die to redeem the world but to establish the priesthood will amaze them. And yet here it is:

"So sublime is the dignity of the priesthood that in order to establish it our Lord Jesus Christ had to die. To REDEEM THE WORLD IT WAS NOT NECESSARY THAT OUR LORD SHOULD DIE. A single drop of His sacred blood, a SINGLE TEAR, a SINGLE PRAYER of His would have sufficed; but in order to ESTABLISH THE PRIESTHOOD our Lord had to die." (Page 98.)

And so we are told by this "clear, sound orthodox" divine that Christ did not die to redeem the world—that he could have redeemed the world with a single tear or a single prayer, but he died to establish the priesthood. I thought the doctrine that Christ died to redeem the world was the foundation of all Christianity. It was the doctrine of Paul, of St. Augustine, of all the fathers. But the Catholic Church is progressive. It has discovered that Christ did not die to redeem the World. Well, what next?

"To forgive sins, to cause the Holy Ghost to dwell in the soul, to change bread and wine into the body of God are miracles that can be performed only by God himself. Now the priest performs these miracles every day and subsequently they may truly be said to be gods. And St. Gregory Nazianzen is right in saying 'the priest is a God on earth and his mission is to make gods of his fellowmen.'" (Page 109.)

A single quotation more as to the honor and obedience which this "sound" and "orthodox" priest claims for himself, and I have done:

"Since God, then, has placed the priest upon the throne of His own adorable sanctity" (where does "Father Muller" get this information?) "since He gives to the priest the title 'Saviour of the world,'" (where is this title given?) "since he calls the priest 'His co-operator in the divine work of redemption," (where does He so call him?) "what wonder if He commands all to obey and honor the priest as they honor and obey Himself. Since the priest has been so honored by God Himself, what wonder is it that he should be honored by angels and men. St. Francis de Sales saw the guardian angel of a young priest whom he ordained go in advance to the right of the priest before his ordination, but after his ordination the angel went to the left of the priest and followed him. Wenceslaus, king of Poland, would not sit down in the presence of a priest. St. Catharine of Sienna and Mary of Oignies KISSED THE GROUND ON WHICH A PRIEST HAD WALKED. St. Francis of Assissium said that if he saw an angel from heaven and a priest he would bow first to the priest and then to the angel, for the angel is the friend of God, but the priest holds His place." (Pp. 110-112.)

Do our American people understand the meaning of all this? Only let this Roman Catholic theory of the priesthood prevail, let this hierarchy that claims with itself equality with God, firmly root itself amongst us, and the day will come when the sisters and daughters of American freemen ought to believe that "even God Himself is subject to the priest," will be found "kissing the ground on which a priest has walked"; and the Church, so far from rebuking them for this degrading man-worship, will commend them, and hold them up as examples to others as it has done "St. Catharine of Sienna, and Mary of Oignies." Whenever a woman reaches the point of kissing the ground on which a man has walked she is already helplessly in his power. She has sacrificed to him her self-respect, which is the guardian of her honor. He may do with her what he will. Painfully enough does the past history of Romanism show how this power has been employed.

TAKING THINGS FOR GRANTED.

Half the failures in life result from the habit so many people have of taking things for granted. The business man assumes that his credits are good, or he takes it for granted that his wife knows what style of living his income will warrant, until the logic of addition, subtraction and multiplication proves too much for him, and down comes his business in ruins. The young professional man takes it for granted that veneering instead of solid acquirements will enable him to succeed because there are so many notorious examples of men's rising and maintaining themselves in public life through pure audacity, native wit, and an utter lack of conscience. He will find too late that it won't do to plan and risk a career by the exceptions rather than the rule. The farmer keeps no accounts; crops his farm according to the season, or last year's markets, or his neighbor's success; takes it for granted that the laws of nature and of trade will accommodate themselves to his necessities; sinks deeper into debt, and wonders why farming doesn't pay.

And so on to the end; men everywhere want success without paying its price in thorough preparation, honest hard work, intelligent calculation and foresight, patient attention to details. They take for granted things which it is their business to know, and trust that to fortune which common sense and experience should teach them is controlled by law.

In domestic life the same fatuity is felt. The unhappiness unconsciously and thoughtlessly inflicted aggregates a good part of the total felt in the average life. How many husbands take it for granted that their wives know they love them, and so never shew it in the old lover-like way! How many take it for granted that wife will ask for money if she needs it—heedless or ignorant of the pain it gives a sensitive woman to ask for every dollar she receives! How many fathers take it for granted that daughters need nothing but a home and clothing—that boys cannot suffer for want of amusement, recreation, sympathy or companionship—that the tired mother would herself plan and execute a vacation rest if she needed it!

There is of course something to be said on the other side; but as a rule women are much more thoughtful in such matters than men are. If, however, any of them who read this conclude, on reflection, that they are receiving a little too much as a matter of course the results of a husband's toil and fidelity, they will know how to make amends. The splendid devotions and sacrifices of manly men, illustrated every day and in walks of life, are not matters to be accepted in an unsympathetic, listless, matter-of-fact way. It is not enough in this world to "mean well." We ought to do well. Thoughtfulness, therefore, becomes a duty, and gratitude one of the graces. Alike in the fine things of life, and in its common work and duties, let us not take—or leave those whom we love, to take—too many things for granted.—Golden Rule.

THE RELIGION OF CHILDREN.

The religion of children is not so intensely spiritual, but it is intensely sincere. When your little boy says, "Ma, I'll feed the calves, or pick up the chips for you, I'll bring in the water," there is more religion in it than in many a long, cold, formal prayer. When your little girl offers to wash the dishes or sweep the kitchen, she means to be good, and be a Christian, and seeks some way to express it. Children join their faith and works together, and we are too apt to underrate these hopeful signs of a religious life. We think they ought to do these things naturally and willingly, yet we know it is not human nature to be always obliging and accommodating; but, on the contrary, it is natural to be selfish and lazy. So, when the boy of ten who loves fun wants to help the little six-year-old wash his face and comb his hair, kindly puts on his comforter and brings his hat and mittens, then takes him by the hand and they start off together on a slow gallop, just fast enough for the little fellow to keep up and enjoy the fun, set it down as a very hopeful sign that the older boy is a Christian, and the little one soon will be. If we fail to recognize the spirit of the Master in that little boy's conduct, it is because we are blind and cannot see afar off. When the little girl who likes to sleep long in the morning conquers her desire to please herself, and rises early, helps her mother by taking care of baby and making herself useful, the only true reason for it all is, that she is trying to be a Christian. It is the dawning of a religious life manifesting itself in good works.

How important is this point in the child's history, and how careful we ought to be not to cast a stumbling block in the way. If we fail to see the effort it costs our little ones to do what they are trying to do, and we blame them where we ought to encourage, they soon give up trying to please, and only do what we compel them to do, in a hard, defiant manner, instead of the cheerful, loving way in which they first set about it. While we are in sympathy with them all they do for us is spontaneous, and gushes out like a spring of pure water; but when we push and drive they become sluggish and lose their love, consequently lose their religion—for love is religion and religion is love. Christian parents too often fail to see these beautiful buds of promise, and blast them before they develop into perfectly rounded symmetrical Christians.—Mrs. Humes.

GETHSEMANE.—Matt. xxvi: 36-45.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

Gethsemane, thine olive grove
A welcome screen for Jesus wove,
To veil His agony;
O! when thou lone and hallowed spot,
Can be by friend or foe forgot
Thy midnight mystery?

Beneath the darkness of thy shade,
The agonizing Saviour prayed;
And from the anguish felt,
Great drops as it were bloody sweat
Streamed down His cheeks and falling wet
The ground whereon He knelt.

O! who can tell the strain intense
Of mind in agonized suspense,
In what He there achieved?
Who fathom all that wrung His heart
As thrice He lowly knelt apart
And plead to be relieved?

"My Father if it may not be
That now this cup shall pass from Me,
Thine own and only Son,
Except I drink it at Thy hand,
Then Father this My prayer shall stand,
Thy will, not Mine, be done."

Thrice did the lonely Sufferer plead,
And thrice returned, as if in need
Of sympathy's relief;
Thrice they who came a watch to keep,
Had sunk in weariness to sleep,
And heeded not His grief.

Ah! vain from them a cheer to seek,
Though heart were willing, flesh was weak—
No human arm could aid;
An angel for a moment came,
And, whispering the Father's aim,
Some strength to Him conveyed.

A world in that dark midnight hour,
While coping with Satanic power,
He bore on bended knee;
Alone the burden He sustained,
Alone the victory He gained,
In thee Gethsemane.

Gethsemane, thy name is graved
Deep on the hearts of all the saved,
And cannot be erased;
For, till eternity shall end,
O! who in full can comprehend
The scene in thee embraced?

Draw near, my heart, and gaze anew,
Where Jesus on that night withdrew,
To bear the load for thee;
Come read the love that in Him wrought,
Come linger long in tender thought,
In lone Gethsemane.

See where He, in that awful test,
Obeyed the Father's high behest
Submissively for thee;
O! think what torture He endured,
And what of bliss for thee secured,
In dark Gethsemane.

And when harassed by many a doubt,
And darkness gathers thick about,
Without a cheering ray;
Then to Gethsemane repair,
And listen to the Saviour's prayer,
And learn of Him to pray.

But till life's service he resigned,
Shall ever sacred be enshrined
That scene of agony;
Let tears its clustered memories start,
But never, O my wayward heart,
Forget Gethsemane.

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

It has been and is supposed in very many quarters that the Roman Catholic colleges supply the best curriculum of studies in the country, and many Protestants have not been slow in sending their boys to Catholic colleges, supposing that in this way they were assured of a thorough and scholarly education. Dr. David Dorchester shows the fallacy of this idea in his successive papers on "Romanism and Education in the United States." In his last paper, published in Zion's Herald, he gives the English, classical, scientific and religious course pursued in St. John's College, at Fordham; this State, and the five Jesuit colleges do not essentially vary from the curriculum of St. John's. The course as given shows marked inferiority to that of our Protestant colleges. First, the standard of admission is below that of Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Rutgers, Williams, Amherst, and others of like rank, while the list of preparatory students in some Jesuit colleges makes no mention of algebra or geometry! Then the courses of study are far narrower than in the non-Catholic colleges. Less attention is devoted to natural science, mental and moral philosophy, political economy, etc. Again, the Catholic institutions devote little attention to the Greek, and more to the Latin language, than the non-Catholic colleges. The study of Latin in Catholic colleges generally continues through four years, while Greek seldom occupies more than two years. It would be better if the plan were reversed. The discipline of the Catholic colleges is severe, having supreme reference to the promotion of the Catholic faith;—think of that, Christian parents! With reference to Roman Catholic academies, select schools, convent schools and seminaries, close inquiry in regard to the education imparted in these institutions leads to the conclusion that instruction in the fine arts, in the languages, and in the sciences, is far inferior in all elements of true culture to that imparted by the non-Catholic schools. They pander to the vanity of wealthy and aristocratic patrons, and aim to make their daughters showy rather than truly cultivated. The whole system is superficial in its plan and execution. We repeat Dr. Dorchester is doing signal service to the cause of education in exposing, as he does by a comparison of respective outlines of study, the shortcomings of the Roman Catholic colleges and schools.

When the Roman Catholics produce better educational institutions than the Protestants do, it may be time to consider the advisability of sending Protestant youth to Catholic institutions for their education. But that time is not now, nor is there any indication that it lies in the near future.—Christian at Work.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The German Government has expelled from the country some Mormon missionaries who were engaged in making proselytes for their Society.

A correspondent, writing from Madagascar, says: "I am sorry to say that the troubles with the French have not abated. I say the French, but the real difficulties are with M. Cason, the Commissary, and the Jesuit priests. The whole of the capital is now in a state of great alarm in consequence of a rumor that six French men-of-war are on their way to Tamatavi, the chief port on the east coast. After repeatedly insulting the Queen and Prime Minister, and trying to entrap the Malagassy Government into serious difficulties, M. Cason left here a few months ago for Bonrbon and Mayetta, it is said, for the purpose of laying formal complaint before his Government and trying to secure the means of overawing the Malagassy. The people here seem to be in utter ignorance of the grounds of complaint against them, but they have proposed that what differences there may be should be submitted to arbitration. This proposal the Commissary declines to consider. The Jesuit priests continue their bold and overbearing conduct, trying all they can to compel the people to become Roman Catholics. I do not think that any unprejudiced person could live here, and be acquainted with all the circumstances of the case without concluding that the Jesuits desire to draw the Malagassy into some complications with the French."

George Frampton, a strong-looking, able-bodied Shaker, was summoned before county magistrates by the relieving officer of Lymington Union, on Saturday, to show cause why he should not be made to contribute towards the support of his wife, a lunatic, and chargeable to the funds of the union. Defendant grounded his plea of inability to anything on the fact that the Shakers do not work for any master, simply for each other, and consequently they earn nothing. From evidence it appeared that Frampton's wife had been a lunatic for nearly five years, but that the guardians did not ask him to contribute anything towards her maintenance in consideration of his providing for his two children and an aged mother. Some two months ago he broke up his household, took part of his goods, and entered Mrs. Girling's community. The defendant, in reply to the Bench, said he was formerly a farm laborer, earning 12s. per week, and was led to join the Shakers by the Spirit of God, whom he must obey. Their worships made an order for him to pay 5s. per week. Two county court judgments were obtained against Mrs. Girling the other day, amounting in the aggregate to upwards of £20, which if not satisfied within the usual period, will result in the sale of the whole of the community's belongings.

Many obstacles and much persecution have been encountered by the Swedish missionaries in Abyssinia. Many of them have fallen by disease and violence, and the others have been driven from one place to another, and their labors hindered in every possible way. The latest news states that last year Mr. Soesson and Mr. Carlsson and their colleagues had an interview with King John, who received them courteously, and provided them quarters and food. But in response to their request to be allowed to preach the Gospel, he gave an unfavorable answer. He said he could not allow them to teach in the country, because he did not want two sorts of Gospels. Abyssinia had been Christian 250 years. The Falashes he had assigned to Mr. Flad's disciples; the Comanties and Waities he was teaching himself. In conclusion he told them to return to their own country and teach the heathen there. He ordered them away at once, and forbade them to stop anywhere along the road more than one night. The missionaries had a long and wearisome journey, and were badly treated by the people because of the King's contemptuous dismissal of them. They returned to Massowa, the rest of the missionary force residing at Mensa. At last accounts, those at Mensa were fearing an assault by the rebel Waldo Mikael's forces, and those at Massowa a raid by the Mohammedan Governor of Hamazan.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1880.

FOREWARNED.

Now that the time has arrived for the selection of candidates for the the next Legislatnre, the people of North Carolina will do well to pause in the midst of the political excitement which surrounds them, and recall some of the acts of the last session. In that good work we will be happy to assist them. In tbe last session of the Legislature, called to effect the sale of the Western North Carolina Railroad two measures were passed conspicuous for their absurdity, and conspicuous for their iniquity. We refer to the reduction of the tax on the sale of liquors, and the levying of a tax on the sale of books. The former might be styled an "Act for the promotion of vice," and the latter an "Act to retard the progress of knowledge among the people." Who were as individuals responsible for the passage of these acts we do not know and shall never know. That the body upon whicb lays the stigma of this legislation numbered among its members gentlemen of the highest patriotism, the sonndest judgment and the most conscientous motives we are fully aware, and these it is inconcievable could have been parties, wittingly at least, to these outrages upon the moral sentiment of the commonwealth. We are glad to acqnit all such.

But how was this iniquitous legislation effected? Let us trace as best we may—imperfectly of necessity—the dark deed fostering the liquor traffic through the darkness which from first to last envelopes it. Previously to the session referred to liquor associations were formed and the ways and means for carrying into effect the repeal of laws levying special taxes npon liquors were perfected. When the foul deed which we are considering was done who can tell? Looking for it and expecting it we could never have known it had been done, nor tbe people have known, for aught of stir that was made in the passage of the bill. Tbat it should be known in time to be prevented was not designed by those wbose interest it was to foist this disgrace upon the State. In the confnsion and in the excitement incident to legislation on the all-engrossing subject which had called the lawmakers together the bill was hurried to its passage, and the deed was done. Shall it be undone? or will the people hang their heads in sbame and surrender to the hordes of Alcohol?

It behooves those who would see this foul disgrace wiped from the statute books to petition the forthcoming Legislature for the repeal of this act, aye, of these acts. It behooves them to let it be known that no candidate in the liquor interest can secure their votes. No time is to be lost. Let the friends of good government in every county see to it that only good men are nominated, and make it plain that none other can be elected.

Of one thing we may rest assured, that the liquor interest will not stop at what it has accomplished. In the flnsh of recent victory its champions will press their advantage, and if by ways that are dark they can succeed, yet deeper degradation awaits us.

We have no fears of what may be done in the light. No one will rise in his place in the legislative halls and insult tbe intelligence of the people by undertaking to prove that increase of intemperance will promote good morals. What is attempted will be done privately, insidiously, by every art and every trick that may deceive the unwary, but with eyes wide open to the danger, and thns alone, it is possible to avert the impending calamity.

May we not go further? Shall we not assnme the aggressive? Alcohol is the parent of poverty, of ignorance, of every species of crime. Our poor-houses, our asylums, our hundreds of prisons point to tbe demon as the very cause of their existence. From widows and orphans, from thousands of once happy homes, now the abodes of wretchedness and misery, there comes one long agonizing wail for relief from the demon that has caused their woe. Will not the Christian men of our State and tbe friends of humanity open their ears to tbis piteous wail? Then let them send to the forthcoming Legislature those who are determined tbat tbe strong band of law shall arrest the murderous liquor traffic.

Our sister State on the south has set us a noble example. There tbe secular papers have taken a stand tbat is worthy of all honor and that commends them to the gratitnde of tbe people. The Southern Christian Advocate presents the cheering view of the subject, and proposes some good advice.

"All this year, as never before in the memory of living men, has there been a growing conviction among the best people of all sections of South Cerolina, that something ought to be done to abate the crying evil of drunkenness. The secular press, under the leadership of the Charleston News and Courier, has spoken out. Candidates for the suffrages of the people have shown their opinion. Grand Juries have called tbe attention of the country to the matter. Town councils have taken action. All going to show tbat something unusual ought to be promptly done to repress, if not to suppress a great evil.

"Is there not danger just now, at the critical period, that the golden opportunity may be allowed to slip by nnimproved? In our eagerness to elect our party ticket, may we not forget, are we not forgetting, that something better than the election of our candidate, something better than the triumph of our party may be demanded by the best interests of the country?

"Good men for office is what the country wants. We want men to go to our Legislature this winter prepared to give the country wise and wholesome laws for the regulation of the whiskey traffic. The country is scarcely ready for a general prohibition measure like that which prevails in the State of Maine, where the sale of liquor is prohibited throughout the State by law. But we are ready for an advance in that direction, and one that may not stop until it reaches some such result. May we not take what we can get now as a promise and prophecy of what we are to get after awhile?"

THE LAW'S DELAY.

The murder of General Bryan Grimes under the peculiarly atrocious circumstances attending it has stirred public indignation profoundly. The Raleigh Observer says: "Assassination is a new crime in North Carolina. Retribution should be so certain and swift as to deter others from following the precedent. If the murderer of General Grimes can be discovered we would be glad to see a special term of court held, and the trial take place witbont a moment's delay."

We hold that as far as possible, without defeating the ends of justice, every man's life should be protected. Every criminal even should have every advantage, under the limitation named, that can be given him. Lynch law, as violating a principle too dear to be ever put in jeopardy, is never defensible; yet it cannot be denied that sometimes, perhaps not infrequently, the penalty meted to the victim is not too great for the crime. We are not defending usurpation of the prerogatives of law under any circumstances, but our contemporary advocates what seems to us well calculated to repress crime, both as to such cases as invite the exercise of illegal or irresponsible power, and even more, perhaps, in removing the causes which incite infuriated men to its employment. Lynch law is always based upon the probability that the inefficiency of the law, mainly the law's delay, will result in the escape of the criminal. We are not numindful that the principle that the ends of justice require that before trial for any criminal offence enough time should elapse to allow men's passions to cool, is as a general principle entirely sound, but whether this wise provision is not sometimes perverted to the favoring of crime is well worth thoughtful attention. The New York Evening Post on this subject puts the case strongly: "Not long since two burglars, armed to the teeth, broke into a gentleman's house at Bay Ridge. An alarm was given; the men were invited to snrrender, the house having been surrounded. They were fired npon as they attempted to fight their way out, and both of them were killed. This was an awful and summary retribntion visited upon the law-breakers. Bnt the verdict of the community, without exception, was that they were served quite right. The owner defended his property and his personal safety by taking life and he was thoronghly sustained by public opinion. If one of these burglars had been surprised in his midnight prowling, and had slain the owner of the property, and had been caught, tried, condemned, and reprieved, he might have been alive to-day, a prosperous gentleman. He would have been able to plead that he did not intend to kill anybody, merely to rob the house; and multitudes of well-meaning, weak people would persnade themselves that he was a poor unfortunate whose life should be saved, if possible, and who, in any event, should be petted and delicately tended if he must go to the gallows. The householder kills the murderous burglar, and his act is applauded. The law hangs the murderer, and silly people weep."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

The Southern Presbyterian in a recent issue expressed its views of revivals and the ills by which they are too frequently followed in a manner so clear, direct and sensible that we must give the following extract to our readers:

"How to guard against general reaction in the church after seasons of special interest, is something to challenge the best thought of the ministry and to excite most fervent desire. The difficulty is increased by the prostration of the minister after protracted services. But this is only temporary and need not prevent the right sort of labor in due time; and so with all laborers in the good work. The main thing is to dismiss the idea that any one victory ends the war. We should regard it as an opportunity and signal for advancing our lines. If the revival is genuine, it raises the church to a bigher plane of religious attainments. From that a higher ascent is possible; and on that higher plane all minds should be fixed. Progress to higher degrees of holiness and a larger scope of usefulness, progress in grace and service, is the law and should be the motto of the church; not vibration, not recession after each advance; not the alternation of heat and cold, life and death, growth and decline. We may well doubt the genuineness of "revivals" which are followed by an amount of worldliness, covetousness, neglect of duty, and spiritual indolence, equal to that from which the membership seem to have been restored for the time. A true revival means an increase of all Christian graces, and that is not an ephemeral blessing.

"The proper training of professed converts is itself an immense and important subject, and we all need instruction concerning it. It surely needs far more practical attention than it generally receives. The early and due instruction of this class, the application of discriminating tests, the guidance of their minds in reading and all religious duties, and a careful constant watch over them in all the months of their spiritnal childhood, would no doubt keep them from many sad mistakes and the Church largely free from spurious and useless members. It is no doubt important to train them at once for Christian work, but how to do this, when, and in what forms, without cultivating forwardness, self-conceit and spiritnal pride, is a task demanding great wisdom and one that does not admit of specific rules. It is at the beginning that each church member decides his future spirit and course, as a general thing; and if we could learn just how to mould these into intelligent, spiritnal, liberal, useful Christians, what a grand Church would we have in a few years!"

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We cannot be with our brethren at the Presbyteries, but arrangements will be made that those who owe the PRESBYTERIAN can have an opportunity of paying np. New subscribers will be received and heartily welcomed. We trnst our friends will not forget us.

It is not at all improbable that a very large number of people would be glad to visit Philadelphia on their own charges, on the occasion of the assembling of the Great Presbyterian Council, if rates of travel could be made very low. Will the Presbyterian inform us whether inducements will be offered?

The "Annual Announcement" of the Medical Department of the University of North Carolina assigns Prof. Charles W. Dabney the chair of General Analytical and Applied Chemistry. We presume from this that Professor Dabney has accepted that post. The other members of the faculty are Hon. K. P. Battle, LL. D., the president; F. W. Simonds, M. S., Ph. D., Professor of Botany and Physiology, and T. W. Harris, A. M., M. D., Professor of Anatomy and Materia Medica.

"Father" Mackonochie, the English Ritualist, of whom our readers have heard as having successfully set at defiance the laws of that realm which specially supports his Church, is in this country. He will not honor us with a long sojourn, so that it cannot be claimed that he has left his country for his country's good. On a recent Sabbath he preached in St. Clement's, the high ritualistic church of Philadelphia. Lions are always in demand in America, but whether the "father" will be elevated into the leonine list is not yet quite apparent.

The Texas Presbyterian notes it as an encouraging sign, politics aside, that the Democratic State Convention of Texas renominated Gov. Roberts. The Presbyterian says:

"Many of the most influential papers were bitter against him, and the leading politicians to a large extent were against him. But the people seem to have been for him, and on the first ballot he was nominated by a vote of more than three-fourths. We rejoice in it as the exhibition of a spirit of independence on the part of the people of mere political leaders and wire-workers. We take it too as an indication that the people of the State will not give up the American Sabbath, or the restraints to be laid by sound laws on the liquor traffic at the bidding of the foreign element of our population, or of those politicians who, for the sake of their votes, are willing to gratify them by the sacrifice of laws so essential to the best interests of the State."

Governor Coruell, of New York, propoles to be governor in fact as well as in name. He lately addressed a letter to the Mayor of the City of New York as follows: "The Constitution declares that the sale of lottery tickets shall not be allowed in this State, and laws designed to enforce this wise constitutional provision have been duly enacted. That these laws are openly and flagrantly violated in the city of New York, the advertising columns of several of the daily newspapers of that city testify. As the chief executive officer of the city of New York, you are therefore requested to see that the proper local officers take the necessary steps faithfully and efficiently to execute these laws, and prohibit this unconstitutional and unlawful traffic. The District Attorney of your county has been directed to co-operate with you in this matter."

The Southwestern Presbyterian has the following:

"At a meeting of the Executive Committee of Education, held in Memphis, Tenn., on the second of August, 1880, the following resolution was adopted:

"'Resolved, That in the judgment of the Executive Committee of Education, students for the ministry receiving aid from this Committee should be instructed by their Presbyteries to attend the theological seminaries within the bounds of the Southern Presbyterian Church.'

"This is a very mild and carefully guarded resolntion, in view of the facts to which it refers. It would scarcely seem possible that Presbyteries could advise students under their care, who are sided out of the funds of the Church, to accept those funds, and then go to pursue their theological studies at seminaries of another denomination. It is intimated, however, that such is the case. We suppose there is some misunderstanding about the matter. We are decidedly of the opinion that the public sentiment of the Church at large would be very far from endorsing such a course."

The public sentiment of the Church certainly would not endorse such a course. There is a chance for some one to explain.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

The Southern Home states that quite an interesting religious meeting is being conducted at Unity church in Lincoln county, N. C., Rev. S. H. Chester is assisted by Rev. G. L. Cook.

A GLORIOUS INGATHERING.

A lady to whom we desire to express our obligations for news received at various times, writing on August 20th, informs us that for nearly two weeks previous, Rev. J. P. Gammon of Asheville, N. C., assisted by Mr. W. W. Moore, a student of Union Theological Seminary, had been holding a glorious meeting at Swannanoa church, near Asheville. Over forty persons united with the church. There were a large number of baptisms—several adults, and in some instances whole families of children.

A TITLE EARNED.

With more than ordinary pleasure we give our readers the following from the Charlotte Observer of Aug. 21st: "On the 3d inst. Prof. J. F. Latimer, of Davidson College, successfully passed all the examinations necessary to attain the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of Leipzig, Germany, and had his degree conferred npon him by the Procancellar of the University. His examiners were Professors Heirtze, Curtius and Voigt, who with their congratulations, paid him high compliments for passing his examinations in so distingnished a manner. It was not Dr. Latimer's purpose at first to present himself before the board until the end of the year, but by his energy and his already fine attainments he accomplished his purpose in one-third of the expected and usual time. It was Prof. Latimer's intention when he left to remain in Germany until the first of January, when he expected to resume his position as professor of Greek and German in Davidson College.

"Gradually Davidson College, through its teachers and pupils, is becoming recognized as among the leading institutions of its kind in the Southern States."

The Texas Presbyterian says that Rev. J. W. Neil and his church at San Antonio are rejoicing in the removal of a debt of several hundred dollars which had remained unpaid since their church was finished.

From the same source we learn that Rev. Dr. E. D. Junkin, of Houston, expected to leave about this time for Virginia to return in two months with his family. He is said to be very much encouraged with regard to his work in Texas.

HELP THOSE WHO HELP THEMSELVES.

Mr. Editor:—Please allow me to make an appeal for help. It may be some one will heed to the cry. The people of West Fork church, Tarrant county, where we hold a "Camp Meeting" wish to build. They have no place to worship but an arbor. They have gone to work in earnest and now ask aid from friends to a good cause as it is impossible for them to complete the church alone. The land necessary will be given us. The country is settling and we very much need a house of worship. I therefore appeal to all for help. Send what you can. It will be thankfully received by this people and myself. Direct to me at Denton, Texas.

Yours fraternally, R. S. BURWELL.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

From the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, we have received the following:

1. Twelve Noble Men, by Mrs. Julia McNair Wright. Pp. 270. Illustrated.

A charming book for the young and good for all. Mrs. W. has made these compendions biographies as interesting and exciting as fiction. The book is worth a dozen of the religious novels, that flood our Sabbath Schools. She gives the stories of Boaz, Whitefield, John and Charles Wesley, Wilberforce, Howard, Savouarola, De Sanctis, Krummacher, John Newton, Miller, Lyman, and Jonas King. "God-speed" to the book!

2. Chumbo's Hut, or The Laguna School, by Mrs. Margaret Hosmer, author of "Chinaman in California," &c. Pp. 232. Illustrated.

An excellent story from a rough school, taught in the snburbs of San Francisco. No mawkish sentiment or love scrapes mar the interesting narrative and judicious lessons for the youth.

3. Glories of Mary, 18mo. tract. Pp. 24. By Rev. J. S. Lamar.

Christ in all the Scriptures. A Demonstration that Christ is the Divine Saviour, and that the Scriptnres are inspired of God. By John Crowell, D. D. 18mo. Pp 24.

Both tracts are neatly gotten up, and deserve a wide circulation.

We have received very nicely put up a copy of The Bible for the Young. It claims to seek to present in "household words" the narrative of God's grace, and to relate in simple terms the histories of the Old and New Testament, explaining the obscurities of the text, and giving in plain language the meaning of the most difficult passages. And in every respect the endeavor has been made to simplify to the utmost, and to render most attractive, the perusal of the Bible itself. We have not had time to look over the book carefully, but if its claims are well founded it is a work much needed in our country by the young. Published by J. H. Chambers & Co., St. Louis, Mo., and Atlanta, Ga., and A. L. Bancroft & Co., San Francisco, Cal.

The Sanitarian for August. A. N. Bell, A. M., M. D., editor, New York. $3 a year. Contents: A Plea for Sound Manhood and Womanhood, by Prof. McSherry, M. D.; School Hygiene, Cosmetics, Adulteration of Food, The Benefits of Sanitation, Prof. Kelly, M. D.; Vital Statistics, and other valuable articles.

The Intelligencer, a monthly record of medical and scientific literature. Presley Blakiston, 1012 Walnut street, Philadelphia. Mr. Blakiston has moved into his spacious new store, where he claims to exhibit the largest stock of medical and scientific books, foreign and American, in the United States. Facilities and prices unsurpassed.

The Catholic Presbyterian is on the table. August number contains the following: A Presbyterian college in America, By President McCosh. D. D., LL.D., Princeton College, N. J.; The higher Education of Women, By M. B. Martin, Belfast; Lord Chancellor King and his celebrated "Enquiry," By Rev. A. H. Drysdale, M. A., Rockdale; The First Scottish Missionary in South Africa, By Rev. R. W. Barbour, M. A.; Israel and Egypt according to the Monuments, By Rev. Andrew Melville, M. A., Glasgow; Old English Words in the Bible, By Prof. Lindsay Alexander D. D., Edinburgh; The Evangelist and his Work, By David C. Marquis, D. D., St. Louis, Mo.; Bohemia after the Death of Huss, By Vincent Dusek, Pastor at Kolin, Bohemia; Notes of the Day; General Survey, Open Counoil. A. D. F. Randolph & Co., N. Y.

DR. LIVINGSTONE'S SUCCESSOR.

A cablegram has been received from the British Consul-General at Zanzibar, dated July 7th, by the Royal Geographical Society, announcing the safe return of the East African Expedition under Mr. Joseph Thompson, who succeeded the late Mr. Keith Johnston last summer.

The expedition has been remarkably successful, and has accomplished much valuable work in a comparatively short space of time. Mr. Johnston died while en route to Lake Nyassa, and his death was lamented by geographers the world over. The party left England in the middle of November, 1878, and started from Dar-es-Salaam for the interior on May 20th of last year. Since then the expedition has reached the head of Lake Nyassa, and thence to the sonth end of Lake Tanganyika.

Mr. Thompson left his men encamped at Llendive, on the Lofu River, under Chuma, Livingstone's old and faithful follower. He then proceeded along the west side of the lake, made a preliminary examination of the Lukuya Creek, and subsequently crossed to Ujiji. He then returned to Lukuya, and of his subsequent proceedings little is yet known for certain.

The journey, however, was not unattended with danger incident to African travel. It is believed the explorer went a considerable distance down the creek, and meeting with hostility from the natives returned to Mtowa, on the lake, proceeding to the sonth end of the lake by boat. He then rejoined his main party, and resumed his return march to the coast. A brief mention is made in the telegram, announcing his arrival at Zanzibar, to the effect that he visited the mysterious Lake Hikwa, situated in the unexplored country, between Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyiki.

The session of the Geographical Society opens on November 8th, at which it is expected Mr. Thomson will be present. Its proceedings are likely to be the most important since the news of Livingstone's death was received. Aided by the notes accumulated by that famous traveler, Mr. Thomson may have something to say about that great African highway of the future which will give a new impet us to British discovery and commerce. Judging by the short time in which he has accomplished his investigations, it is presumed his journey was comparatively easy, and from this it is inferred that the dangers hitherto attending it have been removed. Should the route followed by Mr. Thomson be practicable for commercial purposes the twenty millions of pounds awaiting investment on the London market will be diverted into channels which it is to be hoped will not only benefit Britain in a commercial sense, but civilization, throughout that mysterious and hitherto benighted region.—Scottish American Journal.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

The Edinburgh Scotsman gives a somewhat detailed account of a literary discovery recently made, which—if accurate, as we suppose it to be,—more than confirms certain rumors which have been abroad. It is nothing less than the finding of a new early manuscript of the whole of the Gospel of Matthew and of the Gospel of Mark, with the exception of its last six and a half verses—the final leaf, as we suppose, being, as it is so often, missing. Its appearance, the style of the letters in which it is written, and all the other criteria by which its age must be judged, assign it to a date not far from A. D. 500, which exalts it to an antiquity exceeded by not more than three or four among surviving manuscripts of the New Testament.

The discovery happened on this wise: Two German scholars, Oscar V. Gebbhardt and Adolph Harnach, known as having successfully edited an edition of the "Apostolic Fathers," went in March last to Southern Italy and Sicily on a search for manuscripts. Hearing of a monastery at Rossano, on the Gulf of Taranto, said to contain important manuscripts, they went thither, to find no traces of such a monastery now existing, but discovering in the palace of tha archbishop this venerable copy of nearly the whole of the first two Gospels. Its leaves are of purple parchment, the writing being in silver, except the first three lines of each Gospel, which are in gold. It contains 188 leaves, is written in uncial characters, two columns to the page, with no space between the words, no breathings nor accents, and only the slightest attempts at punctuation.

The finders state that in general it bears a striking resemblance to the other only known manuscript in purple parchment—four leaves of which are in London—and that, with some unique readings, it rather goes with the later manuscripts where the Sinaitic and the Vatican manuscripts differ from them.

Special interest attaches to the manuscript from the fact that it contains a number of painted miniatures illustrative of scenes in the life of Christ, which must be among the very earliest of such works of art extant, and which are done with fair skill and much animation and expression—some being historically suggestive, as that portraying the distribution of bread and wine at the Eucharist.—Congregationalist.

IMPORTANT CORRESPONDENCE.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
COLUMBIA, S. C., July, 1880.

Rev. J. L. Girardeau, D. D., LL.D.:

DEAR BROTHER: We wish to call your attention to the following facts, viz.:

1. Last May the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary adopted the following resolutions: "1. That the Board with profound regret accepts the resignation of Dr. Girardeau, to take effect on the 1st of Oct., 1880. 2. That the Board, in thus reluctantly accepting this resignation, which has been done only in consequence of Dr. Girardeau's insisting upon it, cannot refrain from expressing our unbounded confidence in Dr. Girardeau as a teacher, our belief that he possesses peculiar qualifications for the chair which he has so ably filled, and our hope that in some way his connection with this institution may be renewed at an early day."

2. Soon after this, at the meeting of the Alumni in Charlestou, the following resolution was adopted: "That a Committee, with Rev. Dr. B. M. Palmer as Chairman, be appointed by this Alumni Association to confer with the Rev. Dr. Girardeau, and urge upon him to reconsider his resignation as Professor of Didactic and Polemic Theology in the Seminary, and if possible, obtain from him some assurance that he will return to the Institution."

3. A few days afterwards, the General Assembly expressed "its earnest desire that the Rev. John L. Girardeau, D. D., should if possible, be induced to resume his charge of the chair of Didactic and Polemic Theology, for which he has evinced, by years of actual trial, his eminent qualifications as respects alike his learning, the soundness of his doctrines, and his aptness to teach."

The Assembly added to this expression of its desire for you to return to the Seminary the following words: "It is confidently believed that his continuance in the Seminary would not only be highly gratifying to its friends and the Church at large, but also contribute greatly to the success of the efforts that may be made for its enlarged usefulness."

Hoping that you will comply with this desire of the Board of Directors, of the Alumni of the Seminary, and of the General Assembly, so heartily and unanimously expressed; and also hoping that you will soon inform us of your willingness to renew your connection with the Seminary—we remain,

Yours, very truly,

JAMES HEMPHILL,
Chairman of the Board of Directors.
J. B. MACK, Clerk.

MT. PLEASANT, CHARLESTON Co., S. C.,
Aug. 2d, 1880.

The Hon. James Hemphill, Chairman, and the Rev. J. B. Mack, D. D., Clerk of the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary of the Synods of South Carolina and Georgia:

DEAR BRETHREN: Your esteemed communication has been received, in which, after citing the action of the Board at its last meeting, of the Association of Alumni in May, and of the late General Assembly, signifying a desire that I should return to the Seminary, you express the hope that I will comply with this desire, and consent to be restored to my connection with the Institution.

In reply I beg respectfully to say, that the concurrent judgement of my brethren has overborne my own, which had definitely determined me to a separation from the institution; and I hereby inform you of my willingness to return to the Seminary, leaving it to the Board of Directors to decide whether the restoration shall be effected, and, if so, to indicate the mode in which it shall be accomplished.

Certain considerations, which need not be specified, make it just and proper for me to say—what otherwise I should have deemed it wholly unnecessary to say—that, in resigning my position in the Seminary, I acted without conference with others, purely of my own motion, with no prospect of bettering my temporal circumstances, and with the expectation that the withdrawal would be final. The responsibility for the step, which I admit was great, I claim as all my own. I admire, if, through imperfection, I cannot fully appropriate, the sentiment of Robert Breckinridge, "My joys I am willing to share with all my friends, my sorrows and reproaches with none but my glorious Redeemer." My hope was, that I might be permitted to go into a small country charge, where I might have the opportunity of statedly preaching the Gospel, and of developing and publishing my views, unrestrained by the peculiar relations and responsibilities arising out of an official connexion with the Theological Seminary. The realization of this hope has been opposed and thwarted by the concurrent judgment to which you advert—the expression of which has been to me a cause of wonder—and not without a struggle occasioned by personal convictions and a natural disinclination to what may look like fickleness of purpose, I bow my will to that of the Church. If, after an experience for four years of my poor services in a chair of Theology, she insists on retaining them, she is welcome to them.

I cannot close without expressing my hearty thanks to the General Assembly, to the Board of Directors of the Seminary, and to the Alumni Association, for the manifestation of their confidence in me, and my profound gratitude to the Head of the Church for the acceptance with my brethren which he has been pleased to grant me. I am, dear brethren, with bigb esteem, yours in the Gospel of Christ, JOHN L. GIRARDEAU.

ECLECTICISMS.

A CURE FOR LONELINESS.

United Presbyterian:

Pleasant thoughts are sweet company. We may have them by night or day, in sadness or joy, in solitude or amid the throngs of the street; and wherever they are, they are the same in character and ministry. No man will be lonely who has learned rightly to commune with his own spirit.

SPIRITUAL BABYHOOD.

Nashville Christian Advocate:

Perpetual spiritual babyhood is not what the Lord expects of Christians. Croup, dentition, and such bodily complaints, are to be outgrown with the advance of years. So the weakness and falls that may be expected from inexperience and immaturity are disgraceful and intolerable in one who has had years in which he might have constantly grown in the grace of God.

A MINISTERIAL RUFFIAN.

Biblical Recorder:

A ministerial ruffian who goes on in a headstrong spirit, disregarding the rights and feelings of others must prove in the end a calamity to any community and a reproach to the cause of Christ. We can be deeply pious, zealous in every good cause, "contend earnestly for the faith," and yet be gentlemen. A good cause may be defended ably and suffer great harm from the spirit in which it is defended.

TO APPRECIATE SALVATION.

Texas Presbyterian:

Doubtless the salvation of man is of love, and of such love as we cannot conceive the greatness and glory of; and men are saved by believing in this love. At the same time they must understand that they are guilty, or they cannot understand the love that saves them. Salvation is an empty name unless there is something to be saved from; and those who have no right apprehension of what they are to be saved from will scarcely place much value upon the salvation.

THE WAY TO PUT IT.

Sunday School Times:

"The Lord doesn't so much look at what you've given, as at what you've got left," was a minister's pungent putting of the case in an appeal for church giving. "If riches increase," says Sir Thomas Browne, "let thy mind hold pace with them, and think it is not enough to be liberal, but munificent. Though a cup of cold water from some hand may not be without its reward, yet stick not thou for wine and oil for the wounds of the distressed; and treat the poor as our Saviour did the multitude to the relics of some baskets."

RELIGION AS A QUICKENER.

Zion's Herald:

A living man is alive, not in a single limb only but in his whole body. In like manner energy of will is general, and diffuses itself over all the mental and moral powers of the soul. A man who pursues any one object in life with immovable fixedness of purpose is what is popularly called "a wide awake man." And as by keeping one's eye fixed upon an object on the opposite bank, one can safely cross a deep, turbulent stream on the narrowest bridges, so by having one's will steadily fixed on pleasing God and doing some specific good to men, one's whole mental and spiritual life will be firm, vigorous, sustained and persistent. A heart throbbing with the pulsations of a heaven-born love will keep the purse open, make the feet swift and the hands skillful. As one of the ancient fathers wrote: No labor is hard, no time is long, wherein the glory of eternity is the mark we level at.

UNSANCTIFIED WEALTH.

Pittsburg Christian Advocate:

Pastors and their churches are always anxious to increase the number of their communicants, and delighted when a call is made for admission to their circle. This delight takes a very pronounced form when the increase adds largely to the wealth of the church and prospectively improves her social position. This addition of numbers and wealth is a legitimate subject of rejoicing, provided it also adds to the spiritual life and power of the Church. Otherwise it is just as legitimate a cause of regret and sorrow. One thing the church is organized for, and one alone—the distribution of spiritual life among men. Her power will depend upon the fullness and purity of her own spiritual life. Whatever reduces this or prevents the fullness of its flow, diminishes this power and thus tends to defeat the very purpose of her establishment. Nothing is more efficacious for this than unconverted wealth.

THE WORST SIDE UPPERMOST.

Spurgeon:

When the Italians paved some of those paths by which we climb to their villages, they must have carefully turned each stone with its most awkwark side uppermost, for they have produced the roughest of rough roads. One is apt to think that we might have done better; certainly we could not have done worse. With every-day life we meet with individuals who appear to turn the worst side uppermost in reference to everything; they magnify difficulties, they discover imperfections, they create irritations, and in general they make the most of everything. If an ill word can be said, they say it; if a fault can be found, they spy it out. Good souls what are you at? Is there not enough of care and sorrow in the world already? Better far would it be if half your ingenuity were expended in smoothing the road, instead of all of it being wasted in making the way of life more stony than it need be."

CHRISTIAN COURTESY.

Ral. Christian Advocate:

Ministers and laymen ought to be careful to observe ministerial and christian courtesy. A proper, careful observance of the Ethics of Christianity would prevent much confusion, keep down much strife, promote much good feeling and be conducive to the temporal and spiritual welfare of the children of God in general. A man never loses in the estimation of others, or in his own self-respect, by being polite. Christians should take the lead in such matters.

SCHOOL ECONOMY.

Norfolk Ledger:

The bad example of gaudily, profusely, or extravagantly, dressing young girls for school commencements is one of the crying evils of the day. It is out of place—encourages the already too prevalent ides of the importance of fine dress—causes those girls not able to compete in style and quality of a get-up to remain at home, or plunges their parents into a sea of debt and trouble in order to make a vain, foolish exhibition of their daughters to a gaping, critical, crowded audience for two hours.

THE RIGHT KIND OF RELIGION.

Covenant:

"Well, have you got any religion, to-day?" asked a Christian friend of a Vermont shoemaker, somewhat noted for the simple and joyous earnestness of his religion. "Just enough to make good shoes, Glory to God!" said he in reply, as with an extra pull he drew his thread firmly to its place! That's the kind of religion we want! A religion that makes each one faithful to his work; that rules behind the counter as well as in the church; that guides the cobbler as he patches the old shoe of his poor customer, as truly as the visitor of the "sick and in prison," and that never puts the big potatoes only on the top!

DOING RIGHT.

A man who loudly calls attention to the fact that he has resolved to "turn over a new leaf" in his life is not always to be trusted. He who perpetually makes good resolutions is pretty sure to break them. People should reform, if it be necessary to do so, at once, and without parading their intentions before the eyes of the world. They should go to work silently, and with a firm determination to carry out, no matter how trying or hard it may be at first, those virtuous designs which they deem necessary for their welfare. They should not look for applause from the world; their highest reward will in due time come for the good they have done for themselves or others; meanwhile they will enjoy that which assuredly is a sweet and precious possession—the consciousness that they are worthily fulfilling the object for which they were brought into this world. A more odious form of conceit than this bragging about self-reform does not exist, and no effort should be spared in order to stamp it out. Let those then who wish to improve, labor to that end in silence and in sincerity; success is sure to crown their efforts. But they should not vaunt their excellence in the eyes of the world.—Banner.

OPPORTUNITIES.

Many Christians seek opportunities for service to the Lord, forgetful that in the very line of their present daily work is the chief opportunity for such service. To carry God's thoughts into our business is not only to please him, but also to give the world a convincing proof of the beauty and excellence of his character. Work of the humblest possible sort, done according to God's plan, will be faithful, honest work, acceptable and pleasing to man as well as to God. To labor under His eye, and with wills fully yielded to Him, makes us diligent in business and wise in our methods. No slighted, half done work is turned out by men under such a Master. To thus have God in all our work, we have only to be wholly in His hands. There is absolute, unqualified surrender to Him involved that costs sharp self-denial, but since the result is peace, and success, and obedience, we can well afford the decisive act that makes us wholly His.—Domestic Journal.

MUST PRAY.

An avowedly unbelieving officer confessed: "When the bullets have been whizzing past my ears, and the shells bursting on every hand, and my comrades have been falling on my right and on my left, it is an uncommonly curious thing, but at such times I always begin to pray. I am not a praying man—I do not profess to pray—but always when I have been in danger of that sort, and think that I might possibly die very soon, I instinctively begin to pray."

Ah! that is what most people do. That is what many people would do very soon now, if they were told, for example, that the Master would be here at three o'clock this afternoon.—Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Items from the Christian Observer:

Rev. E. Brantly, late of Lowryville, S. C., has moved to McMinnville, Tenn., and will take charge of the Presbyterian Church at that place. Correspondents will please note the change of his address.

At a meeting held in Kirkwood church, Mercer county, Ky. including the first and second Sabbaths of August, there was an addition of twenty-two members, one by letter. Rev. Dr. Lapsley was present and did the preaching. Rev. Mr. Betts preached once for them.

The good work that has been planned in the South Frankfort vicinity is progressing well. Several members of the old Franklin church have moved into this town, and they design the erection of a new house of worship more accessible to their families than the old one in the country. A lot has been purchased at an expense of $1,400, and services have been commenced in the High School building.

Rev. A. M. Frazer, late of Sumter, S. C., has arrived, and is preaching for them with much acceptability. There is abundant room for a good work in that place.

The postoffice address of Rev. Jas. W. McClure will be at Lexington, Ky., until about 15th of September, and after that Rock Hill, S. C.

Items from the St. Louis Presbyterian:

Rev. M. G. Gorin writes from Memphis, Mo. "At our recent communion service, four persons were received on examination and two by letter. Two infants were baptized."

Rev. W. S. Trimble will give half his time instead of one-fourth to the Church in Alexandria. Correspondents are requested to note the change of postoffice from La Belle, Mo., to Alexandria, Mo.

Rev. D. MacGregor, pastor of the Lamar Street church, Houston, Texas, who is visiting Europe for his health's sake, writes us from Edinburgh on the 2nd inst.:

I am safely here, much improved in health, as is Mrs. MacGregor. * * * I met Dr. Welch, from Little Rock, and enjoyed some of his company every day for a week. He left last week from Leith for Rotterdam. * * The summer is cool, but promises a good harvest.

On Saturday, July 29th, the first session of the first round of Sabbath School Institutes for Abingdon Presbytery, was held in the Second Presbyterian church of Bristol, Tenn., of which Rev. J. W. Rogan is pastor. Rev. W. E. Hill, Superintendent of Sabbath Schools for the Presbytery, conducted the exercises, which were interesting and profitable. Among the ministers present were Rev. Dr. Tablock, Rev. A. D. Tablock, Rev. J. A. Wallace, and Rev. J. W. Rogan. Rev. Mr. Clark of the Baptist Church, a man of Sabbath School zeal, gave efficient help. There were about 250 or 300 persons present on the interesting sessions which closed Monday night, August 2nd.—Central Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

The First Presbyterian church of Leavenworth, Kan., have just dedicated their new house of worship, which has seating capacity for 500. The building is well adapted to public worship; the ventilation is perfect. The improvement has cost five thousand dollars, and every dollar of it was secured before one blow was given.—Baltimore Presbyterian.

The Rev. Silas H. Ashmun, a member of the Presbytery of Nebraska, died on the 22d of July, at the age of 70. He was on the infirm list.

The Rev. J. Gordon Jones, a member of the Presbytery of Monroe, died at Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin, July 15.

ASSOCIATE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

The Rev. Dr. J. I. Bonner, editor of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian, has returned in greatly improved health from the mountains, where he spent some months.

Rev. Dr. A. Ranson died at his home near Huntersville, N. C., on the 12th inst.

REFORMED EPISCOPALIAN.

The Reformed Episcopalians are reported as having among the colored people of South Carolina seventeen congregations, with a total membership of 1,200. Six missionaries are also laboring in the field.

LUTHERAN.

The Southern Home says that the Lutheran church of Charlotte, N. C., has recalled Rev. E. A. Wingard. It is not known whether he will return.

Rev. Dr. W. S. Bowman of Charleston, S. C., has received a unanimous call to the Lutheran church in Savannah, Ga.

BAPTIST.

The First African Baptist church numbers about forty-seven hundred members. Seven hundred propose withdrawing to form a new organization.

Rev. E. F. Merriam, late of Livermore Falls, Me., will assist Dr. J. N. Murdock, secretary of the Baptist Missionary Union.

In Stockholm, Sweden, there are two Baptist churches, and there will soon be a third.

CONGREGATIONAL.

In the Congregational house at Boston there are 20,000 volumes and 100,000 manuscripts pertaining to the history and theology of Congregationalism. The building stands on the spot where the first stone house in Boston was built 217 years ago.—Christian Intelligencer.

The seven largest Congregational churches are Plymouth, Brooklyn, 2,549 members; Chicago, First, 1,193; Central, Brooklyn, 1,048; Broadway Tabernacle, New York city, 968; Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, 966; Church of the Disciples, New York city, 847; Oberlin, First, Ohio, 743.

METHODIST.

The Theological School of Boston University received five thousand dollars from the legacy of Daniel Fish.

The Presbyterian says: "Ocean Grove was started only eleven years ago by a handful of Methodist preachers and laymen with only a few hundred dollars, and now the assessed valuation of property there (and at Asbury Park, its twin sister,) is about $3,000,000. Its postoffice showed 250,000 letters received and sent last year, and its railroad office over 500,000 tickets to and from there."

REFORMED (DUTCH.)

Rev. C. R. Blauvelt, late editor of the Christian Intelligencer, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Reformed Church of Hyde Park, N. Y.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

The Churchman says it is feared that the altar, costing $8,000, given as a memorial to St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church, Rochester, has been lost at sea. It is a singular fortune if it be so, as the one whom it was given to commemorate, Mr. Mumford, died at sea.

The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral in Omaha, Neb., is to have three great windows as memorials of three great missionary bishops—Selwyn, Patterson and Camper. There are to be thirteen other windows in the Cathedral, with paintings of the Saviour and Apostles. The Cathedral was designed by Mr. Harrison, the architect of the Stewart Memorial Cathedral in Garden City, L. I.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Rev. Mark S. Gross, a Catholic priest of Wilmington, N. C., has declined the appointment of Bishop of North Carolina, conferred by the Pope. The cause assigned is that ill health unfits him for additional or more onerous duties than those which at present engage him.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The 221st Session of Orange Presbytery will be held in Reidsville, N. C., on the first Wednesday of September, (first day), 1880 at 8 p.m.

A large cypress drawn from the river bottom above Kinston, last year, by Gen. Ransom's derricks and thrown out on the bank, becoming dry, was floated down the river last week by the freshet, and captured at Parrott's mills here at Kinston, and sawed up into lumber. It measured 75 feet in length and the sap, being rotted off, turned out about 3,500 feet of heart lumber.

Mrs. Elizabeth Overcast, an aged lady of Atwell township, was bitten on the little finger by a "Copperhead," snake, Friday morning, and died from the effects of the bite on Sunday morning. She was pulling grass from around her cabbage stalks when bitten. Whiskey, in this case, was liberally used, and there were two physicians brought in; but all remedies failed. She died in about forty hours.—Carolina Watchman.

The value of the velocipede or bicycle as a means of personal transport has been shown by the ride across Europe of Mr. Ivan Zinertych, who left London on the 7th or 8th of June and rode to Dover. From Ostend he started on the 10th, and after a journey of 1,500 miles over bad roads in Belgium and good roads in Germany, he reached Pesth on the 30th. Thus he accomplished about eighty miles each day, in spite of some wet weather and without any mishaps to himself or his bicycle.

Mr. John W. Pelletier of Carteret, president of the Midland (N. C.) Railway Company, offers to lease the Atlantic & N. C. R. R. for forty years, paying therefor $1,225,000. He designs making it a link in the railroad from Fayetteville to Morehead. The portion between Fayetteville and Goldsboro he proposes to build on a subscription of $100,000, and the proceeds of bonds issued, for which the entire road is to be mortgaged. At Fayetteville he proposes to contract with the C. F. & Y. V. on terms mutually advantageous for conveyance of freight and passengers. He guarantees also to maintain a line of steamships between Morehead and New York.—Fayetteville Examiner.

The blackberry crop in this State is good this year. It probably is not known by many of our readers that North Carolina leads in the berry crop. A gentleman informed us this week that he bought and shipped 9,000 barrels last season. This is a large quantity and was only the purchase of one man. If the crop in this State were to prove a failure the other States could not supply the demand, for there are probably not more than 4,000 barrels put on the market outside of this State. Virginia's crop is about 1,500 barrels and that of Tennessee about the same, while in the mountains of Pennsylvania there is a small crop. The finest berries put on the market are from the latter place mentioned; these generally command one cent more on the pound than berries from any other section.—Piedmont Press.

CUT THIS OUT AND SAVE IT.

If those persons laboring under disease proceeding from vitiated humors in the blood; causing Ulcers, White Swellings, Coxalgia or Hip Joint Disease, and the class of diseases termed Scrofulous, proceeding from hereditary taints, where the bones are destroyed, defying the usual treatment of physicians, will procure Swaim's Panacea, they will find a remedy which has saved thousands of lives; and thoroughly tested by the late Professors Chapman, Dewees and Gibson of the old University of Pennsylvania; besides hundreds of medical men eminent in their profession, continues to be a "forlorn hope" to sufferers worthy of its fifty years' reputation.

Swaim's Panacea is imitated and a preparation sold for it by druggists with a name somewhat similar. Purchasers therefore must be careful and see they get that containing the recommendations of the distinguished professors alluded to. It is seldom advertised in our public papers.

She has left her impress on the present, and we cannot doubt upon coming generations. Herself childless, she is represented in various parts of the country by those whose education she conducted and whose character she formed. Her love to the Saviour was simple and fervent, and her devotion to the church, as His body and for His sake, uniform and abiding.

The death was just what might have been expected from such a life—sustained, peaceful, submissive, and gently expectant of the coming glory.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Speak Gently.

BY F. A. HASSLER, M. D., PH. D.

Speak gently! There may come a time,
You'd give the wealth of every clime
That harsh word to recall.

Speak gently! You know not the day,
That soul may pass in death away
And you stand by the pall.

Speak gently! Life is quickly flown,
Let not harsh word by you be thrown
To mingle in its gall.

Speak gently! Let not anger say—
What you may after wish away,
Or never said at all.

Speak gently! You may gain a friend,
And anger at your bidding bend,
If but your words be mild.

Speak gently! Thus the Saviour spake,
And you must Him your pattern make,
If you would be His child.

Speak gently! Mar not your own life
With words of anger or of strife,
For they re-act on you.

Speak gently! Keep your lips from wrath,
Let it not dwell within your path,
But all your life be true.

A Princely Boy.

In the palace of a small German capital a German duchess, distinguished for her good sense and kindness of heart, was celebrating her birthday.

The court congratulations were over, and the lady had retired from the scene of festivity to the seclusion of her private room. Presently she heard light foot-steps coming up the stairs

"Ah," she said, "there are my two little grandsons coming to congratulate me."

Two rosy lads of ten or eleven years of age came in, one named Albert, the other Ernest. They affectionately greeted the duchess, who gave each of them the customary present of ten louis d'or (about forty-eight dollars), and related to them the following suggestive anecdote:

"There once lived an emperor in Rome who used to say that no one should go away sorrowful from an interview with a prince. He was always doing good and caring for his people, and when, one evening at supper, he remembered that he had not done an act of kindness to any one during the day, he exclaimed, with regret and sorrow, 'My friends, I have lost a day.' My children, take this emperor for your model, and live in a princely way, like him."

The boys went down stairs delighted. At the palace gate they met a poor woman, wrinkled and old, and bowed down with trouble.

"Ah, my good young gentlemen," said she, "bestow a trifle on an aged creature. My cottage is going to be sold for debt, and I shall not have anywhere to lay my head. My goat, the only means of support I had, has been seized, pity an old woman, and be charitable."

Ernest assured her that he had no change, and so passed on. But Albert hesitated. He thought a moment of her pitiable situation, was touched by her pleading looks, and tears came to his eyes. The story of the Roman emperor came into his mind. He took from his purse the whole of the ten louis d'or and gave them to the woman. Turning away with a heart light and satisfied, he left the old woman weeping for joy.

The boy was Prince Albert of England, justly called "Albert the Good."—Selected.

A Feast by Moonlight.

It was a beautiful summer evening; the sun had just set, leaving the west all crimson and gold, and in the east the white, nearly-full moon was a little way above the tops of the apple trees down in Farmer Martin's orchard.

"Isn't it a lovely evening?" cried Alf Goodwin. "It's going to be bright moonlight, so let's have some fun before we go to bed."

"All right!" cried half-a-dozen of his comrades. "What shall we do?"

"Who likes water-melons?" was Alf's apparently out-of-the-way question.

There was but one answer from all: "I do."

I know where we can get some splendid ones that will not cost us anything," replied Alf, mysteriously.

"Oh, Alf, you don't mean to steal 'em?"

"No, Fred Crawford, I don't, I mean to take them. Farmer Martin has got loads and loads of them in his south field; and he told me today that if I wanted any, to come to him and he'd give them to me."

"Oh," said Fred, very much relieved, "that's another thing."

"Now it will be a great deal more fun to slip into his field by-and-by and help ourselves, then sit down in the orchard and eat them as if it was a picnic, than it would be to take them home and eat them with our folks, and have our mothers scared to death for fear they will make us sick."

"That's so, Alf! It isn't any harm to take one or two water-melons any way; they grow so easy that the farmers don't have any trouble with them. Besides, I've heard my father laugh often and often over the fun he used to have when he took water-melons at night out of somebody's field; and I know if it had been wrong he wouldn't laugh over it now," said Charlie Sterling.

"Of course he wouldn't! It's only a lark; Farmer Martin is just the man to appreciate it, too," cried Alf.

Alf Goodwin was always up to mischief of some sort, although he was not really a bad boy; his misdeeds came from his love of fun, and not from a cruel or malicious disposition.

So the six boys slipped quietly down to the south field, and had a fine feast in the bright moonlight; the melons were large, abundant, and ripe, no one came to disturb them, and they had a "real good time."

But after he had gone to bed that night, Fred Crawford began to realize what he had done. If Farmer Martin did give the promise Alf spoke of, he did not intend it to have been fulfilled in that way; they had deliberately committed theft. He tried to excuse himself by thinking that the others overpersuaded him; but he could not forget the warning, "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not;" nor did the fact that he did not pick a single melon himself excuse his guilt, for he kept thinking of the proverb, "The receiver is as bad as the thief."

After lying awake until nearly morning, Fred decided that he must take the dollar that his aunt had given him as a birthday gift, and must give it to Farmer Martin in payment for the melons; for, though he had not eaten them all himself, it was just possible that if he had firmly refused to accompany Alf, the expedition might have been abandoned. One boy frequently has great influence for good as well as for evil.

Farmer Martin was a generous, kind-hearted man; he was always ready to share his good things with less fortunate neighbors; but when he went into the field early the next morning after the boys' moonlight feast, and saw the rinds of eight or ten fine water-melons, he was vexed, and he determined to punish the marauders.

He had hardly finished his breakfast, however, before Fred came to him and said,—

"Mr. Martin, I did something last night that I am very much ashamed of now, and I want to make up for it as far as I can. I—and some other boys—stole some of your water-melons. We did it just for fun, and hardly realized that we were stealing; but now I see that we were, and I want to pay you for them."

"That's honest!"

"I wish I'd been honest sooner! How much are water-melons apiece?"

"I never sold any myself. How many do you think you ate,—three?"

"Oh, more than that!"

"Who was with you?" asked the farmer, to see if Fred would be mean enough to expose his comrades.

"Please don't ask me; I can't tell that. There were six of us."

"You couldn't have eaten more than one apiece."

"But some we opened and threw away."

"Because they were bad; well, I'll not charge for them. Melons sell by the quantity for ten cents each, so as you are going to pay for the lot, I will let you have them at wholesale prices."

"Thank you, sir; here's sixty cents. And —please forgive me, and"—

"Of course I will! God forgives us when we repent, and there is no better sign of repentance than restitution," answered the farmer, heartily, and Fred ran off with a lighter conscience.

Just before school broke up that afternoon, Mr. Martin sent an invitation for teachers and scholars to be in his melon-field at seven o'clock that evening. I am glad to say that before that hour Alf also went to him and confessed his dishonesty, though he was rather late about it.

The farmer forgave him, too; but he was punished by hearing Mr. Martin say to the assembled scholars,—

"Boys and girls, fall to and eat as many water-melons as you can! This is a treat in honor to Fred Crawford, because he had the courage to confess a fault and the sincere repentance to repair it as far as he could. We are all liable to fall into sin; may God give us grace to repent and make amends while we can."

Fred enjoyed those melons.—Francis E. Wadleigh in Christian Register.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Useful Information.

Miss Juliet Corson, the celebrated teacher of the art and science of cooking, gives the following directions. They were prepared for a meeting at Willimantic, Conn. The directions are worth a trial:

HOW TO PREPARE A STEAK.

We hear a great deal about that "abomination called fried steak." I will tell you how to make tough steak tender, and how to fry it so that it will be juicy. Do not pound it, either with a rolling-pin or a potato-masher, or even with that jagged piece of metal or crockery ware which house furnishing dealers will try to delude you into buying. If you do pound it you will only batter its fibres and let out all its juices. Pour into the bottom of a dish three tablespoonfuls each of vinegar and salad oil, sprinkle on them half a saltspoonful of pepper (and a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, if you have it). Do not use any salt. The action of the oil and vinegar will be to soften and disintegrate the tough fibres of the meat without drawing out its juices. The salt would do that most effectually and harden the fibres beside. You may add a teaspoonful of chopped onion if you like its flavor. Lay the steak on the oil and vinegar for three or four hours, turning it over every half hour, and then saute, or half-fry it quickly; season it with salt after it is cooked, and serve it with a very little fresh butter, or with the gravy from the frying-pan. If you follow these directions and do not try to improve upon them you can have tender steaks hereafter at will.

HOW TO BROIL A STEAK.

Do not season it before cooking, as the action of salt upon its fibres is to extract their juices. Have the fire hot and clear, the gridiron perfectly clean, and after the meat has been put upon it, tip it towards the back of the fire (unless it is provided with a ledge to hold the drippings), otherwise the fat dropping directly on the coals will burn up and blacken it with smoke. Expose one side of the meat to the fire, as close as it is possible to hold it without burning, until the surface is so completely seared that the juices do not escape; then turn the meat and carbonize or sear the other side; after that finish cooking it at a little distance from the coals, until it has reached the desired point. To ascertain this do not cut into the meat, or you will let out the juices; press your fingers upon its surface, lightly and quickly; if it is quite rare, the fibres will still be so elastic as to spring up quickly the instant the pressure is removed; if it is medium rare the fibres will be so far hardened that they will partly resist the pressure at first, and when the fingers are removed, will rise again very slowly; if it is well done it will seem quite firm under the touch, and will not rise again when the fingers are lifted. In turning the meat do not stick a fork into it, because the holes made by the prongs afford an outlet for the juices: use a gridiron or broiler, so that you can turn that and the meat at once; if the gridiron is one of the open kind, take the meat between the blades of two knives or spoons to turn it; or use steak tongs, if you have such an instrument.

Why is the Sky Blue?

How does the blueness of an unclouded sky originate? We may best explain it by means of an experimental illustration. Upon a sheet of black glass or a surface of black japanned metal place a drop of milk, diluted if necessary —which will seldom be the case—with a drop of water. The milk is a cloudy medium; its minute particles reflect certain rays of very short wavelength—those toward the more refrangible or blue end of the spectrum; therefore, by reflected light, a drop of milk on a dark background appears blue. So, through a delicate skin, and a series of translucent but not transparent membranes, the light reflected where the dark background of a vein filled with venous blood exists, is blue. So, also, the translucent, but not absolutely transparent tissue of the iris of the eye often reflects a blue light, there being in this instance also a background of a black pigment, but no real blue coloring matter whatever. The blueness of the sky has a similar origin. Against the dark background of infinite space, a translucent medium is placed; this medium is the atmosphere. It is never transparent, countless millions of minute particles, chiefly of water, being suspended in it. When these particles are of a certain degree of minuteness and uniformity they arrest the free passage of white light; this they do by a peculiar kind of "interference." Each minute foreign particle of water gives rise to two reflections, one on each surface—one external on the anterior surface; one internal on the posterior. These reflected rays, passing from air into water, and from water into air suffer different retardations, and, on emergence, cause the usual phenomenon of interference, namely, the production of color. When the particles thus affecting the incident light are sufficiently minute and sufficiently numerous, the proportion of reflected green, blue, and violet rays, which together give the color sensation of blue, predominates greatly over the red, orange, and yellow rays, with their longer undulations. Thus the reflected light of the open sky is blue; but let the thickness of the larger, or number of the reflecting particles increase, and the blueness of the light decreases, for the solar light, which has been deprived by the kind of reflection just described of a great proportion of its more refrangible rays of short vibration, has become yellowish, or orange tinted and is no longer capable of furnishing an excess of blue rays. From this cause we see that while the light of the zenith is a distinct blue, it becomes gradually of a less pronounced tint toward the horizon, where it would be white in other conditions did not there produce other modifications of the reflected light. This exquisite gradation of tone in the sky is often missed by unobservant painters who think that the same mixing of some blue pigment will do to represent the color of the whole sky shown in their pictures.—Technical Education.

A Funeral Procession of Ants.

One day a little boy of mine, about four years old, being tired of play, threw himself down on a grassy mound to rest. Shortly after I was startled by a sudden scream. My instant thought was that some serpent had stung him. I flew in horror to the child, but was at once reassured on seeing him covered with soldier ants, on whose nest he had laid himself down. Numbers of the ants were still clinging to him with their forceps, and continuing to sting the boy. My maid at once assisted me in killing them. At length about twenty were thrown dead on the ground. We then carried the boy indoors. In about half-an-hour afterwards I returned to the same spot, when I saw a large number of ants surrounding the dead ones. I determined to watch their proceedings closely. I followed four or five that started from the rest toward the hillock a short distance off, in which was an ants' nest. This they entered, and in about five minutes they reappeared, followed by others. All fell into rank, walking regularly and slowly two by two, until they arrived at the spot where lay the dead bodies of the soldier ants. In a few minutes two of the ants advanced and took up the dead body of one of their comrades; then two others, and so on, until all were ready to march. First walked two ants bearing a body, then two without a burden; then two others with another dead ant, and so on, until the line was extended to about 40 pairs, and the procession moved slowly onwards, followed by an irregular body of about 200 ants. Occasionally the two laden ants stopped, and laying down the dead ant, it was taken up by the two walking unburdened behind them, and thus by occasionally relieving each other, they arrived at a sandy spot near the sea. The body of ants now commenced digging with their jaws holes in the ground, into each of which a dead ant was laid, where they now labored on until they had filled up the ants' graves. This did not quite finish the remarkable circumstances attending this funeral of the ants. Some six or seven of the ants had attempted to run off without performing their share of the task of digging; these were caught and brought back when, they were at once killed upon the spot. A single grave was quickly dug, and they were all dropped into it.—Frank Buckland.

Humorous.

Atmospherical knowledge is not thoroughly distributed in our schools. A boy being asked, "What is mist?" vaguely replied. "An umbrella!"

A Hardshell Baptist preacher was on an Alabama river steamer, in the old days of racing. The captain, seeing a rival boat half a mile ahead, began to curse, and order tar, pine-knots, bacon, etc., to be thrown in, to kindle the fire as hot as possible, and as the steam got higher and higher, the fatalistic preacher edged his way farther back on deck. The jolly captain, seeing this, tapped him on the shoulder and said, "Hallo, Brother H. I thought you was one of them fellers what believes that what is to happen will happen." "So I do," said the preacher, "but I'd like to be as near the stern as possible when it does happen."

One day our dog Towser was a lyin' in the sun trine to sleep, but the flies was that bad he couldn't, cos he had to catch 'em, and bimeby a bee lit on his head and was working about like the dog was his'n. Towser he held his head still, and when the bee was close to his nose, Towser winked at him like he sed you see what this buffer is doing', he thinks I am a lilly of the valley which ain't opened yet, but you just wait till I blossom and you will see some fun, and sure enough Towser opened his mouth very slow so as not to friten the bee, and the bee went into Towser's mouth. Then Towser shet his eyes and his mouth too, and had begun to make a peaceful smile when the bee stung him, and you never see a lily of the valley ack so in your life.

STATE NEWS.

Durham has bought a No. 2 double cylinder fire extinguisher. Durham is an enterprising town.

The colored people will hold their Fair at Raleigh on the 27th of September, prox. Fred. Douglass is expected to deliver the address.

It is said that more applications have been made to enter the University at its next session than have been made at any one time since the war.—Chapel Hill Ledger.

The Cape Fear Banner, heretofore published in Fayetteville, will henceforth be published at Laurinburg, N. C., under the same editor, H. E. McDuffie, Esq., as the Laurinburg Enterprise.

We are glad to learn that no considerable damage was done during the freshet to the bridge across the Neuse. That at White Hall at one time seemed in danger, but prompt work in removing obstructions saved it, and the bridge is but little damaged.—Goldsboro Messenger.

Tuesday night last our town was startled by most fearful cries of distress. Many persons quickly ran to the place, and discovered Joe Roark (colored) weltering in his blood, from wounds on his head and in his back. It was soon ascertained to be a case of most cowardly and brutal assassination.—Lincolnton Progress.

On Saturday night last the house of Capt. George Waitt was entered by burglars, and the pocket-book taken from his pocket at the foot of the bed. His wife's trunk was opened and a lot of silk handkerchiefs taken therefrom. The thieves then passed from Capt. Waitt's bedroom to the parlor and turned things up generally, carrying off a silver cup.—Raleigh News.

Robert Perry, a white youth, some seventeen years of age, was drowned on Saturday, in Granville, almost on the Wake line. He was bathing in the mill pond of John Chappell, and dived from the bank. He never re-appeared alive. When his body was recovered, after some hours, a wound was found in his temple, and he must have struck a rock or a snag under the water.—Raleigh Observer.

We got a good one on Capt. William Shaw of Washington, while down there a couple of weeks ago, which mark him "a fellow of infinite jest." His young calf died a short time before, and in order to keep the cow in her milk he had the calf stuffed and placed in a natural position across a box in sight of the cow. He sprinkles salt water on the calf and turns the mother in to lick it at stated intervals. This seems to satisfy her and she comes down handsomely with the milk.—Tarboro Southerner.

The trustees of the Goldsboro Graded school held a meeting last Tuesday for the purpose of electing a Principal of the school. A number of applications received consideration, when Prof. Alex. McIver, late principal of the Greensboro graded school, was unanimously elected to fill the position. We feel confident that the selection is in all respects a most excellent one, and we hope, will receive the cordial approval of the community.—Goldsboro Messenger.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

Young's Analytical
Bible Concordance.
A Concordance. A Greek and Hebrew Lexicon. A Scriptural Gazetteer. 30,000 various New Testament Readings, 311,000 References—118,000 beyond Cruden.
THIS is perhaps the most important work in religious literature which the present century has produced. Being designed for the simplest reader of the English Bible, though greatly helpful to scholars of the most profound learning, it is, of course, important that its cost shall be brought within reach of those of most limited means. The reception already given to our prospectus assures us that the superlative merits of the work are appreciated by students of the Word of God, and that we may confidently anticipate an extremely large sale. We have therefore decided to make the price, until further notice, lower than any work of equal magnitude and value which has ever before been published.
Price, Complete, $1.50 and upwards, in various styles. Full particulars sent free on request.

WHO WILL RESPOND?

QUINNIMONT, W. Va., Ang. 14, 1880.

Mr. Editor: It has been but a short time since I came to West Virginia and entered upon the missionary work. My field of labor is along the line of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, and lies between the New and Kanawha rivers, in Greenbrier Presbytery, and is near one hundred miles in extent. I desire to call the attention of your readers especially to this field of work.

COAL VALLEY.

In this valley, which is the western extremity of the field, is a little town of 2,000 to 2,500 inhabitants, principally miners, coal being extensively mined throughout the region. It would be difficult to find elsewhere, at least this side the Rocky Mountains, a town of the same number of people under so little religious influence, with so little regard for God, for any form of religion or for those who promote it: Dram-selling and dram-drinking, profanity, Sabbath-breaking, indeed all manner of vice and ungodliness prevail. The main strength of religions effort seems to be devoted to the colored people. They have the only finished church building in the town; a fact which, as evidence of reverence for Jehovah, reflects great credit upon them. The Episcopalians, few in number and very weak, have nearly completed a small house of worship. These little churches are the only public marks of regard for the Almighty.

PROSPECTS FOR PRESBYTERIANISM.

In the valley a little flock of Presbyterians have organized a church. Few they are in number and weak in financial resources, but they want a house of worship, and are willing to do all they can towards getting one. In preaching to them once a month, or oftener if I may, I am compelled to use a schoolroom. The field is an important one, material from which Presbyterians may be formed not scarce, and now is the time to work. Men, permanently settled, owning property, and inclined to Presbyterianism would join us and take hold of church matters with a zeal and determination that would lead to great success if they were properly encouraged.

AID NEEDED.

But if a church is built now it must be done by aid from abroad. With what can be raised in the town and with the aid of friends in the neighboring towns, we shall still need help. We appeal, then, to all friends of human souls, to all who love the Lord, to help. We do not ask for large gifts. Our purpose is not to get a place to tickle the fancy, but to secure a plain building where we may have prayer meetings and in which we may build up a Sabbath school. The last is sadly needed. Many children could be brought down under evil influences if we had such a house. Cannot some of the Lady Home Mission Societies of North Carolina help us? Are there not many individuals who can and will spare us some amount, however small? The work is the Lord's. The need is great and pressing. Who will respond?

Donations may be forwarded to me at Quinnimont, Fayette county, W. Va.

ENGLISH PRISONS AND PRISONERS.

BY ALETHEA HUDDLESTON.

The Tower of London is described by Stow as a citadel to defend or command the city; a royal palace and a prison of state for dangerous offenders. It has an armory for warlike provisions, a treasury for the crown jewels, and a large conservatory for the records of the criminal courts. The Tower has long been a subject for history, and many times the pen of romance has written of its curious lore, sad events and awful crimes. In the days of the early Norman kings this Tower was need to awe the city. Almost every one has read of the fend which raged between Mandeville, Earl of Essex, governor of this great fortress, and the Londoners, in the reign of King Stephen. How the gallant citizens drove the Empress Matilda, who had gained Mandeville to her party by bribes, away from the capital on her refusal to restore the laws of Edward Confessor. The adherents of cowardly King John held this prison against barons and citizens even until Magna Charta was signed. The early history of the Tower is the history of the English court; certainly from King Stephen down to the time of James I. it was often used as a royal palace. The present called the armory is replete with interest. It contains a vast store of the modern implements for war, 200,000 stands of arms, and also an unrivaled collection of arms and armor from all periods, and a number of spoils taken in our wars. The treasury is almost a history in itself, for it contains the crown jewels (the attempt of Colonel Blood and his associates to steal them is one of the most extraordinary incidents in the annals of our country). A curious story is to be told about the jewels one of these days, of which the public as yet know nothing. The most enchaining attraction of the Tower, and which draws so many pilgrims to visit its dismal nooks, to pause with solemn stillness in the antique chapel, and linger with hushed breath in the dreary cells and corridors, is the well-known fact that for eight hundred years it has been the great State Prison of England, and during that time the sad home very often of the most illustrious men England ever gave birth to. Chaucer, More, Bacon, Fisher, Raleigh, Harrington, Eliot, Russell, and a host more, have been confined in this Tower. Of the seventy or eighty dungeons which can still be traced, there is not one free from the curse of God, for innocent men have only too often been unjustly charged and immured in those awful places. The saddest pages in our country's history are to be found scratched on the walls of the dungeons in the Tower of London. And this tower, we are told, was built from the plans of the warlike Bishop of Rochester, and commanded during several reigns by bishops. A very strange fact is mentioned by William Fitzstephen, a monk of Canterbury. He states that the mortar used in the construction of the walls of these priestly dungeons was mixed with blood, the blood of animals slain for this very purpose. If this be true, how awful, yet sadly prophetic! The best view of this fortress is obtained from the enclosed ground of Trinity House. From this point the Tower presents to the eye a mass of irregular buildings of various ages and styles of architecture. Turret and bastion, wall and ditch, chapel and barrack, are mixed together in great confusion. The central and principal object in view is the Square Tower, built by William the Conqueror. This Tower is detached from all the others, and was formerly the palace of the sovereign. It contains a suite of royal apartments, a chapel and a noble hall of audience; also council chamber. The principal entrance is by the Spur Gate. Walking over the stone bridge which now crosses the ditch, we have on the right hand the Byward Tower. Almost opposite to this on the left is the Bell Tower. It was in here that Bishop Fisher was at first confined for denying the king's supremacy. He was soon afterward removed to the fearful dungeon called the Beauchamp Tower, and from thence to the block.

It is sad to think that torture was constantly resorted to at the Tower of London to force confession or recantation of opinions. Beneath the Tower called St. Thomas' is the old passage to the Thames, by which state prisoners were carried to and from Whitehall or Westminster. The gate over this water passage thence, we are told, received the name of Traitor's Gate. How many of England's nobles, its fairest women, passed beneath that low, dark tunnel, never again to leave the fortress till they went to the scaffold! The beautiful Annie Boleyn, the haughty Catharine Howard, the aged Margaret, Countess of Salisbury, who was by form of law, butchered.

Except as a special grace, political offenders were allowed no books; paper or pens; no physician or minister of religion could obtain admission without an order, and these were granted very sparingly. Then there was close confinement. Under orders of this kind the wretched prisoners were not suffered to leave their cold, narrow dungeons for air, rest or exercise. The patriot, Sir John Eliot, was confined in one of these sepulchres by King Charles, but neither solitude nor great privations could bend the pride of his lofty soul. Sir John died as he had lived, with the expression of an unconquerable love of freedom on his lips. Since the date 1820 no person has been committed to the Tower of London. Arthur Thistlewood and others of the Cato street conspirators were the last.—Christian at Work.

RAMBLES ON PIGEON RIVER.

[From the South-Western Presbyterian.]

Ho, for Beaucatcher and the Swannanoa this bright morning! The horses are at the door and we are in the saddles and away. Quietly along Main steet, for racing and everything of its complexion is proscribed within town limits; but once on the mountain side, catching the air of the "breezy uplands," we canter gaily to the top. Could anything be fairer? Asheville, still misted by the morning, lies at our feet, rich in suggestions of happy homes. In the valley below it the trees trace for us the course of the Broad—French's Broad, they called it in the old time, in honor of the young lieutenant, its discoverer. Beyond the river lie the foothills; and east and west, north and south, the great mountains spread, blue and restful. One knows why David said, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." Involuntarily the thought leaps from the high hills, and ends the sentence—"My help cometh from the Lord."

Beaucatcher was fortified once, as its mounded summit and an old, dismounted cannon testify. But the horses are eager, and so are we, and down the mountain on its other side we ride toward the Swannanoa. Perhaps it were well not to tell how many times we gallantly conquer the steep places that tempt us by the roadside, nor how by some innocent cow-chasing we bring upon us the wrath of woman. "Tirralirra," sings Harry, as sang Lancelot by that river "flowing down to Camelot:"

"Willows whiten, aspens quiver,
Little breezes dusk and shiver,
Through the wave that runs forever."

We halt our horses midway of an old bridge, to enjoy perfectly the picturesque effect. Up stream and down till the curving river ends our vision with its "fretted banks." The interlacing branches of opposite trees form a rare green arcade. The water ripples "over strong ways" with pleasant murmur; lichened rocks are cropped here and there among the trees on either shore, and over rock and tree and glancing water, the happy sunbeams flicker. Six miles up the river and back again we ride fording it more than once for "fun" and beauty, and gaining rare supplies of both, till we find the morning hours gone, and slowly wend our way homewards through the pretty town.

Much that is beautiful in scenery becomes ours during our rides and drives. There is the view from Connolly's Hill, where the eye sweeps over the rich bottom lands of the Swannanoa, to the heights beyond, and from one of these lesser heights we see the grand dome of Craggy and the far mystic peaks of "Old Black."

But the trail of fashion's serpent glitters over all our Asheville life; and therefore 'tis with a joyous sense of freedom we find ourselves one golden morning "packed" in a wagon, en route for the wilds of Pigeon River. Gayly we drive down Patton Avenue. The boys look like amateur brigands in their mountain costumes; their guns and cartridge belts have a somewhat fierce expression, and the high top-boots and broad-brimmed felt hats but add to the effect. At Smith's bridge we cross the Broad. There the river flows quietly, and fresh young willows bend from the low banks, mingling their bright green with the darker hues of oak and aspen. We meet many an ox team, drawing a wagon whose top is suggestive of a mammoth sunbonnet, and whose occupants respond with a nod, a smile and a good-natured word, as we merrily "pass the time o' day." Our way lies through "Hominy Gap," and while we admire we wonder, "Lived there a man with soul so dead," that ever to himself he said, "This is Hominy Creek," and that "Sandy Mush?" Alas, for the lost beauty of the poetic Indian tongue that put a soul into this grand nature and made its nomenclature the echo of our thought?

We stop for lunch by the side of the brawling stream we have followed many a mile, clambering up the mountain to a mossy rock and a bubbling spring. Later in the afternoon we pause for a refreshing game of "mumble-peg;" and our driver, black as night, and hitherto as silent, is convulsed with subdued laughter at the merriment of the victors and the efforts of the vanquished to draw "the peg." It is evident the chains of civilized life are gradually dropping from us; and when, twenty miles from Asheville, we leave the stage-road at the "Ford of Pigeon," and winding up the narrow mountain way watch "the river seaward flow from the inner land," from the beckoning woods, we feel that "all hath suffered change." Oh, that I could put into words the inexpressible beauty of leafiness, of ferny flowery odors, of weird and gloomy spruce and spreading chestnut, of mossy rocks, of waters dreaming, laughing by the roadside—beauty that descends upon us like a benediction! The mountains gather about us, and for ten miles we drive through the lessening day by the river. Sometimes steep, wooded hills rise up from the water like the side of a canyon, and sometimes twisted trunks of mighty trees struggle with immense masses of rock by the river brink. The sunset lingered low adown in the red west, when through mountain clefts we saw Springdale. How fair it lay like a happy valley amid the mountains round about! How fair it lies to-day as I view it from the tent we have pitched beneath the maples down by "the hers!" Across the rocky hill I see the river dashing by, and hear in its murmurs and deep under-tones, the "Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever." The red Devon kine are browsing a few rods away. Beyond the fantastic rail-fence, there are lines of waving corn stretching across the level land; other rows climb the hill-side, and between the twain the low swell of the reaped wheat fields, with their cropped and scattered stacks. Behind the wooded hills that rise beyond the corn, Pisgah slopes up to the clouds, its summit but five miles away. Butterflies hover, birds twitter, breezes wave the grasses and rustle the boughs, white clouds drift across the sky's blue.

Among the hills, O friends, how fair the Summer days!
From dewy morn, through golden noon, till western heights
Lie glorified in purple haze.
No jarring murmur of the maddening crowd's wild strife
Doth reach us; but sweet peace and welcome restfulness,
And beauty round our charmed life.

"UNSANITARY ENGINEERING."

The medical practitioner of to-day must indeed be a man of very extraordinary talents to be able to comprehend and practice equally well all the branches which now pertain to practical medicine, to say nothing of sanitary science. Time once was when the medical profession disdained to step outside the sphere of his exclusive monopoly in curative specifics and some men belonging to it still claim the whole field as their special preserves. But happily for the well-being of mankind, under the progress of preventive medicine—the most vigorous of all the off-shoots of medical science—the know-alls are growing less and less numerous daily. The progress of sanitary science has not only won the recognition and respect of the most learned men of the medical profession, but of the most learned of all professions. The day has gone by for catering to popular ignorance as a stepping-stone for the successful medical practictioner. The broadness and continuous expansion of the field of medical science so far exceeds the bounds of any one man's capabilities of comprehension that he who would attempt to successfully cultivate the whole of it, will, of all, be least likely to make a furrow in any part thereof. In no branch of science based on its broad field would failure be more certain than sanitation; for no branch requires so much additional knowledge for its successful application. And this being true of sanitary knowledge based on medical science how utterly preposterous the conceits of college presidents and the heads of other institutions, with the health and lives of many individuals in their keeping, to reject sanitation as among the "refinements of ultra-scientific men," and abide the issue as did Princeton; and then call in the sanitarians!—A. N. Bell, M. D., in the Sanitarian.

CHISEL WORK.

MARGARET J. PRESTON.

'Tis the Master who holds the mallet,
And day by day
He is chipping whate'er environs
The form away;
Which, under His skilful cutting,
He means shall be Wrought silently out to beauty
Of such degree
Of faultless and full perfection,
That angel eyes
Shall look on the finished labor
With new surprise
That even His boundless patience
Could grave His own
Features upon such fractured
And stubborn stone.

'Tis the Master who holds the chisel;
He knows just where
Its edge should be driven sharpest,
To fashion there
The semblance that He is carving;
Nor will He let
One delicate stroke too many,
Or few, be set
On forehead or cheek, where only
He sees how all
Is tending—and where the hardest
The blow should fall,
Which crumbles away whatever
Superfluous line
Would hinder His hand from making
The work divine.

With tools of Thy choosing, Master,
We pray Thee, then,
Strike just as Thou wilt; as often,
And where, and when,
The vehement stroke is needed.
I will not mind,
If only Thy chipping chisel
Shall leave behind
Such marks of Thy wondrous working,
And loving skill,
Clear carven on aspect, stature,
And face, as will—
When discipline's ends are over—
Have all sufficed
To mould me into the likness
And form of Christ.

CHRISTIAN "GIVING UP."

It is a pitiful thing to see a young disciple going about and asking everybody how much he must "give up" in order to be a Christian. Unfortunately, many of those who take it upon themselves to instruct him, give him the same impression of Christian discipleship—that it consists chiefly of giving up things that one likes and finds pleasure in. But a man in solitary confinement might as well talk about what he must "give up" if he is pardoned out of prison, or a patient in consumption about what he must "give up" in order to get well. The prisoner must give up his fetters, and the invalid his pains and his weaknesses—these are the main things to be sacrificed. It is true that the one has the privilege of living without work, and the other the privilego of lying in bed all day; these are privileges that must be relinquished, no doubt. And so there are certain sacrifices to be made by him who enters upon the Christian life, but they are "not worthy to be compared" with the liberty and dignity and into which the Christian life introduces us; and to put the emphasis upon this negative side of the Christian experience, as so many are inclined to do, is a great mistake.—Sunday Afternoon.

THINGS THAT HAVE PURPOSE.

"Everything that is without purpose is without beauty," says a sensible modern writer; "and although," she continues, "everything that has a purpose cannot, on the other hand, be called beautiful, yet appropriateness forms so large a share of beauty that everything which fulfills its own purpose well, may be said to have some claim to beauty." In other words, purpose is absolutely essential to the beautiful, and even when associated with elements ugly in themselves, can consecrate them and glorify them as with a touch of light from above.

This is a truth of absolutely universal application, and one which runs through all the duties of life, all the achievements of man's skill, and all the products of his art. "What is it for?" "Why does it exist?"—these are questions which we may rightly ask, in noting every object which claims our attention; and we should put such questions in no spirit of materialism or low utility, but from a deep conception that in this world nothing was meant to have no purpose or service, in God's good plan. So far as we turn our forces to the making or enjoying of purposeless things, we maltreat and fritter away gifts which were meant to have the highest use.

Not only our greatest deeds and our most prized possessions should have this element of purpose, but also our lesser actions and our most ordinary belongings. Indeed, it is in the ornaments of our houses—in the objects of art with which we like to surround ourselves, or in the many little luxuries which we gather about us and those whom we love—that we should most rigidly demand some salutary and healthful purpose. There is, as we have hitherto sought to enforce in these columns, a genuine character in personal possessions, however ordinary, and in that character is no element more essential than the element of inherent purpose. That picture on the wall what does it mean? was it chosen for any reason? does it represent a place or an act which suggests to the eye of the beholder some wholesome lesson, or presents to him a sight of that which is pure and wholesome? That popular ornament—was it bought for any inherent and soundly pleasurable quality of its own or was it selected merely because you wanted to buy something, and didn't see anything else that would answer better? That book—why is it numbered among your possessions? Is it because it helps you and instructs you, or because a book-agent at the door wearied you with his voluble persuasions? Questions like these are not likely to be asked too often, or pressed too strongly. Nor do they by any means exclude that which is simply beautiful. "A thing of beauty is a joy forever," says one poet; "beauty is its own excuse for being," says another; and so a sea-shell or a flower has as true a purpose as an Alexandrine library or a hospital for the insane. But one is quite sure to find that those who most readily excuse their meaningless possessions on the score of the mere pleasure or beauty to be found in them, are the ones who most readily surround themselves with objects which are lacking in true beauty. A really beautiful thing speaks for itself, and tells its own story in unmistakable language. It needs no excuse from those who "just thought they would buy it; what was the harm?" or from those who "don't see but it is as good as a great many other things."

The rise of a nation's character is unerringly measured by the character of its products and possessions; and a nation's decline is unfailingly marked by the pleasure it takes in purposeless trifles or mere prettinesses of detail. When its architecture, and its art, and all its achievements are purposeful, and have in them something to be told, a people is on the upward road. But when that people delights in whimsicalities and frivolities, in the eccentric and the startling, in the artful rather than the artistic, its doom is written on the wall, and it can be saved only as by fire. So it is, in a true sense, with the individual. He who does not have a why and a wherefore in the things he owns, is not only missing the real enjoyment and service of life, is not only exerting upon others an influence which is the reverse of beneficial, but is also unconsciously betraying his own most serious defects, and showing to every thoughtful beholder that his life has entered upon a "decline and fall" not less true than that of the Roman Empire.—S. S. Times.

BEARING THE CROSS.

Nearly seven hundred years ago, on a cold, rainy evening, five persons stood together in a little room in one of the poorest streets of the city of Cologne. There were four men and a little girl. It was plain they were hiding, for chilly as it was they dared not light a fire. At last the bitter cold was more than they could bear, so they ventured to make a small fire. They had scarcely begun to warm themselves when soldiers burst in and seized them all. They were taken to prison, and soon brought before the judges. Then it was found that their only crime was that they worshiped God and would not pray to the Virgin Mary or the saints. They were condemned to be burnt to death; but a pardon was offered them if they would forsake Christ. Three of the men answered at once they could die, but they could not be unfaithful to their Lord. The fourth, named Robert, hesitated; he was the father of the little girl, Arlette, and her mother had not been dead many weeks. But soon he decided like the rest. The judges coaxed and threatened Arlette. They told her they could not save her from being burnt alive, unless she promised to leave her father's religion. She answered steadily, "I cannot forsake the faith." In less than a week the five were led out to the place of execution. The four men were tied each to a stake, and fagots heaped round them. They placed Arlette against a stake, but did not tie her. Then they set fire to the fagots, and some kind-hearted man pulled the little girl away, and said he would save her from the dreadful death and bring her up not to serve her father's God. "I cannot forsake the faith," said Arlette again. And before they could stop her she ran to her father and caught hold of his hand. In a few moments Robert and Arlette were in heaven together.

You and I may be thankful that we have not to bear a cross like Arlette; but we can love the Saviour as well as she did and be as firm as she was in refusing to do anything that will grieve Him.—Early Days.

BEAUTY IN OLD AGE.

It is not every one who knows how to grow old gracefully. An aged man or woman ripening gradually and in health, and carrying the real beauty of life's decline in his or her person and disposition, is as beautiful as anything the world furnishes. We speak of prettiness of children, nor can we admire it too much. But there is in age what childhood can never furnish—a mellowness, tenderness, seriousness, sweetness, that results from a work of grace and providence through years that are left behind. And standing as the aged do, upon the further verge of life, looking across the river to the better country, and calmly waiting to be transported thither, they challenge all our reverence and awe, and inspire our devoutest contemplation. True as this is of those who mature healthfully as God sends his blessings upon their devoted lives, it is also true that there are those who do not reach their end, and whose influence is by no means so benignant. Their spirits wrinkle as well as their faces; they sour upon the life they are about to abandon, and instead of resting like a benediction on the shores from which they must so soon depart, they give up their last days to fretfulness and complaint. It is to be regretted that it is so. The sun of a human life ought to go down, if not brilliantly, at least benignly. It is a time when the fogs ought to be dissipated, when the shadows should flee away.—United Presbyterian.

THE MIGHTY CHANGE.

"When I think what a weight of iniquity this round earth is now oppressed with—even now at this dead hour of the night, when oven wickedness should go to rest—when I think what an outcry of wickedness is ascending into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth; what blasphemy, what riot, what revelry, what oppression, what murder, what sighing of the poor and needy, what ungodly mirth and feasting, what wantonness, what lust, what dishonesty and theft are now proceeding under the eye of heaven upon the round earth; and when I further think that this hath been so, it would stagger me in faith that there is a holy God in heaven above, did I not know and believe in the infinite preciousness of that most holy sacrifice of Christ which was offered and accepted from the foundation of the world. And what a thought, that this deluge of sin shall be haled out, that the long-covered hills and valleys of holiness shall again present themselves; that the slimy path of the serpent shall be cleansed out of all nations, and the alloy of hell with fervent heat be burned out of the solid globe; that the kingdom, peopled with the souls and bodies of the redeemed, shall become meet to be presented in the presence of God, shall give up to the Father, as a pure and holy oblation, and remain forever the most glorious monument of His Almighty power to save; this, this is indeed a consummation worthy that the eternal Son of God should withdraw from the bosom of the Father; and none but He were worthy, as none but He were able to travail in such a mighty work."—Edward Irving.

THE VICTORY.

It is told of a Christian woman that a friend entered her room and found her with bowed head, as if in prayer or deep, earnest thought. For a long time the silence was unbroken. At length her friend spoke to her tenderly, knowing that a great sorrow was on her heart and thinking that she might comfort her. "I have been trying to say the Lord's Prayer," she answered, "but I cannot get through it." Her friend was well aware that she had known that precious prayer, and had repeated it over and over ever since she learned it in infancy at her mother's knee. Her remark seemed strange, therefore, to her. But she explained: She had said the words thousands of times, in sunny childhood, in joyous youth, on her wedding morn, and then along the gladsome years that followed amid songs and flowers and prattling child-voices, and in the sweetness of an unbroken home circle. And they had flowed from her lips like rippling music all this while. But now a great sorrow had come. The blow had well-nigh crushed her. Deep were the shadows. She had been called to take out of her bosom and give to the Great Shepherd the most precious and tender of her joys. And now she could not get through the Lord's Prayer any more. Since the light had faded from those dear eyes she had begun a hundred times, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will—." But she could not get any further. She could not say, "Thy will be done." And it was days before she obtained the victory, and before quiet peace came again. But when it came, what deep and blessed peace it was.—Presbyterian.

A MESSAGE IN BLOOD.

A bank note bearing a message written with blood was paid into a merchant's office at Liverpool, England, some years ago. The cashier while holding it up to the light to test its genuineness noticed some faint red marks upon it, which proved to be words scrawled in blood between the printed lines and upon the blank margin of the note. Extraordinary pains were taken to decipher these almost obliterated characters, and the following sentence was made out: "If this note should fall into the hands of John Dean of Long Hill, near Carlisle, he will learn hereby that his brother is languishing a prisoner in Algiers." Mr. Dean was promptly communicated with, and he appealed to the British government for assistance to obtain his brother's release from captivity. The prisoner, who had traced the above with a splinter of wood dipped in his own blood, had been a slave to the Dey or Mohammedan ruler of Algiers for eleven years, when his strange missive first attracted attention in a Liverpool counting-house. His family and friends had long believed him dead. He was released and brought home to England.

The message of deliverance in the Gospel is a message which needed blood to be shed; but the blood shed was not the blood of the captive, but of his Deliverer.—Christian Herald.

IN THE WRONG PLACE.

Wherever a Christian cannot carry a clean conscience and his Master's smile, is the wrong place, I do not care how strong the inducement to go there, or how attractive the bribe which the tempter may offer. If conscience rebel—if conscience even whisper a doubt as to the rightfulness of going—they stay away. If we err at all let it be on the safe side. But a Christian never does "err" when he obeys his conscience and honestly aims to please his Master. The real error and the backsliding commonly begin when we begin to hush the murmurs of conscience by saying, "O, I will go just this once," or, "Everybody else goes, why may not I?" or, "If I go it won't be noticed." These are the smooth excuses which the devil always has ready for a Christian professor when he is strongly tempted toward the ball room or the sensual entertainment, or the convivial frolic of some kind. The place where he would not be expected to be is the very place where he ought not to be. "Let the lovers of pleasure more than the lovers of God gather to the carouse, or to the passion-kindling play, or to the wine feast, if they will; but Christ's smile never beams on one of His followers in such places." The eye that looked upon Peter until Peter shrunk away to shed bitter tears in the garden, often falls upon the inconsistent Christian who is spending an evening in bad company.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

We are haunted by an ideal life and it is because we have within us the beginning and possibility of it.

A man of true genius is generally as simple as a child, and as unconscious of his power as an elephant.

A smile is ever the most bright and beautiful with a tear upon it. What is the dawn without its dew? The tear is rendered by the smile precious above the smile itself.

Life's evening will take the character from the day which has preceeded it; and if we would close our career in religious hope, we must prepare for it by continuous religious habit.

Peace, peace!
Look for its bright increase;
Deepening, widening, year by year,
Like a sunlit river, strong, calm, and clear;
Lean on His love through this earthly vale,
For His word and His work shall never fail,
And "He is our peace."

A great painter had just finished a picture of the "Last Supper." He asked his brother artists to come and give their opinions. At last one spoke, on whose judgment he most relied. He said: "The most beautiful thing in the picture is the onp." "Is it?" said the painter, sadly; "then I must have it out;" and with one sweep of the brush he rubbed it over, saying: "I will have nothing more beautiful or attractive than the face of my Master!"

Love is a thing to walk with hand in hand,
Through the every-dayness of this work-day world—
Baring its tender feet to every roughness,
Yet letting not one heart-beat go astray
From Beauty's law of plainness and content.
A simple fireside thing, whose quiet smile
Can warm earth's poorest hovel to a home
Which when autumn cometh, as it must,
And Life in the chill wind shivers bare and leafless,
Shall still be blest with Indian-summer youth
In bleak November."

I have heard that in the deserts, when the caravans are in want of water, they are accustomed to send on a camel, with its rider, some distance in advance: then, after a little space, follows another; and then, at a short interval, another. As soon as the first man finds water, almost before he stoops down to drink, he shouts aloud, "Come!" The next one, hearing the voice, repeats the word, "Come!" while the nearest again takes up the cry, "Come!" until the whole wilderness echoes with the word, "Come!" So in that verse, the Spirit and the first of all, "Come!" and then let him that heareth say, "Come!" and whosoever is athirst, let him come, and take of the water of life freely.—Spurgeon.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Bishop Ryle is one of the most popular men in the English Church and the ceremonies attending his installation as first Bishop of Liverpool were unusually impressive.

It is stated at Derby that Mr. William Arkwright, who recently inherited the large and valuable estates of the Arkwright family at Sutton Scarsdale, has become a convert to the Church of Rome.

At a meeting in Liverpool, Bishop Ryle advocated Sabbath schools for the children of the upper classes, who were much inferior in their knowledge of the Scriptures to the children of the lower classes.

The Neufchatel Council of State has refused to allow the Evangelical or Free Church to accept a legacy of 17,000 francs, on the ground that such bequests would tend to nullify the law of mortmain, and give Churches unconnected with the State an influence conflicting with that of the State.

Great improvements are reported in the Holy Land. The number of houses in Jerusalem has more than doubled in twenty-five years. Bethlehem and Nazareth have the appearance of newly-built towns, nearly all the houses having glass windows, and several having clocks on the outside. Bells are allowed to be tolled in Christian churches.

A correspondent writes from Constantinople:—"It appears that the Vatican seeks to profit by the Armenian complications by pushing forward on active Catholic propaganda. Monseigneur Hassoun, Patriarch of the Armenian Catholics, has just been made a cardinal. A Christian of the East made a cardinal by the Pope! This comes to pass for the first time in several centuries."

Princess Eugenie of Sweden, sister to the reigning King, has recently invited the cooperation of various friends of the Lord's work, in order to further the interests of mission work among the Lapps. She desires to form an association of ladies in Sweden, who would contribute a stated amount for a term of years towards the support of existing missionary effort among this northern people, and for sending additional laborers among them.

It is stated that so great was the success attending the herring fishery on the coast of Scotland on Saturday night, it was found impossible to cure half the quantity of the fish caught. Serious deliberations were consequently held at Montrose, Arbroath, and other stations, and the fishermen resolved upon curing the herrings on Sunday. This was accordingly done, for the first time in the history of the fishing.

The census returns of New Zealand are about as curious as anything of the kind published in a long time. There were in the country 10 Ranters and 383 Christadelphians, while the Andersonian, Dawsonite, Glassite and Trinitarian sects had each a single representative. Of Exclusive Brethren there were only 11, and of Shakers 17. The Church of the Future had attracted but 7 adherents, and there were 2 Peculiar People, 3 Resurrectionists, 52 Spiritualists, 31 Deists, 490 Freethinkers, 30 Atheists, 7 Materialists, 49 "no religion," 94 Secularists, and 55 "doubting." There were about 133 sects of one sort or another represented in the colony. The principal denominations presented the following numerical strength: Episcopalians 173,734, Presbyterians 95,022, Romanists 58,408, Methodists 32,299, Baptists 9,159, Lutherans 5,643, Congregationalists 5,555, Primitive Methodists 3,676, and Jews 1,424. There were also 5,479 Pagans, of whom only five were women.

PRESBYTERIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL CONGRESS AT CHAUTAUQUA.

At present the Sunday School Assembly at Chautanqua, N. Y., is the grandest affair of the kind in the world. It is a power for great good. Any one who attends its varied exercises with prayerful heart will be helped onward in Sunday school work.

A pleasing feature, which we participated in last year, was the separate gathering of the various denominations there represented to consider the special aspects and needs of the Sabbath school work in their distinct churches. Such counseling together of earnest and tried workers from widely separated sections of the country must yield happy results. This year these denominational congresses were repeated, under the masterly management of that princely organizer, Dr. John H. Vincent. Rev. James A. Worden, the efficient Superintendent of the Northern Presbyterian Church Sabbath school work, presided in the Presbyterian Congress. We have received from him a note, with the attest of E. Payson Porter, Statistical Secretary of the International Sunday School Convention, in which we have an account of this meeting, and the resolutions adopted. We take pleasure in publishing them. Mr. Worden says:

"The enclosed preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Presbyterian Congress, Hall of Philosophy, Chautauqua Assembly, August 11th and 12th, inst., and publication requested in the church papers.

The attendance upon the Congress was as follows, viz: Pastors 55, superintendents of Sabbath schools 19, teachers 172, others connected with Presbyterian churches 149; total 385. The following States were represented: New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, New Jersey, District of Columbia, West Virginia, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, Kentucky and Georgia—13."

The following are the preamble and resolutions adopted. They have the true ring. We will probably have something further to say on this subject, so merely now state that we do not understand that the "broad" catholicity advocated is in any sense designed to overshadow, or shove to one side, any of the grand and distinctive teachings and vital characteristics of the historic Presbyterian Church:

Preamble and resolutions adopted by the Presbyterian Congress, Chatauqua Sunday school Assembly, August 11, 12, 1880:

In view of the needs of the time, its aggressive skepticism, the alleged conflict between science and religion, the increasing demands of missions, and the enlarged scope of the Sunday-school, it is obligatory upon the Church that she enlarge her plans of instruction and means of information, until our evangelical Christianity shall become awake to its responsibilities, and adequately furnished for the emergencies which are now upon us; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we recognize in the "Chautauqua movement" an important forward step, and that we indorse its idea as indicating the direction of that broader and better effort which is to obtain in the Church of the future.

Resolved, 2. That in our opinion it is both desirable and practicable to hold an annual assembly, at some convenient point, in the interest of the general work of the Church.

Resolved, 3. That while we would prescribe no routine for this assembly, we would recommend that special emphasis be given to three several objects, viz. (1): The spirituality of the Church; (2) The Sabbath school interest, and (3) The mission work.

Resolved, 4. That while the management of the Assembly would be under the auspices of Presbyterianism, we think its drift should be broadly catholic—interdenominational, rather than denominational—that the largest possible good may be realized for our common Christianity.

Resolved, 5. That a committee of management be appointed, to whom the whole matter shall be committed, with instructions that, if the way be clear, the first Assembly be held the last full week of July, 1881.

Signed by the Committee:

REV. S. H. WALLER, D. D., Chm'n.

THE GRAND COUNCIL.

We cannot present to our readers, we are sure, anything that will strike them as more timely than the following articles, from our Philadelphia contemporaries on the subject of the General Presbyterian Council.

Presbyterian Journal: The first idea of a Pan Presbyterian Council had its origin in an address delivered in the General Assembly in 1870, by Rev. Dr. Musgrave—by whom so many of the important movements of the Presbyterian Church of this country have been originated and carried to a successful issue. After the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, held in New York, in 1873, the idea was taken up by Dr. McCosh and others, and a preliminary meeting held in which arrangements was made for the first regular council, which was accordingly held in Edinburgh, in 1877. The plan is to hold triennial meetings—the one about to assemble in this city being the second one. It is to meet September 23d, and continue its sessions until October 3d.

It has been found impossible to secure the Academy of Music for the entire period—a part of the sessions will be held in the Academy and a part in Horticultural Hall. It is expected that some three hundred and fifty delegates and speakers will be present—coming from all branches of the great Presbyterian family, and from all parts of the world. There are some ten or a dozen subdivisions in this family, holding to the general Calvinistic system of faith and the Presbyterian polity, differing among themselves in the minor and less essential points.

According to recent statistics, there are some twenty-two thousand parishes belonging to the different organizations in the Presbyterian sisterhood. On the continent of Europe five thousand and twenty-three; in England, Ireland and Scotland, five thousand and thirty-eight; in the British Colonies, sixteen hundred and forty-one (Canada one thousand), and in the United States about ten thousand. To these must be added several hundred churches on mission fields. The ten thousand parishes in this country include a membership of over a million, and represent at least one-tenth of the population of the country. Two-thirds of the population of Scotland is Presbyterian. She carries the banner as a land of Presbyterians, and judging from her history, no Presbyterian need blush for his denomination.

Delegates are expected to come from England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, Switzerland, France, Holland, Belgium, Hungary, Italy, Australia, Canada and India. That noble convert and Christian workman, Rev. Nerayan Sheshadrai, who made such an impression at the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in 1873 is on his way to the Council. Rev. Dr. Schaff, of New York, has traveled extensively through Europe, and has been successful in securing delegates of great learning and ability from the various countries. An extensive schedule of subjects, bearing on the practical life and work of the Christian Church, has been prepared, and papers will be read upon these subjects by the various delegates from the different parts of the world. These papers and discussions cannot fail to be profoundly instructive and interesting, and of great permanent value.

Much new light will doubtless be thrown upon many subjects of practical importance. The Council does not contemplate doctrinal discussion so much as practical matters. There is no design to bring about organic union between the different denominations of this great sisterhood of churches. This might not be desirable even if possible. Immense organizations are not always the most manageable, harmonious or effective. There is a higher union and fellowship than any organization can produce—a unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace—a unity of love, confidence, fellowship, and earnest co-operation. We believe that there is a far deeper and more Scriptural union between the different denominations holding to the Calvinistic faith and Presbyterian polity, than there is in the Roman Catholic Church with all its internal conflicts, oppression and stagnation. The Council will bring information from all parts of the world concerning the life and work of the churches, and what is necessary to their greater efficiency. It will bring about a better acquaintance between the different branches of the church in different parts of the world; more mutual confidence and fellowship, and enable the various churches to work together with a better understanding. While in the freedom of true Protestantism, differences will not be covered up or concealed, we shall see how broad and deep is the underlying unity, and the churches will doubtless be greatly stimulated to more earnest co-operation in evangelistic efforts. The effect of these Councils cannot be otherwise than deep and far-reaching. Those who attend will be richly repaid for the time and money it may cost them.

The Presbyterian: The General Presbyterian Council, which is to meet in this city on the 23d of this month and continue in daily sessions until the 3d of October, will be one of the most remarkable assemblages yet held in this country. It will contain between three and four hundred delegates from the various branches of the church. They will come not only from the United States and from the Dominion of Canada, but from England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, France, Holland, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland, India, China, Australia, Africa. They will be scholarly men, many of them standing in the front ranks of learning and power.

The Council will not be clothed with any executive or judicial control over the bodies represented in it. One of the articles in its Constitution declares that it "shall not interfere with the existing creed or constitution of any church in the Alliance, or with its internal order or external relations." The fact is recognized that among the churches which, to quote another article, are "organized on Presbyterian principles, and hold the supreme authority of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments in matters of faith and morals, and whose creed is in harmony with the Consensus of the Reformed Confessions," there are conscientious differences in details. No deliverances of the body will touch on such points. And nothing inconsistent with the spirit of the articles which we have quoted will be introduced into the proceedings.

The most prominent part of the business of the body will be the reading of papers on important topics. These will cover religious questions of far-reaching current interest, and will be prepared by picked men from all parts of the world. Thus much may be said, although the programme itself of topics and writers has not yet been published. The discussions that will be intermingled with the reading of the papers will be influenced by them, and give an increased value to them. An intellectual and religious treat of the highest order may, therefore, be anticipated by those who may be able to attend the sessions of the Council. They will be thought-producing and thought-stimulating.

The ecumenical and permanent influence of the meeting will be produced most largely in two ways. The first will be through the verbal and written reports which the delegates will take back to their different localities and to the bodies which have appointed them; and the second will be through the circulation of the volume in which, we suppose it is to be taken for granted, the full proceedings will eventually appear. The former of these appeals very strongly to our feeling of brotherhood. Presbyterianism is strong in this country and in the other English-speaking lands. But in some portions of Europe it is weak and has to contend against powerful inimical organizations. Some of the best members of the Council will come from these sections. They will be, as they should be, treated with the most distinguished consideration. It will be a wonderful tonic to them to be in a body representing forty millions of Presbyterians; and they will carry strength back to their weak and struggling brethren. It will do them good to know that they are parts of a church which is so powerful elsewhere. The complete and accurately prepared volume, to which we have referred, should, of course, be hastened in its preparation and issue, and should find its way into the library of every cultured Presbyterian. The number who will be able to hear the papers and discussions must necessarily be small. Others should desire to have their telephonic reproduction.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We cordially add our endorsement to the recommendation, which has appeared in the secular papers, of Rev. Calvin H. Wiley as a successor to Rev. Dr. Barnas Sears, in the management of the Peabody educational fund. The Statesville Landmark well says:

Mr. Wiley has had long and valuable experience in educational matters, and no man would fill the office more capably or discharge its duties more conscientiously than he.

Lord Stratford de Redcliffe who died on 15th ultc, at the age of 92, will be chiefly remembered in history for his services to the government of Great Britain as minister to Turkey, and especially during the Crimean war. He was in the diplomatic service of his country a great part of his life. During the last year of the Monroe administration he was the British minister at Washington. As a great friend of missions, and one who was specially serviceable to them in the East, he should be held in grateful remembrance by all Christian people.

Delegates or others desiring information concerning the arrangements for the General Council of the Presbyterian Alliance, to be held in Philadelphia, September 23d to October 3d, should address George Junkin, Esq., who is chairman of the Business Committee, with headquarters at 1334 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

The Presbyterian calls attention to a matter that is entitled to some consideration in the proper quarter:

The twenty-four chaplains of the Navy whose names are borne upon the active list in the last Naval Register belong to five different denominations; and are apportioned among them as follows: Nine belong to the Episcopal Church, seven to the Methodist, five to the Baptist, two to the Presbyterian, and one to the Congregational. One of this number, the Rev. E. W. Hager, D. D., of the Episcopal Church, has recently died, which leaves a vacancy in the corps. Two other vacancies will occur next spring through the retirement of the two senior chaplains. We venture to suggest that the Secretary of the Navy could find good material from which to fill these vacancies among the young ministers of our own Church, which is certainly entitled to a larger representation in this important field than has hitherto been assigned it.

Dr. William Adams, who was appointed to deliver the opening sermon of the General Presbyterian Council, is very feeble and much anxiety is felt concerning him. It now seems probable that some one else will have to perform the duty. The Presbyterian says:

The deaths of prominent men connected with this Council are note-worthy. Dr. Beadle died while President of the General Committee; Dr. Boardman succeeded Dr. Beadle, and has since died; and now Dr. Adams is disabled.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

KENTUCKY ITEMS.

A kind friend sends us the following items: Rev. Dr. Bryson, of Alabama, is now at Blue Lick Springs, Ky., endeavoring to expel from his system the malaria which he contracted in his visit to the East and Palestine.

Dr. Nall's condition is still quite unsatisfactory. Frequent relapses render his friends very anxious.

The energetic ladies of the Presbyterian church at Paris, Ky., are at present engaged in raising money for a manse. No manse at present belongs to the Church, as Dr. Blanton built and owns the house which he has been occupying.

The churches at Standford and Perryville, Ky., are not willing to abide by the action of Missouri Presbytery, in declining to release Rev. J. S. McElroy from his present field; consequently they intend the prosecute their call to the popular young brother.

An interesting article to be found elsewhere on this page, supplements the news we gave last week from Swannanoa church.

MT. ZION CHURCH, RED RIVER PRESBYTERY.

Rev. Cyrus Harrington writes, under date August 18th:

"Just returned from a week's work devoted to a vacant church—Mt. Zion, Caddo parish, La. Results: thirteen sermons, baptized five children, received one baptized child of the covenant into full communion, elected and ordained Mr. John McDonald a ruling elder and Mr. McCaffrey a deacon in the church, and secured a gift of $30 in money."

Rev. D. A. McRae is working faithfully and rejoicingly at San Augustine, Texas. Under the regular and usual preaching of the Word the work is prospering. On the 21st and 22d ult. three persons were received into the church on profession of faith; seven children and two adults were baptized. Mr. McRae expected to leave on the 24th for Homer, there to meet Rev. S. F. Tenney and assist in a meeting. One note of specially gratifying character we are authorized to make: On a recent Sabbath two children of the Sunday school repeated the Shorter Catechism entire at one time.

BETHEL CHURCH IN ORANGE.

Rev. J. C. Alexander in a hurried note gives us the following gratifying news:

Have only time to say that the Lord has done and is doing great things for us at Bethel. A week ago to-day we commenced our meeting—it is still in progress—twenty-six have professed a hope in Christ. Others are still inquiring what they must do to be saved. Two or three new ones to-day.

MT. CARMEL IN FAYETTEVILLE.

Mt. Carmel church is a little more than one hundred years old, and has been in feeble health for a long time. But I am happy to say it is improving. Four more names were added to its roll last week, making twenty-four in the last twelve months. Its total membership is now seventy-four. Three elders and three deacons have been recently elected and ordained.

The first church at this place was built of plank sawed with a whip-saw. All the nails used in constructing the building were made in the home blacksmith shop. It was literally a home-made building. After various repairs it still stands, old, moss-covered and totally unfit for winter use. But the people, last week, with wonderful unanimity, determined to build a new house of worship on a much more desirable site, about one-quarter of a mile from the old house. They seem much in earnest, and if any of your well-to-do friends feel able to make us a present of the seats and pulpit, which will cost about $100, a feeble and struggling church will be greatly encouraged. If this assistance can be obtained we will soon have the church built and finished. A few years ago the Presbytery was considering the propriety of striking the name of this church from its roll. A venerable elder, McKenzie, plead in its behalf, saying, "Spare it a little longer." The good man lived to see it greatly refreshed. He recently has gone to his rest. But the church still lives, and, by the grace of God, is growing in strength and is beginning to put on her beautiful garments. S. C. A.

Wadesboro, N. C., Aug. 30, 1880.

PLEASANT HILL IN MECKLENBURG.

We have good news from Pleasant Hill church which is in charge of Rev. F. L. Leeper of Fort Mill, S. C. The Holy Spirit accomplished a gracious work at a meeting which commenced on 12th August and continued five days. The church was revived, and fourteen persons were added after examination and profession of faith. Mr. J. T. Plunket of Steele Creek preached once. The other services were conducted by Rev. R. E. Cooper and Rev. F. L. Leeper.

REV. HUGH WILSON.

In a recent issue of our paper Rev. D. A. McRae expressed a desire to know more of Rev. Hugh Wilson, who organized the Presbyterian church at San Augustine, Texas. Our esteemed correspondent, "E. F. R.," in a very interesting manner, responds to Mr. McRae's request:

"Rev. Hugh Wilson, son of Rev. Lewis F. W. and Margaret (Hall) Wilson, was the grandson of Hugh Hall and great-grandson of the first James Hall, who settled near Bethany church, Iredell county, in 1751. Rev. Hugh Wilson was born in that congregation in 1794, March 16; was prepared for college at the school of Rev. J. M. Wilson, D. D., Rocky River, N. C.; was graduated at Princeton College, N. J., 1819; studied theology at the Princeton Seminary, and graduated there in 1822. He married Ethalinda Hall, sister of Rev. Messrs. W. A. and J. D. Hall, June 12, 1822. He was licensed the same year by Concord Presbytery, and soon after was, by the same Presbytery, ordained at Bethany church, a missionary, and went on a missionary to the Choctaw Indians in Georgia. He remained there three years; then he went to the Chickasaw Nation, and established a mission on Cane Creek, 18 miles from Tuscumbia, Ala. He remained there seven years, thus spending ten years of his life among the Indians. After their removal by the U. S. government beyond the Mississippi river, he removed to Western Tennessee, where he labored five years. In the year 1837 he went on an exploring tour to the then republic of Texas, and in the spring of 1838 took his family there. He organized the first Presbyterian church in Texas, at San Augustine, in the same year. In October of that year he went to Independence, Washington county, and spent two years. In the winter of 1840-'41 he organized a church at Gay Hill, and remained there till 1850, when he removed to Burleson county. In May, 1852, he organized a church at String Prairie, to which he ministered with faithfulness and success till death ended his labors, March 8, 1868, in his 74th year, leaving his second wife a widow and two daughters orphans. He was a forcible, earnest preacher and devoted Christian. His father, Rev. Lewis F. Wilson, M. D., was buried at Bethany by the side of Rev. James Hall, D. D. His brother, Rev. Lewis F. W., died in Jefferson county, Va., March, 1873, aged 69 years, a son of whom, Rev. Edwin Lindsay Wilson, is now preaching at Gerrardstown, W. Va., and at Bunker Hill, Berkeley county. At the centennial celebration at Bethany church in 1875 it was found that more than twenty preachers of the Gospel were among the descendants of the first James Hall; sketches of whom were prepared for that occasion.

"This is in answer to a request of Rev. D. A. McRae, in the paper of Aug. 18."

COLUMBIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Upon the reception of Dr. Girardeau's letter, signifying his willingness to return to the Seminary, the chairman called a meeting of the Board of Directors to be held on Thursday, August 19th.

At the appointed time the Board met, and the letter of Dr. Girardeau was read. They then took action, which (according to the instructions of the General Assembly) enables him "to resume his charge of the chair of Didactic and Polemic Theology," and thus secures "his continuance in the Seminary."

The question of reopening was then earnestly considered. The suspension of the exercises of the Seminary was felt to be a calamity to our whole Church and there were several strong reasons in favor of opening this fall. But the difficulties in the way were many and great. Though the condition of the endowment has materially improved since May, and though the prospect for raising "The Howe Memorial" is fair, yet as the income of the Seminary is only sufficient to pay the salaries of two professors and the current expenses, there would be a deficiency of $3,000, equivalent to the salary of one professor and that of the Professor Emeritus.

The Board could hardly expect the churches to raise this amount, while the effort to raise the "Howe Memorial" is in progress. When this fund has been obtained, then there will be a yearly deficiency of only $1,000, which can and will be easily obtained. Hence the Board adopted the following resolution, viz:

"That in the present condition of the finances of the Seminary, it would be inexpedient to resume the exercises in September next; and that they be continued suspended until September, 1881, or until such further time as all salaries and current expenses can be met by the income from the endowment and such other aid as may be regarded certain."

Though the condition of the finances did not warrant the resumption of the exercises, yet they were in a comparatively good condition. Last year in May the expenses of the Seminary were found to be $11,300 per annum while the income from the endowment was only $4,300 per annum, and this while the contributions of the churches for current expenses were only on an average $2,000 per annum. Of course then the debt was large, and though several thousands of it had been paid off by the work of a special agent it would steadily increase, and to continue in this way was ruin. Hence it was very gratifying to hear that, under the present management of the funds about $4,000 of the debt had been paid in the last few months, while the income from the endowment had been increased from $4,300 to $5,500, i. e. an increase of nearly 30 per cent.

After attending to some other matters of minor importance, the Board adjourned to meet next May. CLERK.

SWANNANOA CHURCH.

Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole valley is the Swannanoa church. It crowns the summit of an isolated round green hill which swells in easy ascent from the bosom of the lovely valley whose beauty has long been celebrated in song and story—the Swannanoa. The tall, sombre pines, which surround the churchyard and darken the grass with a cool, inviting shade, have given the church the name of Piney Grove. From Piney Grove, as the midway point, the rich, level bottoms stretch away on either side of the river—westward towards Asheville eleven miles distant, and eastward toward the gap in the Blue Ridge, where, through tunnel and over trestle, the Western North Carolina Railroad enters the "Land of the Sky." From one of the doors of the church we see, on the north and close at hand, truant spurs on the great Black. From the opposite door we see, on the south, beyond the railroad and the river, the green hills of Swannanoa.

Turning from the enchanting scene without, the first object within which attracts attention as distinguishing this from the interior of most other churches of to-day is the old-fashioned box-pulpit, built high up against the wall and enclosed all around, but with steps and a door on one side for the entrance of the preacher. On the wall behind the pulpit, and facing the congregations, hangs this framed

INSCRIPTION:

"Long may this building be sustained,
A temple for the God of Love,
And children's children here be trained
For glory in the world above."

"Minister, take heed now you preach.
People, take heed now you hear."

"Dedicated on the 8th of September, 1839,
By REV. JAMES MCRER, D. D.,
In the 86th year of his age."

"How dreadful is this place." "Keep thy feet (be serious, be devout,) when thou comest into the House of God."

Forty years the author of this inscription has been sleeping by the side of the building he dedicated to the service of God. Forty years in answer to this prayer, this house has been sustained, a temple for the God of Love. But the people of Swannanoa are now rejoicing not over the beauty of their hill of Zion, nor over the preservation of their little sanctuary, nor of the antiquity of their organization as a church, but over a fresh proof of the answer to that second petition—

"And children's children here be trained.
For glory in the world above."

Most of the eyes which read that inscription when it was first placed on the wall of the church are closed in sleep. But now the children of that generation and their children's children are remembered by the covenant God, and His spirit gathers them into His church to train them for glory in the world above.

Swannanoa has for some years been regarded as a cold church—divided, inactive, prayerless, almost lifeless. But there were a few names in Sardis which had not defiled their garments. There were some knees in Israel which had not bowed unto Baal. There were some Godly men and women in Swannanoa who continued to pray during all the period of darkness and strife and backsliding and desertion of the first love. And the Answerer of Prayer has restored to us the years that the locust had eaten, and the floors are full of wheat and the fats overflown with wine and oil. There has been a great work of grace in the hearts of this people. A protracted meeting of twelve days, conducted by Brother Gammon, of Asheville, closed last Sunday (August 22d) with results which call for thanksgiving and joy on the part of all God's people. From the beginning it was evident that there was deep interest, and this dictated the continuance of the services. The wheat threshers stopped their machine. Hay lay neglected in the meadows. The congregation increased in numbers daily. In covered wagons, in buggies, on horses, on foot, they came through drenching rain or glaring sunshine, and many people seemed to say: "Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." The preacher came with a soul full of the love of the Gospel. His sermons were plain, and therefore powerful expositions of the plan of salvation: direct, pungent, tender, warm. The truth was presented. The Spirit was invoked. The blessing came. The church members were roused, and co-operated earnestly. "True revival always begins with the Lord's own people." Backsliders were reclaimed, breaches were healed, sinners inquired the way of life, and we trust many souls were born again. Forty-seven persons have professed faith in Christ, and the Lord has added to our own church forty-three of such as we believe are saved, doubling the membership. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was twice administered to the congregation, united and happy in Christian love as they have not been for many a day. Thirty children were dedicated to God in baptism, and more than half as many adults were baptized on profession of faith. The church having no regular pastor, Brother Gammon also moderated the session; and, by the way, this is a session that any church might feel proud of, consisting of Ruling Elders, Alexander, McNair and Mallard, all faithful servants in God's house.

This work of the Spirit, as everything evinces it to be, is surely the inauguration of a new and bright era for Swannanoa church and the Swannanoa valley.

Will not Mecklenburg Presbytery follow up these successful beginnings in the transmontane country? There is a yellow harvest. Send us reapers. Come in to possess the land which the Lord your God giveth you to possess it. W. W. M.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Athens—Met at Hopewell church on 12th inst. Mr. A. M. Sale, Mr. E. P. Mickel and Dr. A. D. Chenanet were licensed to preach the Gospel. Mr. Edward T. Bishop, of Athens, was received as a candidate for the ministry. The report of the Committee on Home Missions was considered. Their suggestion was adopted, that "the acreage" plan or some other suitable plan be entered upon by the churches for regular contributions to the support of the ministry, to Home Missions, and to other benevolent objects of the Church. Next meeting at Elberton, Ga., on March 8, 1880."

Western District.—Rev. J. T. Rothrock was received from the Presbytery of Columbia. Licentiate Weisel Beal was received from the Presbytery of Winchester. The name of Obion church was changed to New Hope. The following Committee on Sabbath Observance was appointed: Rev. Messrs. J. T. Rothrock, J. H. Gillespie, and Elder B. M. Cowan. Rev. J. B. Carne was dismissed to connect with the Presbytery of Memphis. Rev. W. J. Anderson tendered his resignation as evangelist.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

THE PRESBYTERY OF ROANOKE.

This body met at Boydton Va., on the 18th of August. Owing partly to the remoteness of the place of meeting, on the extreme edge of our territory, and partly to sickness in the families of at least four of our ministers, the attendance was small—but five ministers and nine ruling elders.

Rev. R. C. Reed was chosen moderator.

Mr. R. F. Boyd, finding himself providentially hindered from prosecuting his studies, was, at his own request dismissed from our care as a candidate for the ministry.

Leave was granted Merryseat and Oak Level churches to employ Mr. Thornton S. Wilson, one of our candidates, to conduct religious service for them as often as practicable during the coming session of the Seminary.

Oak Level was chosen the place for the next stated meeting, on the 27th of April 1881, 12 m.

The following was adopted, viz:

"The Presbytery of Roanoke, in session at Boydton, August 21st 1880, feeling just regret that so many of the delegates are absent from this meeting, would most earnestly urge the officers of the church to greater diligence in this important matter, so necessary to the spiritual interests of our Church.

EVANGELISTIC WORK—THE ANNUAL COLLECTION.

OFFICE OF HOME MISSIONS,
BALTIMORE, MD., Aug. 30th, 1880.

Dear Brethren:—In view of the collection for this cause next Sabbath (or as soon thereafter as may be convenient), we beg in addition to the full presentation of the subject which has been made in the Missionary, to submit the following suggestions:

1. The need of a large increase of this fund is very great. Thirty-three evangelists were in the field last year. Thirty more ought to be added at once.

2. The population of the South is increasing rapidly and the church must endeavor not only to keep pace with but to gain on it. Otherwise godlessness will increase and the future be full of peril.

3. The opportunities presented to us for rapid expansion and large usefulness are extraordinary and must be seized at once. Our Western prairies are filling up. Our Southern fields, so long lying waste, are being occupied. Our cities are becoming more populous. Large areas of country are being opened by railroads. Manufacturing and mining centres are being developed. The busy world is moving in our borders and the church must press forward with efforts to bless and sanctify the whole land.

4. This work is at our doors and must be done by us. God in His providence calls upon us to do it, and we cannot escape from the duty, except by its performance.

5. Let every minister, session and member of the church do what they can and all they can to help in this noble undertaking. There is need that every one should do his utmost to make this effort a success.

Faithfully yours,

RICH. MCILWAINE,
J. LEIGHTON WILSON, Secretaries.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

From Greece we have letters to the 18th July. All the members of the Mission were enjoying their usual health at that time. Dr. Kalopothakes had gone to Constantinople on business connected with Bible distribution. Both he and Mr. Laonta were so much improved in health that they were able to resume their evangelistic labors.

Miss Ronzone, writing on the 26th of July, gives an account of the public exercises connected with the closing of the school session. The attendance was larger than usual, and the school seems to be growing in public favor. The number of pupils in attendance during the session was forty. Dr. Turino, who will be remembered by some of our readers, was present and promised to send us a fuller account of the public examination of the school.

Our latest letters from Brazil are to the 6th July. Mr. Lane had come as far as Rio de Janeiro to see his wife and three little children sail for New York, and expected to remain there for a few days after their departure on business connected with the Mission. In a previous letter he mentions that he had just returned from Santa Barbara, where he had preached the Sabbath before, and where he had received three persons to the membership of the church. Mr. Boyle writing from Mogy Mirim, of the 25th June, states that he expected several persons to join the church at that place at an early date. His journal, published in our present issue will be read with interest. Miss Henderson's health, we are sorry to learn, is a good deal impaired, owing in a great measure no doubt, to the peculiar trials through which the Mission has passed.

From China our letters are dated Hangchow, June 7th, and from Soochow, the 28th. Mr. DuBose's letter opens with the remark, "we are all, as usual, in good health. Hope to hear soon the name of our Soochow Missionary." Mr. Davis was greatly comforted in having the means to purchase the new lot, which he regards as virtually secured. Mr. Stuart writes from Hangchow, "you probably hear from Mr. Painter himself. He is absent from his station on account of poor health, but we hear that he is improving and has a fair prospect of returning to work in the autumn. Mrs. Randolph's health is much better than it was a month ago, and we hope she will resume her work after the summer passes away. As to the rest of us we are perfectly well."

Rev. DeLacy Wardlaw and Mrs. Wardlaw sailed from New York on the steamer Para for Pernambuco, on Thursday, the 5th inst. Mr. Wardlaw is a recent graduate of Union Theological Seminary, Va., and a member of the Nashville Presbytery. Mrs. Wardlaw is the daughter of the Rev. Wm. J. Hoge, D. D., so well known to many of our readers, and who was called to his rest during the late war. We commend these Christian friends to the prayerful remembrance of all God's people.

Mrs. Lane and her three children arrived in New York on board the steamer Colorado, from Brazil, on the 25th July. They had a pleasant voyage, and Mrs. Lane, though still feeble, was much better than she was when she embarked at Rio de Janeiro. They are now at her mother's home in Rockbridge county, Va. Mrs. Lane entertains the confident hope that she will be able to return to her work in Brazil in the course of a year.

FINANCE.

The receipts for July amount to $8,091 31, exceeding those of the same month the last year by $2,431 90. It should be stated, however, that $2,500 of the above was a special gift, to which reference will be made elsewhere. The contributions from the ordinary sources are in reality $69 behind those of the corresponding month of last year.

But on the other hand, a contribution of $350 that went into the July account of last year, and which will probably come to hand soon, will show that there has been a real advance from the ordinary sources for the month of several hundred dollars. The receipts for the first four months of the ecclesiastical year, including the special gift referred to, are $7,769 52 in advance of those of the corresponding four months of last year; or may be stated as $5,269 52 in advance of those from the ordinary sources. This is an encouraging statement, for which we give thanks to God, and take courage. A similar increase during the autumn and winter months will impart new life and energy to the great cause.—Missionary.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Eclectic Magazine for September is before us. It has valuable articles from the Cornhill Magazine, Fortnightly Review, Macmillan's Magazine, Contemporary Review, The Nineteenth Century, Belgravia Magazine, Temple Bar, Fraser's Magazine, The Spectator, and Blackwood's Magazine. E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, N. Y.

Lippincott's Magazine for September is profusely illustrated, and contains: Ekonomi Scrub; Canoeing on the High Mississippi; Adam and Eve; A Villeggiatura in Asni; Horse Racing in France; Mrs. Pinckney's Governess; The Home of the Gentians; Newport a Hundred Years Ago; Studies in the Slums; Delectatio Piscatoria; The Ruin of Me; Short Studies in the Picturesque; Our Monthly Gossip; Literature of the Day. J. B. Lippincott & Co., 715 and 717 Market street, Philadelphia.

A School Map of North Carolina, by Collier Cobb, Fayetteville, N. C. Size 48x36 inches. Unmounted $4, full mounted $6. We welcome this home production. A careful examination proves its great merit, resulting from years' study of the typography, geology and history of North Carolina. Both fields, institutions of learning, location of marl-beds, coal-fields, micas and fish grounds, isothermal lines and tables of temperature, small border maps showing agricultural and mining or manufacturing sections, and geological structure of the State, &c., are clearly exhibited and constitute but a part of the riches of information here embodied, and outside of the usual matter expected in a map. It is recommended by the State Board of Education.

The N. C. Medical Journal. $3 a year. Published at Wilmington, N. C. Drs. M. J. DeRosset and Thomas F. Wood, editors. The August number contains many articles of interest. Dr. E. A. Anderson furnishes an article on Quarantine. Dr. A. favors the acceptance of the General Government's offer to establish proper quarantine buildings and facilities at the month of Cape Fear river. Dr. J. D. Roberts has a paper on Hip Joint Disease. The editorial articles, "Gelsemium Sempervirens" and "Hypodermic Injection of Quinia," will be eagerly read.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg will meet in Lincolnton on Wednesday, September 8, 1880, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Churches are advised of arrears for Presbyterial Fund, and are expected to pay their assessments in full before this meeting, or show cause of failure. R. Z. JOHNSTON, S. C.

The Presbytery of Central Texas is to meet at Bolton at 11 a. m., on Thursday, October 14. L. TENNEY, S. C.

Concord Presbytery stands adjourned to meet in Newton, on Thursday, the 30th of Sept., at 8 o'clock p. m. WM. W. PHARR, S. C.

The Southwestern Presbyterian reports the Presbyterian camp-meeting at Good Hope church, in Jones county, Miss., as the largest that ever assembled at that place, and the results as of the most cheering character.

On Sunday, August 11th, a church was dedicated at Petersburg, W. Va. Rev. Drs. H. M. White and Rev. R. H. Fleming, who had been commissioned by Winchester Presbytery, performed the duty.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

The Texas Presbyterian learns that Rev. R. M. Loughridge, who, previous to the war, was a missionary to the Creek Indians, expects to return to that field at the close of the present year.

The same journal reports as from a correspondent, the following from Corsicana church: "The Presbyterians of Corsicana have been at work lately. They have paid up all arrearages on the salary of the faithful minister, who recently was called from them to become evangelist of the Presbytery of Central Texas; have plastered the new church and done some other needed work on the building, and have called Rev. S. M. Luckett to the pulpit. Mr. L. has consented to preach for them the first and second Sabbaths in each month till January 1st, after which the church hopes to secure all or at least three fourths of his time and have him installed pastor."

Items from the Christian Observer:

Rev. W. L. Rosser closed an interesting meeting of nine days' continuance in Mount Vernon church, Presbytery of Nashville, ten days ago. There were fifteen additions, and twenty-five professed conversion who did not join. The interest was unabated at the close of the services, and had his strength held out the meeting would have been continued some days longer. Two brethren of the Cumberland Church, Rev. Messrs. John F. Patton and John Tally, kindly assisted in the services. They preached three sermons each and Mr. Rosser twelve times.

A spiritual awakening at Turnersville, Texas. Six members added to the Presbyterian church. Several added to the Methodist and to the Baptist churches.

Rev. J. W. Holt has changed his postoffice address from Point Pleasant, W. Va., to Hampden Sidney, Prince Edward co., Va.

Rev. J. D. McLean closed a week's meeting on the 18th, at Gadsden, Ala., assisted by Drs. Stillman and Sanderson. The church is greatly revived. There were three additions, and several others are expected soon. Several children were baptized at this meeting, and five others several weeks ago. Drs. Stillman and Sanderson are out on a missionary tour of one month, by order of Presbytery. All the ministers in Tuskaloosa Presbytery are to spend one month in such work.

A meeting of ten days has just closed at the Edmondson church, in the Presbytery of North Mississippi. Rev. S. I. Reid, who is supplying the church, and Rev. R. H. Crozier of Sardis did the preaching. Rev. S. I. Reid writes: "Sinners were awakened to inquire what they must do to be saved; twenty-five of these were very much interested, most of whom became satisfied to consecrate themselves to the Lord. Twelve were added to the church. Others, I think, will join us, and some will unite with other churches."

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

At the last communion of the Bridgeville Presbyterian church, four persons were added. Within a few weeks with help received from Presbyteries of New Castle and Baltimore $600 were raised.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. H. O. Ladd resigns his charge at Hopkinton, Mass., and will take charge of the academy at Santa Fe, New Mexico.

The debt on the lot of Union Congregational church, Brooklyn can now be paid. The church has recovered $21,000 of insurance money.

The Christian Union says that the Rev. M. L. Severance resigns from the Orwell Congregational church to continue soliciting for the Middleburg, Vt., college fund of $100,000.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

The late Leonard Sprague, of Pontiac, Mich., and who was for many years the senior warden of the Episcopal church there, has left to the Church Association of the diocese a fund of about $15,000, one-half of the income of which is to be distributed annually among the poor of the parish, one-third to be devoted to the ordinary expenses of maintaining the various services, and one-sixth to be divided between the various missions of the denomination.—Christian Union.

Statistics of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Pensylvania, comprising Philadelphia and four counties, show that there are in it at present 199 clergymen, 143 churches and chapels, 25,263 communicants, and an actual value of Church property of $6,600,000. The total receipts from all sources during the past year were $734,804 04.

BAPTIST.

Ten Baptist churches in California are without pastors and the number is increasing.

The late Dr. Bishop of New York made a gift of $30,000 to remove the debt from the Home Mission Society.

A lady seventy-three years of age is a teacher in the Sabbath school of the First Baptist church of Philadelphia. She has been connected with that school since it was organized sixty-five years ago. She was then in the infant class.

MORAVIAN.

Rev. Byron L. Spangh, aged 29, died very recently. At the time of decease he had charge of the Moravian church at Mt. Bethel, Va., and had appointments in the neighborhood. The Salem, (N. C.) Press from which we learn the above says:

He was an untiring worker, and the church has lost one of its most valuable young ministers. The sympathies of the whole community are with the bereaved parents and friends.

LUTHERAN.

The Virginia Synod of the Luthern church at its meeting at Mt. Jackson revoked the license of Rev. J. B. Haskell of Staunton, who with his congregation withdrew from the Synod some months ago. His Church Council met on Tuesday and resolved to stand by their pastor.—Staunton Vindicator.

COTTON PRESSES.

George Allen & Co., of Newbern, N. C., have completed their arrangement with the Patentee, and have taken the entire control of the manufacture and sale of the Farmers Wrought Iron Cotton and Hay Press.

This Press is Strong, Durable, Simple, Quick, Powerful, Cheap. Capacity 500 lbs. guaranteed, and will be sold at a low price not to exceed Eighty-five Dollars. If any of our readers are in want of a good Cotton or Hay Press, write to Geo. Allen & Co., and obtain full description of it.

DEAR BRO. MEEK, Ed'r "The Central Methodist," Catlettsburg, Ky.:
I see in the last "Central" that you want a remedy for Sick Headache. If you will use a remedy that you advertise in your paper every week, I am sure you will be greatly benefited thereby, and I believe cured. I have been a sufferer from Sick headache, I can say almost from infancy, and have tried every remedy I could get, and never found anything to do me any good until I used Simmons Liver Regulator. It has been nearly three years since I first used it, and I have not had Sick Headache since, and I have never used but two packages and a half of the Regulator. I had a sister last Spring that had from one to two spells of Sick Headache every week. I sent her half a package, and she says she has not had it since. I feel for any one that suffers with that terrible disease, and I hope you will give it a trial.

Yesterday Mr. James Williamson called our attention to a curiosity in cotton growth which is, we dare say, something which but few cotton producers have witnessed. It was a cotton stalk fully five feet in height, the body of which was hard and solid as a black jack. But this, or the like was even seen by many; the novelty in this case was that in the cotton tree a bird has built his nest and has in it three eggs. Write it to the world that Wake county is growing cotton trees in which the birds build their nests. This unusually large and thrifty stalk was raised by Mr. Beverly Williamson, of this county.—Raleigh News.

We have it from a correspondent that on the 14th inst., Lottie Ann, aged 11 years, daughter of Mrs. Mary J. Earnhardt, living near Rowan Mills, was bitten on the leg by a large copperhead snake while gathering tomatoes in the garden of her grand-father, Col. J. M. Earnhardt. The leg was tightly bandaged and the usual remedies applied, but the child suffered great pain for twelve hours, at the end of which time her grand-father went to the woods and procured a quantity of an herb known as "rattlesnake master," which was boiled in sweet milk, the milk being then given to the child to drink. In a short time she was relieved. This information may be of value to others. Our correspondent says this "rattlesnake master," made into poultices and applied to the part affected, will relieve snake-bite immediately.—Statesville Landmark.

In Newbern, N. C., on Sabbath, August 15th, 1880, FREDERICK J. JONES, in the 76th year of his age.

After a few weeks' illness has thus passed away one of Newbern's oldest and most esteemed citizens. His ancestry, originally from Wales, have long lived in North Carolina. His whole life, with the exception of a few years, was passed in Newbern, where he was one of the old County Court of Craven, and Cashier of the Bank of North Carolina. He was just entering on the 50th year of a remarkably happy married life, and his children were, except one, living happily around him. Genial, agreeable, intelligent and well-informed, with the courtly manners and address of a gentleman of the old school (alas! fast passing away), he was esteemed by both white and colored citizens. His father was one of the founders of the Presbyterian church in Newbern, and Mr. Jones had regularly attended services in the church, which he saw built in his boyhood. For many years he had been one of its Trustees, but he only became a communing member under the ministry of his son-in-law, Rev. L. C. Vass, pastor of the church. His outward walk had always been so dignified and exemplary that few knew he was not a professing Christian, and therefore the surprise was general when he was publicly received into the church. Full of years and universally honored, a large assembly gathered in the church and followed his remains to the grave, where we sadly, but in hope, left him with the Lord. May God sustain the bowed widow and comfort the children in their bereavement. L. C. V.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Safe-Folded.

O, it is hard when o'er the face
 We scarce can see for weeping—
The little, loving baby face—
 That last, still shade comes creeping;
Full hard to close the tender eyes,
 And fold the hands for sleeping.

Yet when the world our own would claim,
 It doth not greatly grieve us:
We calmly see, as days go by,
 Our little children leave us—
And smiling, heed not how the swift,
 Soft-footed years bereave us.

O, mother hearts! I count you rich
 Beyond mere earth possessing,
Whose little babies never grow
 Away from your caressing—
Safe-folded in His tender arms,
 Who gives again with blessing.

—Selected.

Bread-Baking, and the Three Warnings.

It was in the days of our grandmothers, when there were brick ovens in the land, that Mr. Hubbard bought his house, and bought it very much against his wife's will. It was a lonely house, and reported to be haunted. It was next to a graveyard, which, though unused, was not cheerful, and which had likewise the reputation of a ghost. However, Mr. Hubbard did not believe in ghosts, and was too cheerful to be depressed by warnings, and never intended to be lonely.

"Mrs. Hubbard," he said, when his wife shook her head over the purchase, "I got it cheap, and it is a good one. You will like it when you get there. If you don't, why then talk."

So the house was bought, and i to it the Hubbard family went. There was scarcely a chance for a ghost to show his face amid such a family of boys and girls. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard counted ten of them, all noisy ones.

Having once expostulated and spoken out her mind as to the house, Mrs. Hubbard gave up the point. She scrubbed and scoured, tacked down carpets and put up curtains, and owned the place was pretty. As not a ghost appeared for a week she made up her mind that there were no such inhabitants; she even began not to mind the tombstones. So the house got to rights at last, and baking day came about. In the press of business they had a great deal of baker's bread and were tired of it

Mrs. Hubbard never enjoyed setting a batch of bread to rise as she did that which was to be eaten for the first time in the new house. "For I cannot get up an appetite for stuff that nobody knows who has had the making of," said Mrs. Hubbard, "and all puffy and slumy beside."

So into the oven went the bread, and out it came at the proper time, even and brown, and beautiful as loaves could be. Mrs. Hubbard turned them up on their sides as she drew them forth, and they stood in the long bread tray, glorious proofs of her skill and the excellence of the oven, when Tommy Hubbard bounded in. Tommy was four, and when at that age we are prone to believe that anything will bear our weight. Tommy, therefore, anxious to inspect the newly-made bread, swung himself off his feet by clutching the edge of the bread-tray, and over it came, loaves and Tommy and all.

Mrs. Hubbard flew to the rescue and picked up the loaves. All were dusted and put in the tray again but one. That lay bottom upward under the table.

"A bothering child, to give me so much trouble!" she said, as she crawled under the table to get it. "O—Ah—dear, dear, dear—O—O my—"

And there on the floor sat Mrs. Hubbard, screaming, wringing her hands and shaking her head. The children screamed in concert. Mr. Hubbard rushed in from the garden, where he was at work.

"What's the matter, mother?" he gasped. Mrs. Hubbard pointed to the bottom of the loaf lying in her lap.

"Look there and see!" she said. "It is a warning, William, I am going to be taken from them all."

And he looked, and he saw a death's-head and cross-bones as plainly engraved as they possibly could be.

"It is accident," said Mr. Hubbard, "such queer cranks do come, you know."

But Mrs. Hubbard was in a troubled state of mind, as was but natural. "The stories about the haunted house were true," she said, "and the spirits have marked the loaf. I am afraid it's a warning." And the loaf was put aside, for even Mr. Hubbard did not dare to eat any of it.

Mrs. Hubbard got over her fright at last, but the news of the awfully marked loaf spread through R——, and the people came to Mr. Hubbard's all the week to look at it. It was a death's-head and cross-bones certainly; every one saw that at a glance, but as to it's meaning people differed. Some believed that it was a warning of approaching death; some thought that the spirits wanted to frighten the Hubbards away and get possession of the house again, all to themselves. This latter supposition inspired Mrs. Hubbard with courage; finally, being a brave woman, she adopted the belief, and when another baking day arrived put her loaves into the oven once more, prepared for cross-bones, and not to be frightened by them. The loaves baked as before. They came out brown and crusty as Mrs. Hubbard turned each in her hands. There were no cross-bones visible, but on the last were sundry characters or letters; what, no one could tell, until there dropped in a certain printer of the neighborhood accustomed to reading things backwards.

"By George," said he, "that is curious; that is curious—r-e-s-u-r-g-a-m, resurgam; that is what is on the loaf—resurgam."

"Well, yes," said Mr. Hubbard, being obliged to admit it. "But it is not so bad as cross-bones and skull."

Mrs. Hubbard shook her head. "It's even solemner," said the little woman, who was not as good a linguist as bread maker. "I feel confident, William, that I shall soon be resurgamed, and what will these dear children do then?"

And now that the second loaf was before her eyes, marked even more awfully than the first, Mrs. Hubbard grew really pale and thin, and lost her cheerfulness. "I have a presentiment," she went over and over again, "that the third baking will decide who the warning belongs to. I believe it is meant for me, and time will show. Don't you see how thin I am growing?"

And though Mr. Hubbard laughed, he also began to be troubled. The third baking was one of gloom. Solemnly, as at a funeral, the family assembled to assist in the drawing. Five loaves came out markless; but one remained.

Mrs. Hubbard's hand trembled, but she drew it forth; she laid it on the tray; she turned it softly about. At last she exposed the lower surface. On it were letters printed backward, plain enough to read this time, and arranged thus:

"Died April 2d, lamented by her large family."

"It is me," cried Mrs. Hubbard, "I am to go to-morrow. This is the 1st. I do feel faint; yes, I do. It is awful, and so sudden." And Mrs. Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of men and husbands.

The children screamed, the cat mewed, the dog barked. The oldest boy ran for a doctor. People flocked to the Hubbard's. The loaf was examined. Yes, there was Mrs. Hubbard's warning [illegible] ll to quit this world. Sh[illegible] bed, bidding good-bye to her fam[illegible]ds, her strength going fast. She read her Bible and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted that her end was at hand, for people were very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mrs. Hubbard, and dawn was breaking, and with it she was sure that she must go; when, clattering over the road and up to the door came a horse, and on the horse came a man, who alighted. He rattled the knocker and rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up the stairs he went to Mrs. Hubbard's room, and bolted into it. Every one stared at him as he took off his hat.

"Parding," said he, breathlessly, "I heard Mrs. Hubbard was a-dying—and she'd warnings on her baking. I come over to explain. You see I was sexton of the church here a few years ago, and I know all about it. You needn't die of fear just yet, Mrs. Hubbard, for it is neither spirits nor devils about; nor yet warnin's. What marks the loaves is old Mrs. Finkle's tombstone. I took it for an oven-bottom, seeing there were no survivors, and bricks were dear. The last folks before you didn't have them printed off on their loaves, because they used tins; and we got used to the marks ourselves. Cross-bones and skulls we put up with, and never thought of caring for the resurgam. So you see how it is, and I'm sorry you've been scared."

Nobody said a word. The minister shut his book. The doctor walked to the window. There was a deadly silence. Mrs. Hubbard sat up in bed.

"William!" said she to her husband, "the first thing you do, get a new bottom to that oven." And the tone assured the assemblage of anxious friends that Mrs. Hubbard was not going to die just yet.

Indeed she came down the very next day. And when the oven had been reconstructed, the first thing she did was to give invitations for a large tea-drinking, on which occasion the leaves came out right.—N. Y. Observer.

Under the Ocean.

THE EXPERIENCE OF A DIVER.

"How does it seem," said a Boston reporter the other day to George W. Townsend, a diver of twenty-three years' experience, "to go down into the water, fathom after fathom?"

"Well," was the reply, "the first time a man goes down he is apt to be considerably scared on account of the pressure. If a man is lowered too fast, it will kill him. Divers are seldom or never killed by drowning, but by an unequal pressure. A diver could cut a hole in the lower portion of his suit without danger of being drowned, as long as he stood erect; for as long as air was supplied by the air pump, the water could not reach his mouth. In deep water the pressure is very great, and usually a diver can descend as deep as he can stand the pressure. You see we are in a vacuum. There is no pressure perceptible to us on the copper helmet about our heads. The pressure is all upon the lower, garments, and if it is too great it drives all the blood in the body to the head, and the result is death. I have seen men killed in this way, whose heads were fairly split open, and whose eyes were driven from their sockets. A more horrible death could not be imagined; and I, and almost all other divers, have narrowly escaped it. Divers seldom descend over 170 feet, and rarely as deep as that. Under the water the ears feel stopped up, but sometimes we can make ourselves understood by putting two helmets together and shouting, but then it doesn't sound louder than an ordinary whisper. A man who went down for the first time would be likely to signal to come up after feeling the pressure in the ears, which is very unpleasant until you are used to it."

"How about the fish; do they never molest you?"

"Very seldom. You see we make it a rule not to disturb them. We know that they are in their element, and we are not in ours. As for sharks, we don't care for them. They are cowardly, and easily frightened off. We are much more afraid of the baricoats, a surface fish, with teeth three inches long. Talk about fish—why, one can't have any conception of them until he has been under the water and seen them of all sizes and colors of the rainbow. The noise made by a school of fish sounds under water like the rumbling of thunder.

"One of the greatest curiosities in this line was the Jew-fish I encountered when diving in the bay of Cumana, on the coast of Venezuela. The fish are from six to fifteen feet in length and have a large mouth with small teeth. The Jew-fish have a great deal of curiosity—more than any woman I know of—and used to eye us while we were at work. We were a little afraid of them at first, but found that they would not harm us. I suppose you have heard of the electric eel, which has the power to give a shock equal to any battery. When we were diving at the West Indies one of divers received a severe shock from an electric eel, and for a time he seemed almost paralyzed. Mules and other animals, when fording streams in that country, often receive a shock."

"Is it dark under water?"

"That depends upon how clear the water is. I have been down twenty fathoms where I could see to read the finest print, and I have been down ten feet where you could not see your hand before you. It is not very pleasant exploring a wreck, especially where there are dead bodies, when you are in utter darkness. I remember working in March, 1861, on the ship John Trux, which was sunk at the Arch street wharf, Philadelphia. The water of the Delaware river is so thick and muddy that you can't see anything five feet below the surface, and as the steward and stevedore were both drowned, I knew I should not have a very pleasant job in recovering their bodies. Well, I went down, groped around in the darkness, found the skylight, and after I got into the cabin the first thing that my hands touched was the body of the steward."

"Isn't it a horrible sight among the dead bodies in a vessel's wreck?"

"Well, yes; we got used to these sights, and, while I can't say we don't mind them, I can say they don't deter us from going down. I am one of those who believe that drowning is an easy death, comparatively, because I have noticed that the face of a drowned person looks as if he had gone to sleep, and seldom denotes pain. Sometimes we find drowned persons with a death grip upon a piece of rigging or the side of a bunk, and it is very difficult to unloosen their hold. Before we see a body or an object under the water we always see the shadow first. In looking for a body on a vessel's wreck we sometimes find it closely following the sediment in the water."

"How about the bottom of the ocean?"

"In many places it is beautiful, especially where the coral reefs are. Coral looks like a forest of trees that has been cut down. I have seen coral as large as the stump of any tree you ever saw, with enormous limbs running downward, the trunk and branches being the purest white coral. I have encountered a coral reef after descending three fathoms, and bottom of pure white sand after descending two fathoms more."

Lost in the Sky.

When Mr. John Wise, of this city, was lost in his balloon, called "The Pathfinder," several months ago, the newspapers printed many accounts of trips made into the air, some by brave men and some by foolish ones.

A lady who lives in the town of Centralia, in the State of Illinois, said nothing until all the rest were through talking. Then she told the editor of the St. Louis Republican to look into the number of his paper that was printed on the twenty-first day of September, 1858. The editor looked, and found an account of how two little children took a trip in a balloon by themselves. On that day an aeronaut, or sailor of the air, named Brooks, filled his air-ship with gas on the farm of a Mr. Harvey, who lived near Centralia. He expected to sail in the afternoon. About noontime Mr. Harvey put his two children into the basket of the balloon, just to please them, and not thinking for a moment of any danger. The balloon was tied to a tree by ropes. All at once a gust of wind broke the ropes, and the balloon shot up into the sky with nobody but the two children in the basket. Mr. Harvey was wild with grief, and shouted aloud: "They're lost! they're lost!" All the neighbors ran to the spot, only to see the balloon drifting off to the north, and more than a mile high.

One of the children was a girl, Nettie, eight years old, and the other was her little brother, Willie, four years old. Both cried when they found themselves leaving the ground and going on a very, very strange journey indeed. Nettie looked over the edge of the basket and saw her father wringing his hands away below. Soon the people looked to her smaller than babies, and the houses like toy houses. She and Willie were going up, up, up, all the time. "I expect we are going to heaven, Willie," said Nettie. Willie thought it would be very cold in heaven, then, for the higher they went the colder it grew. Nettie wrapped Willie in her apron, and held his head in her lap until he cried himself fast asleep. Then Nettie folded her hands and waited. She said: "I think we must be near the gate now." She meant the gate of heaven, that she had heard about in Sunday-school. But Nettie fell asleep too.

When she awoke she found that some strange man was lifting her from the basket. The strange man was a farmer in Northern Illinois, who had seen the balloon drifting low across his field. The rope was dragging, and so he caught it, and landed the children safely. The balloon had floated all night. Nettie and Willie's father soon learned that they had been found, and took them home two days afterward. Nettie is now a woman, the very same who told the Republican to look back in its files for the story. —Philadelphia Times

Another Rain Controller.

Several schemes for the artificial production of rain have been noticed in recent issues of the Scientific American. Mr. Geo. H. Bell, of this city, goes farther, and sends us the plan of a rain tower, by which he would not merely produce rain when it is needed, but prevent rain when nature is disposed to grant the blessing too liberally.

Mr. Bell's rain tower is a charming little structure of stone, one hundred feet in diameter at the base, and tapering to sixty feet diameter at a height of a thousand feet. Above this rises a tubular tower of wood or iron, say five hundred feet. It would not often be necessary to go above one thousand five hundred feet, Mr. Bell thinks, though that altitude might be exceeded if necessary. Of course there would be no risk of such a tower being blown down or crushing its foundation by its own weight.

The interior hollow of the tower would have a diameter of twenty feet; and through it a vast volume of saturated air could be blown into the upper atmosphere by means of proper machinery at the base of the tower. In case that might not suffice to secure the desired precipitation of rain, an additional up-rush of air around the tower is obtained by means of numerous tubes leading upward and outward from the interior of the tower at an angle, say, of 45°. Similar tubes descending from the inside to the outside of the tower serve as inlets, the air let in through them being sucked in by the ascending current within the tower; then, after it has received "the upward impetus of the inside force," it will be ejected upward through the ascending tubes. "Thus," in the words of the inventor, "through every stratum of air pierced by this mammoth rotunda, the air surrounding the outside walls will be agitated by an upward influence," making the exterior ascension indefinitely exceed the interior.

The inventor adds: "While these tubes, discreetly located at meteorological centers, would doubtless become reliable agencies for the formation of clouds, it should be their faculty also to prevent rain; for by preserving the motion of the fan or blower, a descensional flow of air would begin, which might annihilate the clouds overhanging, by bringing them to earth in aeriform and holding them here [securely bottled of course!] until they be wanted in precipitation on some locality, then instituting the ascensional flow and send them up to be condensed."

Mr. Bell suggests that a single timely rain would pay the cost of building a tower of this sort, "and a nation furnished with a reasonable number might prove them her wealth and grandeur."—Scientific American.

Ocean Temperatures.

Herr von Boguslawski has been led, from a comparison of the results of recent deep-sea investigations, to the following conclusions respecting the temperatures of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans:

1. The water of the North Pacific is, in its whole mass, colder than that of the North Atlantic. 2. The water of the South Pacific is, down to 1,300 metres (4,225 feet), somewhat warmer than that of the South Atlantic, but below this depth colder. 3. The bottom temperatures are generally lower in the Pacific than in the Atlantic at the same depths and in the same degree of latitude; but nowhere in the Pacific are found such low temperatures as in the Antarctic portion of the South Atlantic, between 36 and 38 deg. south and 48 and 33 deg. west longitude, in which bottom temperatures of 0.3 deg. c. to 0.6 deg. c. have been measured. 4. In the western parts of the Pacific, and the adjoining parts of the East India Archipelago, the temperature of the water reaches its minimum at depths between 55 deg. and 2,750 metres (1,787 and 8,937 feet), remaining the same from this depth to the bottom. In the whole of the Atlantic the temperature from 2,750 metres (8,937 feet) to the bottom gradually though very slowly decreases.—Popular Science Monthly.

STATE NEWS.

Mr. Davidson of Haw River saves his sweet potatoes all the year, packs them in his garden in a sugar loaf of dirt and cornstalks, made with an opening at the top that can be shut in cold weather and opened in warm, he has sweet potatoes all the year round and his good old lady knows what to do with them.—Greensboro Patriot.

Col. Richard Tyler Bennett, of Wadesboro, N. C., has been nominated for the judgeship by the convention lately assembled in Fayetteville. Governor Jarvis will commission him immediately to fill the unexpired term of Judge Buxton.

We regret very much that present indications seem to be that the graded school project will have to be abandoned for the present time, owing to complications arising out of the possibility that the tax will be resisted. In our next issue we propose to give further particulars.—Goldsboro Messenger.

We hear that W. J. Best, the little Irishman who bargained for the Western North Carolina Road, is an elder in one of the Presbyterian churches of New York city. He hit Raleigh just as the second Presbyterian church was finished and all paid for save about three hundred dollars. Best paid down the three hundred himself and cleaned up the debt.—Reidsville Times.

A peach tree grows in our county, Rockingham, N. C., that sprung from the seed of a peach that the late Gen. Garland held in his hand when he was killed at Boonsboro. He was eating a peach when he was shot down, and Capt. Guerrant got the seed and planted it on his place in Rockingham.—Reidsville Times.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

and such it really is when taken in time and according to the very plain directions inclosing each bottle.

In such diseases, the attack is usually sudden and frequently very acute; but with a safe remedy at hand for immediate use, there is seldom danger of the fatal result which so often follows a few days' neglect.

The inclination to wait and see if the morrow does not bring a better feeling, not infrequently occasions a vast amount of needless suffering, and sometimes costs a life. A timely dose of Pain Killer will almost invariably save both, and with them the attendant doctor's fee.

It has stood the test of forty years' constant use in all countries and climates, and is perfectly safe in any person's hands.

It is recommended by Physicians, Nurses in Hospitals, and persons of all classes and professions who have had opportunity for observing the wonderful results which have always followed its use.

REV. ALBERTUS L. WATTS.

The following sketch of the life of a former minister of Concord Presbytery is published by request. It is a correct copy of the report to the Presbytery of the Rev. Messrs. Stephen Frontis and P. H. Dalton, the committee appointed to bring in a minute of the death of the brother, and was presented to the Presbytery at its meeting in Hopewell church, 11th April, 1856:

"The father of our deceased brother was William Watts, who was born in Lancaster county, Pa., September 27, 1754. About one year after his birth his parents removed to North Carolina, and settled in what is now Iredell county, about four and a half miles west of Statesville, on the road leading to the Island Ford, and within what are now the bounds of Concord congregation. On the 11th of June, 1778, Mr. William Watts was married to Miss Rachel Davidson, by the Rev. James Hall, D. D., this being the first couple that Dr. Hall married. He served as a ruling elder in Concord church till his death, which occurred in 1818. He was buried in Statesville, there being no graveyard at that time connected with the church of Concord. The wife of William Watts was born in Fort Dobbs, three miles north of Statesville, and still lives, dwelling with her daughter, Mrs. Morrison, within the bounds of Concord church, having now reached the remarkable age of one hundred years.

"The following circumstance in the life of Mr. William Watts is worth recording. When his family was yet small he, in company with one of his neighbors, went on a trip to Pennsylvania, and attempting to cross the Susquehanna by night, he was swept from his horse by the current of the river. A short distance below he lodged on a rock, and while there, waiting till his fellow traveler could procure assistance, he vowed to the Lord that if He would spare his life he would educate two of his sons and dedicate them to the Gospel ministry.

"On his return home he related the circumstances to his wife, who proposed that he fulfil his vow by educating for the Gospel ministry two very promising lads of a near neighbor. To this the father would not consent, and he lived to see his promise in a way of fulfilment in the case of two of his sons, William Franklin and Albertus Leander, for though he did not live to see them enter the ministry, he lived to see them in their academical course with a view to enter that holy office. This circumstance is calculated to show the importance of Christian parents dedicating their children to God at an early day, and not take it for granted that any other effort on their part can release them from so sacred a duty.

"Albertus Leander, the subject of this sketch, was the youngest son of Mr. William Watts, and was born on the 25th of November, 1801. An elder brother of his, William Franklin Watts, was licensed by the Presbytery of Concord at the same time with the Rev. Henry N. Pharr and the Rev. Cyrus Johnson, D. D. He preached for a while at Joppa in Davie county, and in Rowan county at Unity church, and at a stand near the place where Franklin church was afterwards erected about five miles from Salisbury. His health declining he retired to his mother's residence in Iredell, where he died on the 11th of May, 1826, in the 35th year of his age, and was buried in Concord graveyard. The church of Franklin was not organized until after his death, and as a token of regard which the people among whom he had preached bore to his memory, they called their church Franklin after his middle name.

"Our deceased brother, Albertus Leander Watts, received his academical training in Statesville, under the Rev. Mr. Mushatt, of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church. He afterward went to Chapel Hill, where he graduated, and then entered the Union Theological Seminary, which was blessed with the instructions of the Rev. John H. Rice, D. D.

"Brother Watts was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Concord at Lincolnton, N. C., on the 15th day of November, 1828. For a season he served the churches of Buffalo and Brier Creek, Va., and afterwards removed within the bounds of the Presbytery of Orange and preached for some time at Halifax C. H., then removed to the county of Granville, where he preached statedly to the church at Nutbush.

"About this time he married Miss Mary E. Williams, who died of scarlet fever three months after their marriage. He afterwards moved within the bounds of our Presbytery and preached for a season at Rutherfordton and Little Brittain; from that field he was invited to Lincolnton, where he preached for some years, devoting part of his time to the church of Long Creek. In this field he remained till about the year 1842, when he was invited to the pastoral charge of the churches of Steel Creek and Pleasant Hill. In 1843 he was married to Miss Sarah D. McMillan of Fayetteville, N. C., by whom he had three children—one son and two daughters—and who departed this life on the 21st of April, 1854.

"The pastoral relation which had existed between him and the churches of Steele Creek and Pleasant Hill having been dissolved for about a year before his death he was at the time of his death acting as stated supply to the churches of Unity and Six Mile Creek, in York district, S. C., which churches deeply felt and regretted his loss, as just before his last illness they had made arrangements for his permanent settlement among them. Our brother died on the 23d of January, 1855, at his residence, ten miles from Charlotte, on the Yorkville road. His last illness was short and severe, prostrating him at once and depriving him, in a great measure, of the power of conversing with his friends; but he was sensible of his approaching end, and observed to a friend, "I am sinking very fast." After being raised up for the last time, as he returned to his bed he began to repeat the first part of the 65th Psalm, which describes the blessedness of God's chosen people, saying distinctly "Praise waiteth for thee, O God in Zion," and perhaps mentally repeating the first four verses of that Psalm, so well calculated to comfort the child of God at all times. The earthly remains of our beloved brother were laid by the side of his wife in Steele Creek graveyard.

"Brother Watts was an interesting preacher, faithful and zealous in his Master's cause; activity marked the whole of his earthly career; although his constitution was delicate, yet he was never at rest. He was a kind, warm and generous friend, an affectionate husband and devoted father.

"It will never be forgotten by his brethren in the ministry that the last token of regard he received from them was his being unanimously chosen moderator of our Synod at its session in Concord in October, 1854. The duties of that office he discharged faithfully, and we anticipated the pleasure of hearing a message from his lips at the succeeding meeting of our Synod; but 'God's ways are not as our ways, nor His thoughts as our thoughts.' When the Synod met the lips of our brother had for nine months been sealed in the silence of the grave, but doubtless his redeemed spirit had, during that time, been engaged in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

"(Signed) STEPHEN FRONTIS, P. H. DALTON, } Com."

THE VIRTUE OF PERSISTENCE.

BY HORACE GREELY.

I think the world is very generally misled by that vague term genius. Far be it from me to deny that some are born with loftier capacities, quicker perceptions, happier mental constitutions, than others; yet I think what is best in a human intellect is not capacity but tendency. Of the three decidedly most gifted and brilliant young men I have known, one died in a poorhouse, of delirium tremens; another sunk into an early grave, respected, but also a victim of alcoholic stimulation; and the third, though hardly thirty, is to day a vagabond and a cumberer of the ground, to whom it would be very unsafe to lend a dollar. All these had not merely brilliant capacities—they really achieved decided success in their better days; they could be industrious and efficient if they would, and for months at a time were so; but they had not the true purpose or they could not have faltered and fallen as they did. Had they lived less to self and more to human good, they would never have been thus deserted by their guardian angels.

I know there is a small class of whom the world says, "They see to the heart of things by intuition; they are poets from impulse only; orators, statesmen, critics, sages, because nature would have it so." I beg leave to doubt that men of this stamp are a whit more abundant than white crows. I know there are enough who take pleasure and pride in surprising the public with prodigies of easy and rapid achievements—who would have us believe that they have thrown off their epic a canto per day, and can write you their quire of clever epigrams or sonnets before dinner. Now, I do not question the facility of rapid and brilliant execution, as the result of past study and acquirement; in fact, I know of such instances; but look at Virgil's four lines per day—written that day to be read through all future time; consider how Demosthenes made himself an orator against a host of natural impediments; examine fac simile of a manuscript page of Byron's poems, and mark the numerous erasures and interlineations, arguing slow composition and a puzzled brain, and note well that the man who writes a poem, a sermon, an elaborate review, an oration in a day, has been many years acquiring that facility, and you will agree with me that the vulgar supposition that some are so gifted by nature that they may achieve distinction without effort, is contradicted by a thousand facts where it seems to be sustained by one. My sometime friend, who perished miserably of delirium tremens, often affected to write without labor; yet I happen to know from his intimate family connections, that he repeatedly shut himself up for months, and devoted his whole energies to study. In these periods of hibernation the sparkling effusions which seem to dash off impromptu, after his return to society, had essentially their origin.

At all events, be sure there is no Chance in the universe, and, when we say there is, we can truly mean only that we are ignorant of the relation of cause and effect in that instance. All things are governed by Law, from the falling of an avalanche to the growth of a violet. "Sire," said an envious courtier, to whom Louis XIV. was praising one of his generals, who had just achieved a brilliant triumph, "Sire, Marshal Villars is very lucky." "Lucky, sir!" promptly responded the grand monarque, "Marshal Villars lucky,' did you say? No, sir! he is a great deal more than that!"

A true and noble success is within the reach of every human being who rightly apprehends and will diligently seek it. It may very well be quite other than the aspirant meditates—it may even seem defeat to the superficial observer—but God still reigns, and no heroic and unselfish aim can ever be really defeated. If five thousand aspire to fill the presidential chair, it is very certain that all cannot have precisely that outward and visible stamp of success they covert; but, were they fifty thousand and their aspiration rather essential than circumstantial, to enlighten and bless their countrymen rather than rule them, there ample work and scope for them all. One may be privileged to teach thousands to loathe indolence, frivolity, display and vice, and love industry, sobriety, modesty and virtue, while another inculcates the same lessons only in a narrow, secluded neighborhood, unpraised unsung, unchronicled, save in the books of the recording angel. The scope of influence in these two cases is different, but the measure of essential success is the same. Whoever has learned to find delight in doing good, and in nothing inconsistent therewith—to do whatever good is within his reach, and not repine that his opportunities are such only as Heaven has been pleased to vouchsafe him—can never esteem his life a failure. Should sickness or casualty confine him for years to a bed of suffering and dependence, he will thenceforth radiate a glow of heartfelt resignation, of benign humility, of grateful piety, whereof the influence will be diffused more widely and enduringly than he could have imagined. In the ever-proceeding warfare of Good against Evil, Right against Wrong, Truth against Error, there can be no real defeat, no absolute discomfiture—only postponement, repulse, and the ill success of a mis-directed attack—an unwisely planned manœuvre. In that great contest, whoever plants himself firmly on the side of Good is allied with all the moral forces of the universe, and is certain of ultimate triumph. The evil and the base, the selfish and the sycophantic, may seem to flourish for a season; but their verdure soon passes away and is forgotten, leaving the good to stand forth like the evergreens of the forest in winter, when the summer foliage which dwarfed and obscured them lies shriveled at their feet. Happy they who learn in childhood, and treasure through after trials and temptations, the grand lesson of the age—the philosophy of living to noble ends.—From Packard's Monthly.

THE BEST.

The hope of the ministry is not by any means in brilliant talents. It is piety rather than brilliancy that is desirable, and the Church, looking around for candidates to supply pulpits, ought to seek those who are known mainly as persons of fidelity to principles and large experience of the grace of God. No greater calamity can befall the kingdom than a spirit which shall move it to put mere human ability above the qualities that are a direct gift from heaven.

But neither ought there to be a premium on dullness, as if the weak things were the most acceptable, or as if the grace which produces holiness and consecration can only exist with mediocrity of character and commonplace endowments. There is no natural affinity between grace and poverty of mind; and a man should not be regarded as having a special fitness for the work of the Lord because he excels in the sobriety which is but the result of a want of energy, or the harmlessness which is inevitable because of intellectual sterility. If grace is elective, it is not upon that plan. It is just as likely to fall upon a Paul, with all his native force and extended culture, as to take possession of some every-day sinner, who shall always be known, even in the time of his greatest advancement, as a brother who is weak.

And in looking up its material for the ministry, it should be the aim of the Church to find such as will do its work effectively, not only because filled with good intentions, but because also of the ability to carry them out. There is a man who is born strong, acute, active and delicate, embracing in his constitution the accumulated growth of several generations; there is another who, in starting out, appears heavy, dull and unrefined, and who, however gracious he may be in heart, may yet lack the noble qualities that are necessary to the completest manhood. If the Church accept the latter it ought to make every effort to get the former. It owes it alike to itself, to the cause it seeks to promote, to the honor of the ministry, and to its great Saviour and Head, to seek the best. It has no right to load itself with sanctified rubbish. But looking after the best—the noblest of its cultured product—it should call them to be its instructors, its leaders and representatives, and thus contribute what will enrich and ennoble, rather than impoverish and degrade.—United Presbyterian.

ADVICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The Burlington Hawkeye says:

Never write with pen and ink. It is altogether too plain, and doesn't hold the minds of the editor and printers closely enough to their work.

Don't punctuate. We prefer to punctuate all manuscript sent to us. And don't use capitals. Then we can punctuate and capitalize to suit ourselves, and your article, when you see it in print, will astonish even if it does not please you.

Don't try to write too plainly. Poor writing is an indication of genius. It's about the only indication of genius that a great many men possess. Scrawl your articles with your eyes shut, and make every word as illegible as you can. We get the same price for it from the rag man as though it were covered with copper-plate sentences.

Avoid all painstaking with proper names. We know the full name of every man, woman and child in the United States, and the merest hint at the name is sufficient. For instance if you write a character something like a drunken figure "8," and then draw a wavy line, we will know at once that you mean "Samuel Morrison," even though you may think you mean "Lemuel Messenger."

Always write on both sides of the paper; and when you have filled both sides of every page, trail a line up and down every margin, and back to the top of the first page, closing your article by writing the signature just above the date. How we do love to get hold of articles written in this style! And how we would like to get hold of the man who sends them! Just for ten minutes! Alone! In the woods, with a cannon in our hip-pocket!

Coarse brown wrapping paper is the best for writing your articles on. If you can tear down an old circus poster, and write on the pasty side of it with a pen stick, it will do still better.

When your article is finished, crunch your paper in your pocket and carry it two or three days before sending it. This rubs off the superfluous pencil marks, and makes it lighter to handle.

If you think of it, lose one page out of the middle of your article. We can easily supply what is missing, and we love to do it. We have nothing else to do.

SILENCE.

When, smitten, thou dost feel the rod,
Be still, and leave thy cause with God;
And silence to thy soul shall teach
Far more than comes from outward speech.

When secret arts and open foe
Conspire thy peace to overthrow,
In silence learn the hidden power
Which saves thee in that bitter hour.

Doth not thy Father take thy part?
Doth He not know thy bleeding heart?
And when it seems that thou will fall,
Doth He not feel it? bear it all?

Make no reply, but let thy mind
In silent faith the triumph find,
Which comes from injuries forgiven,
And trust in God, and strength in Heaven.

THE CHURCHES AND MISSIONS.

A late number of the Lutheran Observer, referring to the careful supervision of church interests in the Methodist Church, says "the result is that the Methodist Episcopal Church is the most efficient of all Protestant denominations in carrying on its home and foreign work." Let us see whether this is a fair statement of facts. The amount expended in the work is a fair test in general of efficiency. The receipts for missions, Home and Foreign, in various churches last year were as follow. We have copied most of them from the latest official statements.

(a) The contributions to Home Missions by the Baptist churches North includes the support of their work among the freedmen, and this fact should be noted when a comparison is made between this and churches which have a distinct organization for freedmen. The gifts for freedmen should be counted as gifts for Home Missions. It is due to this Church to say that the proportion of converts to the number of laborers in the field is greater than in most of the churches here represented.

(b) We have not been able to secure the exact figures in the Episcopal Church, nor to ascertain the proportion between the gifts to Home and Foreign Missions. An Episcopal paper, speaking of the work of missions, states that which is given as the round sum contributed. We believe that in this Church also what is given for freedmen is included in "Home Missions."

(c) The Congregational statistics ought to be increased by the sum given to Foreign Missions through the American Missionary Association. The figures we have not been able to find.

(d) It is to be noted that the gifts of the churches ranked under the general term "Presbyterian" exceed largely all other denominations, amounting to $1,145,862 22.—Presbyterian.

G. Duncan, Esq., elder Regent Square, Convener of the Church's Treasurership Committee.

Thomas Matheson, Esq., Liverpool, Joint-Convener of the Union Thanksgiving Fund.

IRELAND.

At the time when we write, the list from this Church is incomplete. We believe it will include Professor Watts and Rev. Dr. Knox, Belfast; Rev. C. L. Morell, of Dungannon; Rev. J. M. Rodgers, of Derry; Rev. S. M. Hill, of Ballymene; John Hanson, Esq., etc.

COLONIAL CHURCHES.

Rev. James Nash, Victoria, Australia.

Rev. John Kinross, Principal of St. Andrew's College, Sydney, New South Wales.

Rev. R. S. Duff, Tasmania.

Rev. James Henderson, South Australia.

POPULAR EDUCATION.

[From the Wilmington Star.]

We shall not dwell at any great length upon the intellectual advantages which never fail to follow in the train of education. We shall not make its moral blessings the direct theme of our discussion. That it brings light to the understanding and strength to moral sentiments few persons with any fair show of reason can refuse to allow. The practical value of quickened faculties does not need the establishment of proof. A mind that knows how to think and where to find whatever information it does not possess already, and a sense of right and wrong which has been shown the way to truth and which does not need a spur to make it go aright are worth more on a farm than capitol; are more valuable than party prizes at the polls; and are of more service than the gift of eloquence in the conduct of legislation. Since these are conclusions at which very few, if any, intelligent persons will demur, we have a very solid foundation on which to rest our argument for general education, and on which to build the simple, practical suggestions as to the best means for its perfection.

The Star has never taken the position that education should be compulsory—that all parents should be compelled to send their children for a certain prescribed time. We have not seen as yet any occasion or necessity for entering upon this phase of the subject. But education is a matter pertaining directly to the Government. Its extension and the perfection of the means should be the care of the Government. Why do we say so? Because education is essential to the highest citizenship, and because, from the very nature of States—it cannot be left safely to private enterprise or endeavor. Private schools are good enough as far as they go, but they are insufficient to meet the pressing demands of our times and country. There is no principle to which a free people ought more stubbornly to stick than this—that Government ought never to be allowed to do that for the citizens, which they can do as well, or better, for themselves. This is a foundation stone of genuine republicanism. But from this plain principle—this sound doctrine there flows this other and naturally and irresistibly—that Government should be urged, and if possible, compelled, to do that for its people which they can not do as well, or better, for themselves. No reflecting mind, we apprehend, will dispute either proposition.

Now under this latter class of objects comes education. It is surely the very height of unwisdom to leave it to chance or charity. Education, whose object is the enlightenment of an entire community, of a whole people, is good only when it is good uniformly; it can be good uniformly only when organized uniformly; it can be organized uniformly only by some power, which has authority in all parts of the State; the only such power is Government. This is no hard or bidden matter. Every reader of the Star—every plain man can see that a big undertaking can be accomplished only by a big power, and that the duty of educating the youth of an entire State, numbering many hundred thousands, cannot be discharged successfully by any possible accumulation of private means, or by any probable organization of private individuals, however large, or however wealthy, or however benevolent. If left to such organization the great work must be incomplete and wholly insufficient. It will be intermittent, irregular and defective.

It is one of the glories of our American institutions that this duty of Government to educate its future citizens was fully recognized and systematically performed in the United States. This is specially the case in portions of the North, and it is pleasing to recognize it. Our Southern people, to their credit be it said, have not been ashamed to learn at the hands of their Northern brethren, and to copy our system of education to some extent from New England, with whose people we have so little else in common. But we must not stop here. We have begun only the good work of general education. It will not be creditable to our intelligence or liberality, if whilst brighter prospects are opening to us in other things, we suffer this most valuable of all systems to languish for proper support. The children must be educated, and the State must do it. If, then, the conduct of education be the business of Government, as we think every thinking man must allow that it is, then what? Then the means of support is not voluntary contributions, but taxation. Do you wince? Do you say this will never do? We know that taxation is our tender point, and has always been the ground of our quickest rebellion. Taxation is the harp of a thousand strings upon which demagogues have played. But the people ought to think. They are right in seeing that a thing to be sustained with money is worth sustaining. The people are right when they draw back unless they are sure they will get value received. But we will not press the matter farther to-day. Before urging on the tax-payers of North Carolina the absolute necessity of making a greater outlay for education and of demanding a more liberal provision by the Legislature for the sustentation of the public schools, we shall as time permits, ask and answer two important questions:

First, How does education benefit the State; and,

Second, In what way does it pay?

Those who give not till they die, show that they would not then if they could keep it any longer.—Bishop Hall.

He who is false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will see the defect when the weaving of a lifetime is enrolled.

Money spent on myself may be a mill-stone about my neck; money spent on others may give me wings like the eagles.—R. D. Hitchcock.

No service in itself is small,
None great, though earth it fill;
But that is small that seeks its own,
And great that seeks God's will.

Worldly friendship is like our shadows; while we walk in sunshine it sticks close to us, but the moment we enter the shade it deserts us.

There are two things which speak as with a voice from heaven, that He who fills that throne must be on the side of virtue, and that which He befriends must finally prosper and prevail.—Colton.

Do you ask me the place of the Valley,
Ye hearts that are harrowed by care?
It lieth afar between Mountains,
And God and His angels are there;
And one is the dark Mount of Sorrow,
The other the bright Mount of Prayer.

It is not so much what the man says that tells as his way of saying it, and what he is who says it. One man's sermon, or talk, or speech, charms you, while the same or a better thing said by another never touches you at all. What you must care for is the force of the speaker.

Yes, it is one thing to describe nature; that the athiest may do, and this with the precision of a micrometer; but even then he speaks but a little fragment of the truth. It is another and vastly larger thing to interpret nature; that no one can do who does not believe in a purposeful God—that is to say, a providential Creator.—George Dana Boardman.

The various notes that make a perfect song
Have each a different length: some full and strong,
And reaching up to an impassioned height;
And others low and sweet, with not less might
Because the measure is filled out with silence. So
With life's events; what God's marked out doth grow
From passage of triumph and of pain
Into the rounded sweetness of the finished strain —Gerald Massey.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Dr. Jessup writes that the Church of Beyroot, Syria, has consented to call a pastor of its own country, and to provide for his support.

The Pope has provided for the erection of an infant asylum and of a girls' school in his native town, Carpineto.

Lord Ripon has given 20,000 rupees towards the erection of the proposed Roman Catholic cathedral at Simla. The site selected for the cathedral is the Gorton estate.

The Palace of Ocha, near Burgos, in Spain, has been purchased by the French Jesuits for the sum of 121,000f. Down to the present time the Council of State has not delivered its opinion upon the question of the residence of foreign Jesuits of Spain.

Following the example of Sheridan Knowles Mr. Charles Reade has resolved to abandon writing for the stage in consequence of his conversion. He has become a constant attendant at Bible-classes and prayer-meetings, and contemplates preaching.

The Reformed congregation at Friedrichstadt, Schleswig-Holstein, owns so much property that the members do not need to pay anything for the pastor's salary, &c., but each member received last year £3.

The United Free Church, whose annual Assembly has been sitting at Leeds, on Saturday last resolved to form a Temperance League, with a view to the employment of an agent whose work would be the promotion of temperance in the circuits of the denomination.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1880.

THE SEARCHING LIGHT OF GOD'S WORD.

Blessed be God that His truth shines. It so shines that fallen men are made to see it, believe it, abide in it and sing in its light. Learning is not necessary that one may be assured of the fervor, preciousness and glory of the Scriptures any more than a profound knowledge of astronomy and the integral calculus is requisite to prove that the sun shines. The self-evidencing power of God's Word is not sufficiently held up by the Church in these latter days of scholastic and materialistic sneering.

No sane man can read the Bible without feeling his sins rebuked. His slumbering conscience will awake from all dark subterfuges under the piercing blaze from Sinai and Calvary. Degrading dissipation may have numbed the moral sense; long continued sin may have hardened the heart, or pharisaical morality may have stuffed the dull ears; but a mysterious power springs, full armed, from the Divine Truth, when fairly dwelt on, that bursts through these frowning ramparts and lays the invincible, mailed hand of conviction on the inner consciousness of the lawless. There is a positiveness in God's Word that is felt to rest on an impregnable basis. It is not the positiveness of a human law, nor of a despot, that may be evaded. It is the unalterable grasp, the unchangeable justice, the emphatic and eternal rights of essential Truth. This power reigns in the Bible. Nowhere else does it sway its royal sceptre. The soul feels this under the Gospel. It is a slaying sword. It is piercing light. It is God's signature to His revelation. The poor man feels it; the rich man owns it; centuries testify to it. Christ spake as one that had authority (self-derived power) to teach, and not as the scribes.

The amazing independence of this Truth augments its searching power. It depends on nothing human, but descends from above. It starts from the throne of God. With omniscient energy it addresses not the external but the internal ear. It strips off the shell of outward morality and goes to the motives, the disposition. The law not merely says "Thou shalt not steal," but more widely, "Thou shalt not covet." So the "candle of the Lord" searches the heart. Paul knew this by experience; so did multitudes at Pentecost; so did Simon Magus; so did John Newton, for in his deep wickedness, when death and eternity seemed near and dismay filled his shrinking soul, he plunged into his sea-chest to find a Bible, which he remembered his godly mother had given him, but which he had long neglected. His eyes caught first those words, "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." At once convinced of his need, he cried earnestly for this gift, and God heard his prayer. Even the infidel Gibbon testifies in his history that the "convincing evidence of the doctrine was to be assigned as one cause of the success of Christianity." In the early Church this convincing light of God's Truth shined with signal lustre from the lives of the stalwart, but humble believers. So Pliny, in his remarkable letter to Trajan, testifies to their purity of life. And Tertullian says that it was common to say, "such a person is a good man, but he is a Christian." The only defect in his character was his religion.

Let us, then, bless God for this declarative and searching light of His Word. It tries the hearts and reins of the children of men. Every problem of life, and every hiding place of the carnal heart, and every device of Satan, feel the flash of condemnation from its presence. Yea, they cower under the steady blaze of its eternal, exposing radiance. But soft and cheering as gentlest sunshine do the rays of the Sacred Scriptures fall on the trusting soul, rejoicing that under the opened gates of heaven is clearly marked out the new and living way of glory everlasting.

DELUSIVE HOPES.

The negro convicted of murder about three weeks since in the criminal court of New Hanover county was hanged on the 3d inst. The deed, the trial and conviction, and the vindication of justice in the execution, occurred within fifty days. A calm and resolute desire to see justice done, with entire absence of any special feeling as against the prisoner, pervaded the more intelligent class of the community. The execution was private, and there was very little excitement, none in fact away from those who crowded around the jail anxious to gratify their taste for the horrible. Alcohol has thus added two names more to its long, black roll of death.

But our object in bringing forward the subject is quite aside from the above. It has been suggested that considering the exultant mood in which criminals frequently pass from time to eternity, it may come to be thought that there is no surer road to heavenly bliss than to commit some capital crime and suffer the deserved penalty of the law. The suggestion is by no means paltry, and it is high time in the interest of religion that the subject should be calmly discussed.

We lay down the proposition that neither settled peace or ecstatic joy unerringly indicate true conversion. Such conversion as a religious experience is a turning from sin unto holiness. Its invariable antecedent and accompaniment is godly repentance; that repentance which implies a true sense of sin with sincere grief because of it, and utter hatred of it. This repentance under an apprehension of the mercy of God in Jesus Christ, leads the sinner to receive Christ and rest upon Him alone for salvation from sin and from its consequences. It is altogether possible, nay it is often certain, that intense agony of mind in view of the terrors of God's law is succeeded by a strong hope, even an assurance of safety. Such an experience will produce joy, even though there be no correct apprehension of the nature of sin and no hatred of it. Joy, then, although frequently an accompaniment of such change of heart as leads to holiness of life, is not, of itself, conclusive evidence of conversion.

We do undertake to say that in the case of him who has recently suffered the penalty of human law there was no well grounded hope of that heavenly felicity which he sincerely expected to attain, but, with a feeling of pain, we do say there was nothing in the confession he made on the gallows to indicate it.

In the reports of his confession he is represented as attempting to justify himself by throwing the blame on those whom he injured. He expressed himself as freely forgiving them for their sins as against him, but of anything like remorse or even sorrow for his atrocious crime, anything like penitence for the violation of God's law, there is not a word.

No sinner is beyond the reach of pardon, and the poor miserable victim who has suffered the penalty due to his crime may have obtained it, but assuredly there was nothing in his case to warrant the impression that it is safe to commit crime in the assurance, or even the expectation, of being able to obtain pardon and secure the reward of the righteous.

Criminals, having their period of earthly existence limited and defined, need the most intelligent and judicious instruction, to guard them against such delusive hopes as, however they may fortify them against human penalties, can only lead to irretrievable ruin to themselves, and create false and damaging impressions of religion.

DEATH OF REV. J. M. RICE.

The Christian Observer contains the following note of the death of Rev. James M. Rice, late pastor of Covington and Oakland churches in Montgomery Presbytery:

"Letters from Virginia bring the sad news of the death of Rev. James M. Rice, of Covington, Virginia. He spent several weeks this summer at Rnfordsville in Bedford county, vainly trying to regain his health. He returned home about the middle of the month, reaching there on the 14th. On the 16th, while sitting in a chair, without a struggle or a groan, he passed away from earth.

His praise is in all the churches. He has been pastor of that church for many years, resigning it this spring when his health and strength were evidently failing. He has labored faithfully and well, and many will be the stars in his crown of rejoicing. The whole Synod will feel his loss, and the whole Church recognize that a standard bearer has fallen.

DEATH OF DR. ADAMS.

Rev. Wm. Adams, D. D., LL. D., died at Orange, N. J., on 31st ult. Dr. Adams was born in Colchester, Conn., in 1807, graduated at Yale College, studied theology at Andover, and was ordained as a Congregational minister. He took charge of the Central Presbyterian church in New York city in 1834, and was pastor of that church, under the name of the Central, and since of the Madison Square Presbyterian church until the close of his life service. He was moderator of the New School General Assembly of the Northern Church in 1852, and was to have delivered the opening sermon of the approaching Presbyterian Council in Philadelphia. He declined the appointment of professor of sacred rhetoric and pastoral theology in the Union Theological Seminary of New York, which was tendered to him in 1871.

Dr. Adams published several works of merit, beside standard articles in the reviews of his Church.

A DISCRIMINATING VIEW OF PRESBYTERIANISM.

A friend, who, by reason of journalistic experience, is appreciative and discerning in his selections, sends us the following editorial article from the Philadelphia Record with this note: "The Record is one of the ablest and most independent journals of the North and praise of any person, place, denomination or thing, coming from it, may be fairly said to be praise from Sir Hubert Stanley:"

"Presbyterianism is easily in the intellectual van of the Protestant evangelical denominations. The Episcopalians claim to be a branch of the Church Catholic, and Methodism is an offshoot from Episcopacy. The Baptists have powerful and learned preachers, but they possess as an ecclesiastical body no organic unity, every congregation being independent of the rest. Other Christian sects are numerous, and each seems to have its appropriate sphere in meeting the diverse spiritual needs of the community. The Presbyterians, however, may be regarded as embodying, if not the enthusiam and vital force of dissent from the ancient creed of Christendom, the militant polemics of private judgment in religious matters as against authority. With them all questions are open to debate, subject only to the limitations of what they regard as proper Scriptural interpretation, and the Bible is the sole source of their theology. Their clergy are very generally educated men and able disputants. Both clergy and laity are fond of doctrinal exposition, and the sermon is the main feature of their public religious exercises. The congregations of no other order listen habitually to stronger preaching or more of it. The Presbyterian minister is expected to feed the minds as well as the hearts of his people, and to inculcate dogmas rather than to excite emotions. The result, as might be expected, is the development of a marked degree of mental sharpness among the members of that communion.

"The Pan-Presbyterian Council which will assemble in this city September 23d will bring hither some four hundred of the ablest Protestant divines in the world. There will be presumably an atmosphere of intellectuality unusual even in Philadelphia, surcharged with mental ozone and highly invigorating in its influence. Massive and solid sermons will be preached, and great questions, laying hold on the infinite and the eternal, will be profoundly argued. Among the subjects to be considered are such as "The Inspiration, Authenticity and Interpretation of the Scriptures," "Bible Revision," "Creeds and Confessions," "Future Retribution," and "Modern Theological Thought." This is the second gathering of the kind, the first having been held at Edinburgh three years ago. It is proposed that these cosmopolitan councils shall hereafter meet triennially.

"If Presbyterianism can supply the Christian world with fresh and effective weapons for the great warfare against evil and error it will render a magnificent service to mankind. Nothing is more evident than that our high state of civilization has brought with it many a sin and shame, and that much of the pristine innocence of humanity has departed in company with its ignorance. A refined and elaborate sensualism has become developed along with the progress that has been realized in the arts and conveniences and amenities of life. What we characterize as enlightened culture has rehabilitated no little of the old paganism. The heathen deities of Greece and Rome stalk among us by new names. Free thought has blossomed into free-thinking. Buddha confronts Christ. Faith in the supernatural, that highest and most real of the spheres of being, is openly sneered at as behind the times. Matter is apotheosized as the only substance. A sciolistic philosophy seeks, with the cruel cunning of the serpent, to undermine all belief in the spiritual and to rob life of its best light and joy. The new-fangled "agnostic—"for the "infidel" has now gone out of fashion—crowds aside the priest; sanctity is laughed at as hypocrisy, and religion is being relegated to the limbo of lost superstitions and exploded myths. If the Presbyterians can call a halt to this mad and melancholy iconoclasm, which threatens to destroy society if it goes on much longer, they will win universal gratitude; and the very scientists whom they discomfit by convincing them that they are wrong will be most earnest in their praise."

TO VISITORS OF THE COUNCIL.

Our inquiry as to reduction of travelling fare to those proposing to visit the Council at Philadelphia was promptly answered by the Presbyterian, to whom it was addressed, and inquiries privately made of George Junkin, Esq., met with equally prompt response. We had intended publishing these replies, but their substance is pretty fully embodied in the following circular, which has been received since:

Visitors to the Second General Council of the Presbyterian Alliance, Philadelphia, may avail themselves of summer excursion tickets issued by the trunk lines east of Pittsburg to Philadelphia and New Jersey seaside resorts, which pass through Philadelphia, and which are good to come upon to October 1st and to return to November 1st. Special information can be obtained at the railroad stations. Should reduced rates be obtained for delegates they will be announced.

The Presbyterian Board of Publication House, No. 1334 Chestnut street, will be headquarters of the Committee, where delegates and those appointed to read papers are requested to report immediately on arrival and register, and be assigned their places of entertainment.

Visitors to the Council, by applying at the same place personally on their arrival in the city, can obtain information and be introduced to boarding houses and hotels willing to accommodate them at rates varying from $1 to $3 per day.

At the Academy of Fine Arts, on Wednesday evening, September 22d, at 8 o'clock, the members of the Council will be received socially by the Governor of the State and the Mayor of the city.

At the Academy of Music, on Thursday, September 23d, at 11 o'clock a. m., the opening sermon will be preached by the Rev. William M. Paxton, D. D.

The Council will hold its first session on the afternoon of the same day, in Horticultural Hall, at 2.30 o'clock.

The address of welcome by Rev. William P. Breed, D. D.

GEORGE JUNKIN,
Chairman of Business Committee.

Further than the above, the hope has been expressed to us that all will be able to hear enough of the discussions and papers read to pay them for the effort, especially as Horticultural Hall, where Council will hold its daily sessions, is a large one, and provision will be made for overflow meetings in neighboring churches, as at the Evangelical Alliance in New York in 1873.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We are grateful to know that all over the State the crops are better than ever before, and the schools are in consequence opening with an increase of numbers. Parents will please remember that North Carolina does not need any more ignorant citizens.

So says the Orphan's Friend, and we heartily respond.

The report to the United States Government on the inter-oceanic canal scheme is not so favorable as that of Mr. DeLessops. This from Washington, Sept. 1st:

A report on the commercial aspect of the proposed inter-oceanic canal, by James Nimmo, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, has just been issued. In his summary of facts ascertained and conclusions reached in his report, Mr. Nimmo says that the shipping which would annually pass through the canal would amount to but 1,500 ships, or 1,625,000 tons, instead of six million tons as estimated by DeLesseps; that the traffic of the canal would probably be confined almost exclusively to steam vessels; that in the event of the construction of the canal the commerce between the Pacific ports of the United States and Europe would probably seek a passage through the proposed canal in steam vessels.

The American Association for the Advancement of Science which held its 29th meeting at Boston, commencing August 25th ulto., is perhaps the most eminent scientific body in America. Among the hundreds of papers on science in general, especially science applied, which were set to be read before the Association, we find one from Prof. J. R. Blake of Davidson College entitled "Observation on some recent hail storms in North Carolina." If Prof. Blake will furnish this to the readers of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN he will place them and us under obligations.

One's character is what he is; one's reputation is what one is supposed to be. Character must be made or destroyed by one's self; reputation may be the work of one's friends or of one's enemies. Character is the substance; reputation is the shadow which is reflected from it.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Wood, of Statesville, has left for the mountains to spend his vacation.

A friend in a business note, informs us that a day has been selected for a congregational meeting looking to taking steps for the calling of a pastor for Brown Marsh church.

Rev. R. C. Walker with a sketch of the proceedings of Lexington Presbytery, kindly sends us the following note:

Mt. Horeb church is situated in the northeastern portion of Augusta county, Virginia, near Weyer's Cave depot and still nearer the cave itself. The church was organized a few years before the war by members from Augusta church. It is situated in a beautiful country and rich farming region. One of the farms of this section of three hundred acres was recently sold to a Pennsylvanian for $100 per acre—$30,000.

REEDY CREEK, HARMONY PRESBYTERY.

Rev. H. M. Brearley writes from Shoe Heel, N. C., Sept. 1st, 1880: I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Reedy Creek, (Harmony Presbytery) of six days' continuance—services twice a day, morning and night. I was assisted by Rev. J. A. Consar and Dr. J. B. Mack, of Columbia. The preaching—mostly by Dr. Mack was plain, pointed and practical. The people were deeply interested and greatly delighted. There were five additions to the church by examination. Dr. Mack made some encouraging statements in reference to the Theological Seminary at Columbia. I expect to raise $300 for that institution this fall and winter in bounds of Reedy Creek church. There are two other churches in this neighborhood each of which probably will give as much or more. We are determined to do something for this venerable institution which has furnished so many ministers to North and South Carolina and other States. Will not the Alumni of your State lend a helping hand?

In another column we publish "A Correction," which contains much news.

We learn from the Robesonian that Rev. R. Martin, of Shoe Heel, is suffering so much inconvenience from a sprained ankle as to find it necessary to sit in delivering in sermons.

PRESBYTERY OF ORANGE.

"This old Presbytery held its 221st session in the thriving town of Reidsville, N. C., Sept. 1st 1880. In a few years this town has grown rapidly in population and commercial importance. Twelve tobacco manufactories there now employ twelve hundred hands in preparing this important luxury for its votaries. Some of the presbyteries seem to revel in these odorous domains, and jaws and tongues found continual employment in various realms of flowing streams or quiet cloudland. The Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches are all neat buildings, located near together and near the centre of the town.

Rev. J. S. Watkins, of Raleigh, was chosen moderator, and Rev. T. U. Faucette and elder F. S. Royster, clerks. Twenty-two ministers and twenty-six elders were present. An unusual number of calls were presented, and the following new pastorates are ordered to be formed, viz: Rev. J. W. Primrose with Oxford and Shiloh; and Rev. H. T. Darnal with Durham. Mr. Darnal leaves Milton for the new field; and Mr. Primrose gives up Littleton, and his evangelistic work.

The subject of most importance before the body was its division. Strong opposition to the measure was manifested, and it was carried in one form by a majority of only one. But on modification of the line of division, an overture to the Synod of North Carolina, asking for a division, was passed by a vote of perhaps two-thirds. The proposed line will make two presbyteries, (East Orange and West Orange?) about equal in members and strength. The parting of brethren will be sad indeed, but it is thought that the work of the Church can be prosecuted more effectually.

One new church has been organized near Scotland Neck, and is called Nahalah.

The meeting was saddened by the sudden and serious illness of one of its members, a ruling elder. It is hoped that the good hand of God will rescue him from danger.

A committee was appointed to draft a paper on worldly amusements and drinking, which should be reported at the next stated meeting of Presbytery. Chapel Hill was selected as place of meeting on Wednesday before the third Sabbath in April, 1881.

Any further news that may be received will be given to our readers next week.

GRANVILLE PRESBYTERIAN UNION.

The second session of the Granville Presbyterian Union was held at Shiloh church (Rev. J. W. Primrose, pastor,) on the 28th and 29th of August. The Union was organized last spring, and held its first session at Nutbush church in May, Rev. D. E. Jordan, pastor. The Union is composed of the ministers, elders and deacons in the county, and all laymen present. In this respect it is an improvement on the elders and deacons conventions, we think. The object is to knit together the churches of Granville, to encourage one another, to discuss the work of the Church, to promote its progress, to enlist the intelligent interest of all members, and to develop material for Christian work, and among our young men, for future elders and deacons. This session at Shiloh was moderated by Col. James S. Amis, Oxford elder, and was quite a success. The attendance on Saturday was large, and on Sunday the crowd was estimated at four hundred people—some said five hundred. About one-half were Presbyterians, every church being represented. On Saturday morning the congregation listened attentively to a sermon by Rev. T. U. Faucette. In the afternoon the "pastor's work" was discussed by Elder Samuel Watkins, of Henderson church, Rev. J. W. Primrose, Dr. G. A. Wilson, elder of Grassy Creek church, Col. Jas. S. Amis, elder of Oxford church, Chas. Newberry, Grassy Creek, Elder T. A. Watkins, of Shiloh, and Rev. Thomas Drew, of Roanoke Presbytery. The discussion took a wide range, and all were interested, especially in the paper presented by Dr. Wilson.

On Sunday morning Rev. Thomas Drew preached, and in the afternoon Rev. D. E. Jordan. The discourse of Brother Jordan was prepared especially for the occasion, and admirably set forth the historical allegiance of the Presbyterian Church to the sole authority of the Sacred Scriptures, under misrepresentation and deadly persecution. This was followed by discussions of Sabbath school work, which was participated in by Rev. T. U. Faucette, Elder, N. D. Newton, of Oak Hill church, Elder J. R. Young, of Henderson church, Deacon J. M. B. Hunt, of Nutbush church, and others. Late in the afternoon the congregation was dismissed, and every road was crowded with vehicles.

This is part of our aggressive work in Granville, and we feel much encouraged. The next meeting is at Geneva church on the fifth Sunday, and Saturday previous, in October.

Rev. Thomas Drew, of Roanoke Presbytery, having taken much interest in our meetings, was made a member of the Union.

The singing, under the direction of Messrs. J. N. Daniel, Samuel L. Graham and Dr. D. B. Gardeu, was delightful.

May we have many more such meetings, and better ones. P.

A CORRECTION.

[The item to which the following refers was given in our "State News" with due credit to the journal with which it was presumed to have originated]

An item of news appeared in your last week's issue which needs correction. The main fact alleged, viz.: that Mr. W. J. Best gave $300 to the Second Presbyterian church of Raleigh, is true. But he did not give it to clear the church of debt, for there was and is no debt of any consequence upon the church, the expense of building being met, for the most part, as it was incurred.

It is an error, too, to speak of the church as finished. It is in a condition to be used for public service. The main auditorium is complete, but we still need a furnace and fixtures for gas. It was for the purpose of putting it into a condition for immediate use that Mr. Best, with rare kindness and liberality, gave $300, the precise sum that I told him was necessary for that purpose. But according to the very moderate estimate of Mr. T. A. Kingsley, the gentleman who has planned and superintended the building, it will take, at the very least, $1,000 more to complete the lecture room and put in the furnace and gas. I hope your readers will keep this fact in mind and gladden the heart of the pastor by prompt and liberal contributions. The liberality already exercised in its behalf by the members of all the Protestant denominations not only of Raleigh, but throughout the State, has been highly gratifying, and I hope it will be continued and crowned by the additional sum still needed. Mr. Best, in particular, has acted in a noble manner throughout. A condition attached to his gift was that the name of the donor should not be divulged, and it was perhaps equally unexpected to himself and to the pastor of the church that the name of the giver became known. It was probably first surmised, then assumed, then affirmed, and being true it could not be contradicted. Never was a church built on a more catholic basis. The larger part was of course built by Presbyterians, but we are indebted to members of the Episcopal, Baptist and Methodist churches for very generous contributions. It is hoped that those scattered all over the State who have given their money to the church will feel that they have a personal property in it, that it is in some sense their own, and visit it when they can. The pews are all free, as we believe to be the primitive and Christian custom.

The first communion in the new church was held last Sunday, and in the absence of the pastor of the First church, was largely attended by members of that congregation. On this interesting occasion two persons were added to the church on the confession of their faith in the Saviour. JOS. M. ATKINSON.

ALAMANCE CHURCH.

A Historical Address delivered at the Dedication of its Fourth House of Worship on October 18th 1879, by Rev. C. H. Wiley.

I know that I shall be laying your readers under an obligation by directing their attention to this timely admirable address. The overflowing congregation who heard it when spoken, felt that of all men the speaker was "the right man in the right place." Acquainted from boyhood with the general and ecclesiastical history of his native State, and especially familiar with the local and family traditions of the congregation and neighborhood, being in fact, the grandson of the pious and public spirited gentleman who gave the ground on which the church was erected, Mr. Wiley spoke with the glowing eloquence which springs from living sympathy with an inspiring theme. As a people and as a church, we are now what the Past has made us. If it be true that "the child is Father of the man" it is not less true on the grander scale of nations, that the Past is the parent of the Present. It is then surely a work, pious and patriotic, to gather up with reverent hands, the perishable memorials of ancestral worth, ere they pass away altogether. Like the books of the ancient Sibyls these memorials, become more precious, as they become less numerous and accessible. If the facts and recollections embodied in this address had been merely collected and assorted in the most perfunctory manner, their intrinsic importance would invest them with extraordinary interest. How much more when presented with picturesque grace and graphic force by a practised writer in full possession of all the authenticated facts, and traditions! This precious brochure has made us eager to have a history of the Presbyterian Church in the State, executed by the same cunning hand.

No one can rise from the perusal of this address, without having more exalted conceptions of the noble founders of the State, and of the pioneers of learning and religion amongst us. The virgin soil was sown with the best seed of our own country, and the old world; and we are glad to believe that the loftiest qualities which we proudly recognize in her most worthy representatives are the legitimate inheritance of the glorious Past. So picturesque and pleasing are many of the incidents and characters commemorated in these pages, that Sir Walter Scott would have conned them with delight; and had they been a legacy to him, as they have been to us, they would have been turned to golden uses by the magic wand of the wizard of the North.

It only remains to say, that the mechanical execution of the address—the typography and paper—is all that could be desired; but nothing more than might have been expected from the skilled printers, and binders Edwards, Broughton, & Co., of Raleigh, N. C. J. M. A.

Law is very like a sieve—it is easy to see through it, but one must be considerably reduced before he gets through.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

West Hanover, met at Byrd church, Aug. 18th. Rev. Dr. T. D. Bell was elected moderator. Rivanna church recently organized was entered on the roll. Mr. Henry M. Woods, son of Rev. Edgar Woode, and Mr. Richard V. Lancaster were received as candidates for the ministry. Rev. Messrs. Henry and Petrie were appointed a committee to organize a church at Mount Harmony. Rev. L. B. Johnson by leave resigned the pastoral charge of Bryd and Hebron churchee, and accepted a call from the churches of Gordonsville and Orange Courthouse.

Holston, met in Holston, Tenn., Aug. 19th. Rev. E. McNair of Mossy Creek was dismissed to the Presbytery of Layfayette, Licentiate G. F. Robertson was transferred to the Presbytery of Ouachita. Rev. Geo. T. Lyle was received from the Presbytery of Greenbrier. A missionary meeting was held, in which the Presbytery took final leave of Rev. Joshua Phillips and his newly wedded wife, who expect to sail for Greece in the early part of October.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

Presbytery of Lexington, at Mt. Horeb church, closed on Saturday last, August 28th, another pleasant semi-annual meeting. Altogether during the session of the body twenty-four ministers and twenty-two ruling elders were present. The Presbytery was opened with a sermon by Rev. F. H. Gaines, moderator, from Rom. ix.: 3. Rev. W. T. Price was elected moderator, and Rev. Messrs. Alexander Spruut and J. H. Smith, clerks.

Dr. J. L. Kirkpatrick presented the report of the Committee on Minutes of the General Assembly. The report was quite an exhaustive one and embraced the topics referred to Presbyteries,—it was ably discussed by Drs. Kirkpatrick, and Mullally, Rev. S. W. Watkins and others, and its resolutions adopted. Dr. Richardson of the Central Presbyterian was present as a corresponding member and was heard on behalf of his paper, and Presbytery adopted a resolution commending said journal to our people. The Committee on Publication, made an interesting report on the Colportage Work. A capital of $138 85 had been furnished by the churches applied to by the committee for funds for said purpose, and they had but two colporteurs employed—the one Mr. F. T. Pitman, student of Union Theological Seminary, and the other Mr. Parker elder of Bethesda church—the former labored three months, the latter two—they sold $334 87 worth of books. This is the first effort of Presbytery in this work, and shows that it is about to follow in the footsteps of Winchester Presbytery, and make this an important adjunct in the work of furthering the interests of Presbyterianism. Rev. R. C. Walker, chairman of Committee on Domestic Mission, reported on behalf of said committee. Interesting addresses were made by Messrs. W. S. P. Bryan, F. J. Brooke, and G. L. Brown. The report showed that the evangelists and missionaries had been paid in full. The churches in our Presbytery with one or two exceptions had been supplied. New points had been occupied and one application for the organization of a church presented. This is in Rockingham county. A committee to organize said church was appointed subsequently. Our churches last spring had reported contributions to evangelistic work and sustentation, larger than for several years.

Drs. Kirkpatrick and Mullally, and Rev. D. A. Penick, with ruling elder, Col. J. T. L. Preston and Prof. J. J. White of Washington and Lee University were appointed a committee to report on New Directory at next stated meeting.

The pastoral relation between Rev. A. L. Moffitt and Loch Willow church was dissolved at the request of the pastor, Rev. J. A. Waddell, M. D., was dismissed to Presbytery of South Alabama. Mr. J. McL. Seahrook, licentiate of Charleston Presbytery was granted leave to supply McDowell church till next stated meeting of Presbytery. The Committee on Preservation of Records reported that the work was progressing favorably and that all the volumes would soon be transcribed except the last which the Stated Clerk could not furnish until after the present meeting of presbytery. The diligence of the committee was commended and the treasurer directed to pay $75, additional for the work. The committee stated that they would probably ask for $50 more making in all about $200, to be transcribed. The paper "Centennial Ruling," has cost about $6 25 a ream, but was well suited for the work. The entire cost would hardly exceed $250 for fifteen volumes, entire records since formation of Presbytery, Sept. 1786.

Presbytery received under its care as a candidate for the ministry, Mr. J. Huffman a member of Mt. Horeb church.

The Rev P. Fletcher and Dr. Mullally and elders D. S. Bell of Tinkling Springs and Wm. M. Tate of Hebron were nominated commissioners to the General Assembly and Messrs. Bryan and Brooke and Col. J. T. L. Preston and W. H. Bryan alternates. Time for next stated meeting was fixed for the Tuesday before the second Thursday of May 1881, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The usual vote of thanks was tendered the congregation of Mt. Horeb church and the citizens of the neighborhood, and the minister in charge of the M. E. Church, South, at New Hope for offering house of worship.

Rev. A. H. Mecklin writes: "I have just returned from a camp meeting at Lebanon church, Miss. It was a pleasant season, and I trust profitable to many. Seven were added to the church by profession and one by letter. Mr. J. H. Alexander, of Kosciusko, did most of the preaching.

On the 16th of August, the congregation at Covington, Va., made out a call to Rev. A. R. Cocke as pastor. Mr. Cocke who is now at Hot Springs, Ark., has it under consideration.

The cause of suicide is often hard to define, and many have no idea just what prompts the rash act. The cause, however, can be traced unquestionably to despondent feelings, produced by Torpid Liver. To destroy despondency and create a cheerful feeling by taking Simmons Liver Regulator would be the saving of the would-be suicide from an untimely end. It seems almost like waking from a dream to find oneself so clear headed, so light spirited and so full of gay thoughts, when despondent feelings existed until taking Simmons Liver Regulator, when they were dissipated like a cloud before sunshine and it seemed as though life was worth living.

A sort of Tichborne case has arisen here. A Mr. Phillips abandoned his wife and son in Brooklyn forty years ago, and all trace of him was lost. THE BOOK OF BOOKS! THE GREAT BIBLE DICTIONARY,
And Repository of a Million Facts about the Sacred Scriptures.

An eminent Christian philologist calls it "THE CHRISTIAN'S ILLUSTRATED WEBSTER." Grandest Compendium of Biblical information ever prepared. All in one volume. Invaluable to Clergymen of every Denomination; to Collegians of every grade; to Sunday-school Teachers and Scholars; to every Christian Man, Woman and Child in the English-Speaking World.

Contains First.—The New and Complete Illustrated DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY BIBLE, comprising a General Index, in which the various Persons, Places and Subjects mentioned in it are accurately referred to and every difficult word explained.

Contains Second.—Brown's famous CONCORDANCE OF THE NEW AND OLD TESTAMENTS. The most perfect and comprehensive book of its class ever issued, and almost the only sacred text book that the Professors of both Oxford and Cambridge, in England, recommend to their students.

Contains Third.—PROPER NAMES PRONOUNCED AND DEFINED. Included in this is every name of person or place occurring from the first verse of Genesis to the last verse of Revelations.

Contains Fourth.—TABLE OF KINDRED AND AFFINITY forbidden to marry together.

Contains Fifth.—A Table of the several PASSAGES OF THE OLD TESTAMENT QUOTED BY CHRIST AND HIS APOSTLES.

Contains Sixth.—Tables of Scripture MEASURES, WEIGHTS AND COINS.

Contains Seventh.—A Chronological Index of the TIME FROM ADAM TO CHRIST.

... tain a MERE ABSTRACT of the immense store of Biblical information heaped up in this wonderful volume. The most PROFOUND SCHOLAR as well as the most SIMPLE CHILD can glean useful knowledge from this great storehouse of sacred facts. This volume contains the exact results of the persistent inquiries and investigations of all the most learned and devout Christians of every sect and country. Hundreds of hours are saved by this volume to even the ripest Biblical Scholars, for here they can find, in an instant, the exact words of every text, with every parallel passage bearing upon it.

The Sunday-School Teacher will find this book serve his purpose, as a ready reckoner does the purpose of a business man. At one glance he has a CERTAIN knowledge of any name, allusion, doctrine, etc. The Unlearned Christian can here find the meaning of the various subjects alluded to in his Pastor's discourses. The Christian Reasoner can draw from this Biblical armory facts and arguments to confute the assumptions of the dogmatic or disbelieving disputant. The Humble Christian can here find the numerous texts fitted to comfort him, to lift his soul out of the quagmire of disbelief to the solid ground of unshaken faith.

Fifty-Eight Full Page Illustrations of INCIDENTS, PERSONS and EVENTS, ...

A column of this paper would not contain ... illustrative of the WONDERFUL, TERRIBLE and BEAUTIFUL scenes which make the Bible the most interesting as well as the best of books. A DILIGENT STUDENT might spend years SEARCHING THE BEST BOOKS in the BEST BIBLICAL LIBRARIES in the land, and then he would not have a tithe of the knowledge easily procurable from the pages of THIS GREAT AND UNIQUE VOLUME.

GREAT OFFER.—The price of this large and beautiful 800 page volume has been put at the remarkably low sum of $3.00, including postage to any place in the United States or Canada. This makes it the cheapest volume ever offered to Christian readers.

ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.—In order to introduce this great work as quickly as possible, we will send it post-paid to any Clergyman or Sunday-school Teacher, or to any person who will act as agent, at the reduced price of $1.40. To all others the price $3.00. Address, WORLD MANUFACTURING CO., 122 Nassau Street, New York City.

FOR THE FAMILY.

How Johnny Minded the Baby.

MRS. ANNIE A. PRESTON.

"Johnny, mind what I am saying:
The men are in the meadow haying—
While I am their dinner getting,
You must keep the babe from fretting."
Then this Johnny boy kept scolding
While he was the baby holding,
"Oh!" he sighed, "there is no knowing
The fun they're having in the mowing."
Just then the baby ceased his weeping
And soon both she and John were sleeping.
And Johnny dreamed, "They'll think I'm funning,
I'll run away and keep on running."
Soon he dreamed that he was hiding,
In a cart where he was riding.
Then he fell and kept on falling,
And called and called and kept on calling,
The noon bell rang and kept on ringing,
The robin sang and kept on singing,
The river flowed and kept on flowing,
The farmers mowed and kept on mowing,
The soft winds sighed and kept on sighing,
The baby cried and kept on crying,
The kitten slept and kept on sleeping,
The chickens peeped and kept on peeping,
His coat was torn and kept on tearing,
The peacock stared and kept on staring,
His mother cooked and kept on cooking,
Towzer looked and kept on looking,
Johnny dropped and kept on dropping,
He wished to stop and keep on stopping—
So he screamed and kept on screaming—
"Johnny! Johnny! you are dreaming!"
Cried mamma her big boy shaking,
And the babe from sleep awaking.

A Tiger's Plaything.

"Well, my boy, if you want a tiger, you've come to the right place, for this and the bit round Fort Perovski are almost the only spots on the whole river where there are any left; indeed, I might say the only spots in Central Asia, except the great jungle of the Illi, two days' journey north of this."

So spoke Col. Petroff (the Russian commandant of the little outpost of Tchiesz, on the Upper Syr-Daria,) to his excited junior officer, Lieut Galkin, who had made up his mind that the first duty of every right-minded officer was to shoot a tiger single-handed, and that life would be a blank to him till he had done so.

"And what's the best way to get at them?" asked the younger man, with a flush of excitement on his handsome face.

"Well, if you're so anxious to make their acquaintance," said the veteran, smiling at the lad's eagerness, "there are several ways of doing it. First and foremost, you can just follow the beast's trail till you come upon him, and then shoot him down; but that's rather dangerous, and not very certain either, for the trail's apt to get blurred in among those big reeds."

"Well, secondly, you can drift along the bank in a boat, and fire at 'em as they come down to drink; but that's not always certain, because, if there's a moon, they see you and run away; and if there's not, you can't see them at all. Thirdly, there's the cage."

"The cage?"

"Yes; you shut yourself up in an iron cage among the reeds, with a big bit of horse-flesh beside it by way of bait; and when the tiger scents the meat, and comes after it, you fire at him."

"Capital!" shouted Galkin, with a loud laugh; "that's quite a new idea. The cage be it by all means."

"Well, I wouldn't begin with that, if I were you, my boy," said the Colonel, gravely, "for it's a risky business at best. A tiger-hunt is very good fun so long as it is you who are hunting the tiger; but when the tiger takes to hunting you, it alters the case a good deal."

However, Galkin was not to be moved; and daybreak the next morning found him in his cage among the huge reeds (tall enough to overtop a six foot grenadier with his cap on), through which, as they swayed in the morning breeze, he caught a passing glimpse, every now and then of the broad shining river, and the little tumble-down mud hovels and clustering trees on the opposite shore.

The most trying part of an exciting adventure is the waiting for it to begin, and so our hero found it; but luckily he had not long to wait. The Central Asian tiger has a keen scent for prey of any kind; and the warning crackle of the reeds was speedily followed by the gliding out of a huge, gaunt, yellow body, straight towards Galkin's ambush.

Despite his perilous position (for the cage was a pretty old one, and its rusty bars seemed hardly to be trusted against the rush of a full-grown tiger), Galkin could scarcely help laughing at this curious reversal of menagerie rules—the man in the cage, and the wild beast walking round it to look at him. But he was not the man to let either the joke or the danger unsteady his hand. He aimed carefully at the vital spot behind the fore-shoulder, and let fly.

The huge beast leaped high into the air, rolled over on its back, and after a few convulsive kicks lay dead before him. Hurrah! Up sprang Galkin, quite forgetting the cage in his excitement, and hit his head such a bump against the bars that, for a moment, he hardly knew where he was.

The shout was answered by a long, snarling cry and out from the reeds broke a second tiger, evidently a young one, although quite big enough to have finished our friend with one bite. Galkin felt for his cartridge-pouch, to reload for a second shot, when, lo! no pouch was to be found. And now, to his dismay, he perceived that it had been off when he jumped up, and was lying outside the cage, where it had rolled over a slight descent of the land, quite out of his reach.

Here was a pretty piece of business!

But if the hunter was at a nonplus, the tiger himself seemed to be no less so. This cross-barred machine with a motionless human figure inside of it (for Galkin, finding himself defenceless, remained as still as a statue), was a complete puzzle to him. He had never seen anything of the kind before. It might be a trap. Who could tell? On the whole, he appeared to think that his wisest way was to begin with the horse-flesh, which he soon disposed of—a somewhat disagreeable hint to Galkin of what might shortly befall him.

Breakfast over, the tiger-kitten seemed to wax frolicsome. He leaped up against the cage, and put his fore-paws on the top of it, bringing his face so near Galkin's, that the poor lieutenant almost felt the hot, rank breath. Suppose the bars were to give way!

But what did happen was almost as bad. Overbalanced by the beast's weight, the cage rolled over, the unlucky officer along with it; while the tiger, delighted with the sport, and evidently thinking the whole affair a toy meant for his own special amusement, patted it about with his huge paws like a cat playing with a mouse, tumbling it over once or twice, and bumping poor Galkin against the bars till he was pretty well bruised. All at once there came a tremendous crash, as a thick clump of reeds gave way, and splash down into the river went cage, Galkin and all!

Fortunately for our hero, there was a mud bank close to the shore, so that the water only came up to his belt; but even so, to sit waste-deep in a cold river for an indefinite time, with a tiger mounting guard over him, was anything but a pleasant prospect. Moreover the tiger, which was standing on the bank above, with a face of great disgust at the loss of his toy, seemed strongly inclined to leap down after it; in which case, the sportsman would be rolled over in [illegible]ater, and drowned at once.

J[illegible] moment came the sharp crack of a [illegible] tiger fell headlong into the river, while Galkin, looking up, saw a boat coming toward him, pulled by two Tartars, behind whom appeared the grinning face of his friend the Colonel.

"I hope you like your day's sport, my boy," chuckled the old soldier as he opened the cage and pulled out his half-drowned comrade. "I was up stream looking about to see if I could find any game worth firing at, when I heard the crack of your piece; and I came along to see what had happened; and on the whole, I think it's just as well I did."

And Galkin thought so too.—Youth's Companion.

What Killed the Oyster?

Pick up that oyster shell. Do you see a little hole in the hard roof of the oyster's house? That explains why there is a shell but no oyster. A little creature called the whelk, living in a spiral shell, dropped one day on the roof of the oyster's house. "The little innocents," some one has called the whelk. "The little villians," an oyster would call them, for the whelk has an auger, and bores and bores and bores until he reaches the oyster itself, and the poor oyster finds he is going up through his own roof. He goes up, but he never comes down.

A writer speaks of noticing on the shores of Brittany the holes in the oyster bored by its enemy, both burglar and murderer we should call him.

"A little sin, a little sin," cries a boy who may have been caught saying a profane word, or strolling with a bad associate, or reading a bad book, or sipping a glass of beer. "Don't make too much of it," he says.

Young friend, that is the whelk on the oyster's back. You have given the tempter a chance to use his auger, and he will bore and bore till he reaches the centre of all moral worth in the soul, and draws your very life away.

An Unconscious Sermon.

Mr. Harvy was riding slowly along the dusty road, looking in all directions for a stream, or even a house, where he might refresh his tired, thirsty horse with a good draught of water. While he was thinking and wondering, he turned an abrupt bend in the road and saw before him a comfortable farmhouse, and at the same time a boy ten or twelve years old came out into the road with a small pail and stood directly before him.

"What do you wish, my boy?" said Mr. Harvy, stopping his horse. "Would your horse like a drink, sir!" said the boy respectfully.

"Indeed he would, and I was wondering where I could obtain it."

Mr. Harvey thought little of it, supposing, of course, the boy earned a few pennies in this manner, and therefore he offered him a bit of silver, and was astonished to see him refuse it.

"I would like you to take it," he said, looking earnestly at the child and observing for the first time that he limped slightly.

"Indeed, sir, I don't want it. It is little enough I can do for myself or any one. I am lame, and my back is bad, sir; and mother says no matter how small a favor may seem, if it is all we are capable of, God loves it as much as He does a very large favor; and this is the most I can do for others. You see, sir, the distance from Painsville is eight miles to this spot, and I happen to know there is no stream crossing the road that distance, and the houses are all some distance from the road; and so, sir, almost every one passing here from that place is sure to have a thirsty horse."

Mr. Harvy looked down into the gray eyes that were kindling and glowing with the thought of doing good to others, and a moisture gathered in his own as, a moment later, he jogged off, pondering deeply upon the quaint little sermon that had been delivered so innocently and unexpectedly.—Youth's Evangelist.

Messages by Heliograph

The usefulness of the heliograph was recently satisfactorily tested in the transmission of a dispatch from Gen. Stewart, in Afghanistan, announcing the result of an attack on British troops, which was sent from Camp Ghuzni, April 22d, and was received at the India Office, London, on the following day. The news could hardly have been brought more speedily by electric telegraph. The heliograph, signaling right over the heads of the enemy, if necessary, to stations which may be few and far between, does not require any route to be kept open, and cannot be interrupted. A ten-inch mirror, that being the size of the ordinary field heliograph, is capable of reflecting the sun's rays in the form of a bright spot to a distance of fifty miles, where the signal can be seen without the aid of a glass. The adjustment of the instrument is very simple. If an army corps, having left its base where a heliograph station is established, desires to communicate with the other division from a distance of several miles, a hill is chosen and a sapper goes upon it with his heliograph-stand, containing a mirror so as to move horizontally and vertically. A little of the quicksilver having been removed from behind the centre of the mirror, a clear spot is made through which the sapper can look from behind his instrument towards the station he desires to signal. Having sighted the station by adjusting the mirror, he next proceeds to set up in front of the heliograph a rod on which is a movable stud, manipulated like the foresight of a rifle. The sapper, standing behind his instrument, directs the adjustment of this stud until the clear spot in the mirror, the stud and the distant station are in a line. The heliograph is then ready to work, and the sapper has only to take care that his mirror reflects the sunshine on the stud just in front of him to be able to flash signals so that they may be seen at a distance.—Popular Science Monthly.

Hereditary Descent of Beauty.

Mr. Darvin believes that the general beauty of the English upper class, and especially of the titled aristocracy, is probably due to their constant selection of the most beautiful women of all classes (peeresses, actresses or wealthy bourgeoises) as wives through an immense number of generations. The regular features and fine complexions of the mothers are naturally handed down by heredity to their descendants. Similarly it would seem that we must account for the high average of personal beauty amongst the ancient Greeks and the modern Italians by the high average of general taste, the strong love for the beautiful, diffused amongst all classes in both those races. The prettier women and the handsomer men would thus stand a better chance of marrying, other things equal, and of handing down their own refined type of face and figure to their children. If this be so—and evolutionists at least can hardly doubt it—then we should expect everywhere to find the general level of personal beauty highest where there was the widest diffusion of æsthetic taste. Now, our own squalid poor are noticeable, as a rule, for their absolute and repulsive ugliness, even when compared with those of other European countries. Gaunt, hard-faced women, low-browed, bull-dog looking men, sickly, shapeless children, people the back slums of our manufacturing towns. Their painful ugliness cannot all be due to their physical circumstances alone, for the lazzaroni who hang about the streets of Naples must lead lives of about equal hardship and discomfort, yet many of them, both men and women, are beautiful enough to sit as models for a Lionardo. On the other hand, every traveler speaks in high admiration of the beauty and gracefulness displayed by young and old amongst the æsthetic Polynesians; while in many like cases I note that Europeans who have once become accustomed to the local type and decidedly pretty faces extremely common in several savage races whose primitive works of art show them in other ways to possess considerable æsthetic taste. In India, where artistic feeling is universal, almost every man or woman is handsome. On the whole, it seems fairly proved that the average personal beauty everywhere roughly corresponds to the average general love for beauty in the abstract.—Cornhill Magazine.

Insect-Killing Plants.

The plants do not always keep pace with the insect world. The Dionæa, which is native only to the region about Wilmington, N. C., long ago acquired the name of Venus's Fly-trap; It has lately been found, beyond doubt, to digest and absorb the captured insects as nourishment.

Another plant that catches insects to devour them is much more common, the Drosera or Sun-dew, to be found in almost all parts of the northern hemisphere. While the Dionæa catches insects by suddenly closing its leaf on them, the Drosera is provided with gummy globules in which the victim sticks fast. The transparent globules, at the point of tiny bristles, give it the common name of Sun-dew. When prey has been taken on any of these points the surrounding bristles bend toward it to fasten it more securely, and, as is now believed, to take their share in devouring it.

The numerous species of Pitcher-plant which are such curious objects in the early summer drown multitudes of insects. It may be that these plants obtain nourishment from what they capture.

In another example of the capturing of insects the plant certainly does not devour its captives. This may be seen best in August, wherever one can find that wide-spread plant, the Apocynum, or Dog-bane. Its smooth stalk, glossy leaves and delicate pink blossoms look very harmless, but the blossoms themselves are most cruel fly-traps. As the flower hangs, the stamens are farther apart below than above. The fly inserting his bill in the more open portion slips it upward and cannot withdraw it, but hangs in mid-air to die of starvation and swing in the wind like a scare-crow. It is not easy to see just what good it does the plant to make these captures. No doubt it is in some way an advantage to the plant that its stamens are arranged as they are, and this catching of flies may be regarded as incidental to that other advantage. It is possible, also, that the captures are made in self-defense. Insects render plants important service in carrying pollen, for which they are rewarded with honey. If any of them should succeed in getting the honey without carrying the pollen they would rob the plants. It may be that the fly-catching of the Dog-bane, and perhaps also of the Pitcher-plant, is only an act of retaliation on plundering insects. I do not wish to believe that the plants are the aggressors.—Christian Union.

The Boy whose Mother Cuts his Hair.

You can always tell a boy whose mother cuts his hair. Not because the edges of it look as if it had been chewed by an absent minded horse, but you tell it by the way he stops on the street and wriggles his shoulders. When a fond mother has cut her boy's hair, she is careful to guard against any annoyance and muss by laying a sheet on the carpet. It has never yet occurred to her to set him over a bare floor and put the sheet around his neck. Then she draws the front hair over his eyes and leaves it there while she cuts that at the back. The hair which lies over his eyes appears to be surcharged with electric needles, and that which is silently dropping down under his shirt band appears to be on fire. She has unconciously continued to push his head forward until his nose touches his breast and is too busily engaged to notice the snuffling sound that is becoming alarmingly frequent. In the meantime he desires to blow his nose, but recollects that his handkerchief is in the other room. Then a fly lights on his nose and does it so unexpectedly that he involuntarily dodges and catches the point of the scissors in his ear. At this he commences to cry and wish he was a man. But his mother doesn't notice him. She merely hits him on the other ear, to inspire him with confidence, and goes on with the work. When she is through she holds his jacket collar back from his neck, and with her mouth blows the short bits of hair from the top of his head down his back. He calls her attention to the fact, but she looks for a new place on his head, and hits him there, and asks him why he didn't use his handkerchief. Then he takes his awfully disfigured head to the mirror and looks at it, and young as he is, shudders as he thinks of what the boys on the street will say.

Fall Poetry.

A certain young woman named Hannah
Slipped down on a piece of banana;
She shrieked, and O my'd!
And more stars she spied
Than belonged to the star-spangled banner.

A gentleman sprang to assist her,
And picked up her muff and her wrister,
"Did you fall ma'am?" he cried;
"Do you think," she replied,
"I sat down for the fun of it, Mister?"

THE BEST REMEDY
FOR
Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

DANGER IN DISGUISE.

Summer Pestilence Unearthed: and Some Timely Advice About How to Avoid It.

Certain Valuable Facts Made Public.

It is well known that hot weather brings sickness, and that few people go through the Summer without unpleasant symptoms. The mouth becomes dry and parched, the tongue furred with white, the pulse irregular, the head feverish, the body cramped and the limbs swolen and tired. Ladies especially, with their natural delicacy and tendency to female troubles. find the hot weather almost unbearable, while Little Children are dying every day from exhaustion and because Parents neglect precaution and care. A prominent and well known physician of New York asserts as his postive belief that more than threefourths of all socalled Summer complaints arise from disordered secretions, and that these secretionary organs, which by being out of order cause so much trouble, are the Kidneys and Liver. These organs are the governors of the system, and by their movements the other parts are regulated. The brain controls the life, but the lower part of the body rules the health.

There is one, and only one known vegetable that will absolutely regulate and control the Kidneys and Liver at all times and thus prevent the many dangers of the Summer. That vegetable (a West Idia leaf,) is used as the basis of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It is pure, pleasant to the taste and absolutely certain in its results. It keeps those who intelligently use it in perfect health, and cures those whose secretions are deranged. For all urinary complaints of either sex it is infallible. For all bilious troubles it is certain. For the hot season it is invaluable, and it should be used upon the approach of the slightest symptoms. It may save your life or that of some dear friend; it will certainly prevent much suffering.

No remedy in America has ever received such high and enthusiastic commendations.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I take great pleasure in making the following statement: I have been afflicted with a disease of the kidneys for the past two years and have tried numerous remedies with only partial and temporary relief. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me, and after taking it the pain and distress left me, and I am to-day feeling strong and well. I am perfectly satisfied that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is the medicine needed and can cheerfully recomend it to others.

G. W. STAMM.

A Physician's Testimony.

I hereby testify that I have been a practicing physician for twenty seven years, and for many chronic cases in my pretice do recomend Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It was upon my advice that G. W. Stamm, editor of the Industrial Era, obtained this valuable remedy.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is the remedy that will cure the many diseases peculiar to women. Headaches, neuralgia, disordered nerves, weakness, mental shocks, and kindred ailments are effectually removed by its use — The Mother's Magazine.

A Pastor Made Happy.

I have been greatly troubled with my kidneys and liver for over twenty years, and during that entire time I was never free from pain. My medical bills were enormus, and I visited both the Hot and White Springs, noted for the curative qualities of the water. I am happy to say I am now a well man, and entirely as the result of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. With such glorious results, I am only too glad to testify regarding the remedy which has made me so happy.

An Educational Endorsement.

The Rev. C. A. Harvey, D. D., of the Howard University, of Washington, has written the following letter:

GENTLEMEN — I take great pleasure in stating that I have for two years past been acquainted with the remedy known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and that in some cases which had been given up by practitioners of both schools, the speedy change wrought by this remedy seemed but little less than miraculous. I am convinced that no remedy for kidney troubles heretofore discovered can be held for one moment in comparison with it.

Respectfully yours, C. A. HARVEY.

Its Grand Reputation.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has reached a reputation that is not limited by the confines of section or country. There are no injurious substances nor false and temporary stimulants in the preparation. It is purely vegetable and compounded under a formula that has passed severe tests and won endorsements from some of the highest medical talent in the country. — New York World.

Arousing its Readers.

An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. Thousands of thousands are hurrying to their graves because they are carelessly indifferent to the insidious inroads of disease and the means of cure. It is the mission of H. H. Warner & Co., with their Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to arouse men to a sense of their danger and then cure them. — Memphis Appeal.

ABSTRACT OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE 221ST SESSION OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY AT REIDSVILLE, SEPT. 1–4, 1880.

The Presbytery was opened with a sermon on "Home Missions," by Rev. P. H. Dalton, moderator—text: Luke xxiv: 47.

There were present during the session 22 ministers and 27 ruling elders. Seven ministers were absent, and 34 churches were not represented.

Rev. John S. Watkins was chosen moderator, and Rev. T. U. Faucette and F. S. Royster temporary clerks.

Nahalah church was reported as organized since the last meeting in Halifax county, with 10 communicants and 2 elders.

CALLS.

A call from Oxford Church for half of his time, on a salary of $400, was placed in the hands of Rev. J. W. Primrose; also another from the Shiloh church for one-fourth of his time, on a salary of $160.

Calls from the churches of Mebaneville and Bethlehem, for half his time each—the former on a salary of $500 and the latter on a salary of $225 per annum—were placed in the hands of Rev. T. J. Allison.

A call from the church at Durham, for the pastoral services of Rev. H. T. Darnell, for the whole of his time, on a salary of $900 and a house, was placed in his hands.

These calls were all accepted, and the following arrangements made for the several installations, viz:

To install Rev. T. J. Allison at Mebaneville: Rev. F. H. Johnston to preside, preach the sermon and charge the people; Rev. C. N. Morrow to propose the constitutional questions and charge the pastor. On the first Sabbath in October.

To install Mr. Allison at Bethlehem, on the third Sabbath in October: Rev. P. R. Law to preside, preach and charge the pastor; Rev. J. L. Currie to propose the questions and charge the people.

To install Rev. J. W. Primrose at Oxford, on the fourth Sabbath in October: Rev. H. T. Darnall to preside, preach the sermon and charge the people; Rev. D. E. Jordan to propose the questions and charge the pastor.

To install the same at Shiloh, on the first Sabbath in December: Rev. T. U. Faucette to preside, preach and propose the questions; Rev. J. S. Watkins to charge pastor and people.

To install Rev. H. T. Darnall at Durham, on the second Sabbath in October: Rev. J. S. Watkins to preside, preach and charge the pastor; Rev. T. J. Allison to propose the questions and charge the people.

The ministers on these several committees are each alternate to the other.

DISSOLUTIONS.

The pastoral relation between the Rev. B. W. Mebane and the church at Graham was, at his request and with the consent of the church, dissolved. Mr. Mebane had permission to labor out of our bounds till the next meeting.

Also, the pastoral relation between Rev. J. W. Primrose and the church at Littleton was dissolved by mutual consent of parties.

By these changes the churches of Graham, Littleton, Milton and Yanceyville become vacant

VISITING BRETHREN.

Rev. Dr. Martin, of the Presbytery of Roanoke, Rev. T. P. Johnston, of the Presbytery of Concord, Rev. A. M. Watson, of the Presbytery of Memphis, and Rev. A. R. Kilderby, of the Presbytery of East Alabama, being present, were introduced to the Presbytery by the moderator, and invited to take seats as corresponding members.

Rev. J. M. Williams, of the Baptist Church, and Revs. J. N. Lewis, V. A. Sharpe and W. S. Hales, of the M. E. Church South, being present, were introduced to the Presbytery and received as visitors.

DIVISION OF PRESBYTERY.

The following overture was adopted and ordered to be forwarded to the Synod of North Carolina at its next meeting:

"The Presbytery of Orange respectfully overtures the Synod of North Carolina, at its next session in the city of Raleigh, to divide the Presbytery by the following line, viz: The western boundary of Granville county, beginning at the Virginia border to the northeast corner of Orange county; the northern, western and southern boundaries of Orange county, and the western boundary of Wake county from the corner of Orange county, to the southern boundary of the Presbytery; that the territory of the Presbytery lying east of this line be erected into a new Presbytery to be called the Presbytery of East Orange, consisting of the following ministers, viz: R. Burwell, G. W. Ferrill, D. Lacy, D. D., J. M. Atkinson, D. D., T. U. Faucette, D. E. Jordan, J. H. Fitzgerald, L. C. Vass, J. W. Primrose, S. M. Smith, J. S. Watkins, L. H. Baldwin, C. Phillips, D. D., J. L. Currie, T. J. Allison and H. T. Darnall—16; and the following churches (29 in all, names omitted here)."

SUSTENTATION AND EVANGELIZATION.

The following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The General Assembly has urged upon the Presbyteries to raise the sum of $40,000 for Sustentation and recommend that each Presbytery make special effort to raise its proportion thereof; then be it

Resolved, That the Presbytery make every effort to raise its proportion of $40,000 for Sustentation, and $400 for the Invalid Fund.

Resolved, That our agent of Sustentation be directed to distribute among our churches their respective proportions of the sums indicated in the foregoing resolutions, taking as basis of division the pastor's salary, and advise each church through its session of the amount, and request them to make earnest efforts to raise that amount.

Resolved, In view of the fact that Presbytery is in debt for its evangelization work, up to this date, about $700, and that the Presbytery will probably be divided soon; and that the churches are responsible for this sum by their own voluntary action; and in view of the farther fact, that Mebaneville church has generously offered to pay $50 of this sum, provided the whole debt is paid, and then only,

Presbytery directs its agent of Sustentation to state these facts to all our pastors and sessions, remind them of their several apportionments, and urge them at their approaching collection for this Evangelistic Fund to meet fully and promptly the sums expected by apportionment from each one, as essential to the maintenance of our honor and the fulfillment of our duty to our Lord in this vital department of our Master's work in our bounds.

Rev. Messrs. Primrose and Law, evangelists, made reports, which were received.

Rev. Mr. Primrose resigned his office of presbyterial evangelist, and the resignation was accepted to take effect on the 30th of October.

Ebenezer (c) church, in Newbern, was recommended to the Executive Committee of Home Missions for an appropriation of $150 for next year.

Rev. Messrs. Primrose and Vass, with Messrs. John Hutchinson and George Allen, elders, were appointed a committee to forward the work of building a church at Wilson.

SUPPLIES.

For Littleton church:

Rev. T. U. Faucette, 3rd Sabbath in November.

Rev. L. H. Baldwin, 1st Sabbath in December.

Rev. J. M. Atkinson, 1st Sabbath in January.

Rev. D. E. Jordan, 1st Sabbath in February.

Rev. J. S. Watkins, 1st Sabbath in March.

Rev. J. W. Primrose, 1st Sabbath in April.

Rev. L. H. Baldwin, 4th Sabbath in October.

Rev. J. M. Atkinson, 4th Sabbath in November.

Rev. J. S. Watkins, 4th Sabbath in January.

Rev. L. C. Vass, 4th Sabbath in February.

Rev. J. C. Alexander, with J. H. Lindsay and T. M. Holt, elders, were appointed a commission to visit Spring Wood church.

Rev. A. M. Watson was received as a member of this Presbytery.

A historical sketch of the Washington church, prepared by the Rev. S. M. Smith, was received and ordered to be filed.

The annual report of the Trustees of Davidson College was heard and ordered to be read before the congregation after preaching at night.

Col. T. M. Holt was excused for non-attendance at the last meeting of the Board of Trustees of the College.

Mr. C. G. Yates was chosen to fill the vacancy in the Board of Trustees of the Presbytery caused by the death of Col. J. Irvin Scales.

The stated clerk reported the work of copying the old records of Presbytery, which he had been directed to do, as finished, and presented the copy for inspection.

The work was approved, and a committee, consisting of Rev. L. C. Vass and Elder Geo. Allen, was appointed to verify the copy by careful comparison with the originals.

Col. J. S. Amis was appointed to write the history of Shiloh church, Rev. P. R. Law that of Pittsboro church, Rev. A. M. Watson that of Asheboro church, Rev. R. Burwell that of Oakland church and Col. R. B. Watt that of Yanceyville church.

Presbytery resolved to hold the next stated meeting at Chapel Hill, on Wednesday before the third Sabbath in April, 1881, at 8 p. m.

The usual vote of thanks was adopted.

The Presbytery then adjourned to meet in Raleigh during Synod, at the call of the moderator.

HOME EVANGELIZATION.

As we have entered upon the month, during which by the General Assembly's appointment, our churches and Christian people contribute to the evangelistic fund, it may be well to consider the subject above mentioned. The amount asked by our Assembly's Committee, for providing evangelists for the destitute positions of our Southern Church during the coming year is only $20,000. This is not a large sum, whether we consider the strength of the churches, that are expected to furnish it or the magnitude of the work which it is designed to aid. Our Southern Presbyterian Church extends over fifteen States, and embraces twelve Synods, sixty-five Presbyteries and a membership of nearly one hundred and twenty thousand. Surely $20,000 is not a large amount for such a body to contribute to be expended in bringing our own unconverted countrymen under the saving power of the Gospel. Yet this sum, our secretaries of Home Missions inform us is nearly two and a half times larger than any contribution made during a year by our churches to this object. It is perfectly obvious to every observer, that our Southern Presbyterian Church, prosecutes its pastoral work with much more liberality and success, than it does its evangelistic labors. Within our borders, by far the larger part of our ministers, are engaged in settled charges pastors, or stated supplies and most of the ministry is employed in sustaining established pastorates. With more than one thousand ministers on our church roll, last year only thirty-three evangelists were aided in twenty-eight Presbyteries from the Assembly's evangelistic fund, and counting those employed by Presbyteries, who do their work independently of the Assembly's committee, it is probable that the evangelistic force of the Southern Church does not exceed sixty ordained ministers. While for meeting pastors' salaries, our church raises annually more than $500,000, in no year has it provided as much as $20,000 to send men to preach the Gospel to the poor and ungodly outside of the established congregations. It is true that many pastors do more or less missionary work, especially in localities adjacent to their special field. But pastors, owing to the demands made upon them in their particular charges, can do the work of evangelists only to a limited extent, and if we are to overtake the destitutions in our land, ordained ministers, without fixed charges, must be more largely employed. We do not think that our Church is doing too much for the pastor, but are fully persuaded that it is doing too little for the evangelists. The facts, and figures, above given, demonstrate the truth, that in the practical workings of our Church, we have failed properly to appreciate, and use the office of evangelist. They also go far towards explaining, that much mooted question "Why does not our Church advance in numbers as rapidly as other denominations?" The farmer who does not employ laborers enough for his acreage, can not garner a large harvest. The Church that sends forth few reapers into the world's harvest fields, cannot secure numerous sheaves, or multiply its converts, with rapidity. Home Missions to be efficiently conducted need more attention to the importance of the work and to the office and functions of the evangelist.

H. G. H.

GEORGE WISHART AND THE ASSASSIN.

While Wishart was busy with his administrations in Ayrshire, terrible tidings reached him from the city he had left. As is often the case in this world, it was the unexpected evil which had happened; and Dundee, after driving away her best friend that she might avoid the vengeance of Beaton, now lay in anguish under the terrible scourge of pestilence. But it may be that above the wailing which rose from so many homes, some hearts still caught the echo of words of Christian hope spoken by their banished preacher; and those who mused sadly on the fulfilled prophecy of Wishart's farewell sermon, could remember also how he had bidden the sufferers in the coming trouble find hold in a merciful God. And surely something of the love which is above all earthly love must have been shown forth to the miserable city in the wealth of pity and forgiveness which the servant of Jesus Christ had ready for those who had scorned and forsaken him. Without apparently a thought of his own wrongs, or a moment's hesitation on account of his own danger, he made haste to re-enter the door which sorrow had suddenly opened for him, only longing to offer again to the poor in spirit the treasure which had been too lightly esteemed in days of prosperity. "They are now in trouble, and need comfort," was the reason he gave for returning at once to the plague stricken city; and his Ayrshire friends pleaded against it in vain.

The day after he reached Dundee a great company assembled to hear Wishart preach, and because the risk of contagion would have been too great in any building, the meeting-place was at the East Port of the town. The sick and infected had their place without, and those whose houses the plague had not yet touched gathered within, while Wishart, standing on the gate, between the two crowds, read out his text from the 107th Psalm, "He sent his word and healed them." Then, turning for a moment from the wan and eager faces beneath him to speak first to the good Physician, he said, "It is neither herb nor plaster, O Lord, but Thy word that healeth all." Thereafter followed what must have been, indeed, a wonderful sermon; for when it ended, the hearts of the hearers were so encouraged that the pestilence had lost its terror—indeed, it seemed to have transformed itself into a friendly messenger sent to summon the weary home.

That was only one of numerous services held in that strange place, to the great joy of many sick and sorrowful ones whom Wishart comforted there with the comfort that had been given him of God. Nor did he confine his efforts for the air of Dundee to preaching; he visited the sick and dying in their homes, and his tender care for their bodily welfare so moved the hearts of the magistrates that the poor patients were provided for at the public expense, and fared as well as their rich fellow-sufferers.

One might have thought that the bitterest enmity would have been pacified and that a man occupied in such blessed ministry, here, for the time being at least, a life which none would seek to harm. But Beaton's selfish and ambitious soul apparently knew no human tenderness. He had long ago recognized in the doctrine of the Reformers a force which was adverse to his own power; there was to be no truce therefore in the warfare waged against it, nor any scruple made about the means employed to gain long-desired victory.

Dundee, garrisoned by the plague, was secure against a visit from the Cardinal in person; but there were those who would enter the infected city if gold were to be gained by it, and Beaton was able and willing to pay for the doing of his errands. One day, as Wishart came down the steps from his place of preaching on the East Gate, he saw a stranger in priestly garb waiting for him below, with his hand hidden in the folds of his gown. Something in his attitude and expression struck the preacher as peculiar, and with a sudden intuitive perception he guessed what it meant. "My friend, what would you do?" he asked as he came near. And, quick as a thought, his grasp was on the other's wrist, and he had drawn forth and taken possession of the dagger held by the stranger. Then the miserable wretch grovelled before the man he had been hired to murder, openly confessing, in his terror and humiliation, what was the wrong he had come for, and who was to pay him his wages. Meanwhile, however, the news of the minister's danger had spread rapidly through the dispersing congregation, and reached the ears of the sick outside, who were probably waiting until the others had gone. Then there arose a wild tumult of wrath, finding vent in one loud and determined outcry for vengeance. "Give the traitor to us, or we will take him by force!" was the shout. The gate was burst open, and when the trembling criminal saw the furious and ghastly mob that swept in, he must indeed have thought his doom was near. But Wishart flung his arms about him, and sheltered him in a brother's embrace. "Whosoever troubleth him shall trouble me," he said; and his voice acted upon the angry spirits around him like a spell.

"He hath hurt me in nothing," he added, calmly; "but he has let us understand what we may fear in times to come. We will watch better."

Thus the strange scene ended, and he whose life had been saved by his intended victim, passes off the stage of history. We would fain hope, nevertheless, that John Wigton, that "desperate priest," never returned to his master the Cardinal but being moved to repentance by the goodness of Wishart, sought and found the Almighty's forgiveness and eternal life through the mercy of Wishart's Lord.

Soon after this the plague seems to have abated in Dundee; and when matters in the town were again looking brighter, her friend and helper prepared to leave. "The battle here is over," said Wishart, "and God calls me to another."

He was not a soldier who could quietly wait to enjoy the gratitude of the people delivered from danger, while there was work for him to do in other regions, and he heard the voice of his Captain calling him on. What he had wrought for Dundee by the infectious example of his courage and tenderness, as well as by the blessed words of Christian comfort and hope he spoke in that terrible time, can scarcely be estimated too highly. Never except for a passing visit, did he enter its gates again; but the memory of good deeds he left behind him has been kept there through the centuries. The wall that encompassed the city in Wishart's time has long been a thing of the past; but the East Port still remains, preserved for the sake of the brave and gentle preacher who loved the town so well.—Catholic Presbyterian.

A PRAYER.

BY ISAAC WILLIAMS.

Give me not what I ask, but what is good,
Merciful Saviour. Make me Thine own,
And take me: of myself I am afraid,
O take me from myself! O take away
Whate'er of self is in me, and I pray
Give me on what my spirit may be stayed,
And that I know full well is but Thyself alone.

MATERIAL BENEFITS OF MISSIONS.

Human nature being what it is, we are quite sure that the division of Christendom into different sects or Churches, if it be an evil, is not without a compensating good. Probably more is thus effected than could be were the forces of our entire Protestantism massed, and wielded by a single organization. These many subdivisions secure a careful and detailed supervision, a vigilance and economy that are frequently wanting in large and complicated enterprises, such as the missionary work would be were it carried on by by a single agency. If we may trust a recent computation, the seventy missionary societies of Protestant Christendom have now about 2,500 missionaries scattered over almost the entire heathen world, with 20,000 native laborers and probably 700,000 communicants, and 1,650,000 native Christian adherents. It costs a great sum in the aggregate, to maintain this "salvation army" in the field (nearly seven million dollars a year), but these figures are insignificant when compared to the army or naval expenditures of even one of the smaller powers of Europe. It is asserted on high authority that the American government has spent twice as much every year, for forty years, in fighting the Indians on the borders, as all the missionary societies of the world are spending for the conversion of the heathen.

The educational work of missions is a great one, and without intending it, it is at some points the leading interest, but it is Christian education, thoroughly so, of which we have in our country rather the tradition than the reality. A half million scholars are being taught in twelve thousand of these Christian mission schools, and thus the kingdom is coming, in many obscure places, literally without observation.

A great preparatory work has been done, in the way of a many-tongued Christian literature. That main reliance of Protestantism—rather, we should say, of all enlightened Christians—the Bible, has been translated into 226 languages and dialects, and printed in nearly 400 versions. Many of these languages were first put into writing by the missionaries.

Christianity carries civilization with it. Thus, as an incident of missionary influence, we just now hear that there is an increasing inquiry from the remote countries where they live and teach as to the cost of agricultural and mechanical implements. It is probable that the demand for our products of this description will soon be very considerable, and it is not impossible that the next generation of our countrymen may thereby reap a substantial return from the wise economy, as well as Christian liberality, of their predecessors.

But we are not to regard a work so sacred as that of Missions in a mercenary spirit. It is to be prosecuted for the glory of Christ and the salvation of men. And notwithstanding the providential divisions to which we have alluded, there is a real unity. The spirit that animates is the same, and the ends to be accomplished are identical. That great consummation, the conversion of the world, will carry with it all the minor and the material blessings that go along with Christian civilization.—Canada Presbyterian.

SAVED BY A MOTHER'S HAND.

In a neighboring town there lived a poor widow, who had an only child, who was her only comfort and delight. One fine and lovely day, she asked her mother if she could go out to play. Her mother being busy, and thinking no harm would befall her, gave her consent. She trotted off so happy as could be. The day passed slowly around, and nothing was seen of the darling child; the mother began to get frightened and went to look for her child and could not find her. At last, she heard a cry for help, and turning in the direction of which she heard the cry, she saw her child at the bottom of a large cistern, the water being very deep. As soon as the child saw its mother she began to cry, but the mother tried to comfort her by saying, "Do not cry, darling, mamma will save you," and so she lay down and reached down her hand, and as she did so, the child held up its hand as far as it could reach, and the mother grasped it and raised her child from her perilous position. She was taken home, and while being stripped of her wet clothes, was asked if she wasn't frightened while in the cistern. She replied, saying, "Not when I heard mamma's voice, for I knew when she put her arm down as far as she could reach and I raised my hand as high as I could reach, I was safe." Now, dear reader, how many people might be saved, if they would only reach up their hands as high as they could reach, to God, who would be ever ready to lift them up the rest of the way!—Religious Herald.

DISCOVERIES OF CHRIST.

BY REV. T. L. CUYLER.

There was one appearance of our divine Master to His little flock that is ever running with spiritual suggestions. It was that memorable scene at early dawn on the strand of Gennesaret. A dark, lonesome night of disappointment the seven fishermen had passed through. That night they caught nothing. (Our fishery for souls is apt to be a failure when Jesus is not with us.) In the misty morning, as they pull in, discouraged, towards the beach, they descry a stranger waiting for them. "Have ye any food?" Supposing him to be some Galilean who had come down early to purchase fish, they call out in reply, "No!" At once the mysterious stranger says to them, "Fling the net on the right side of the boat, and ye shall find." The net is no sooner lowered, than it swarms instantly with fishes! Another morning and another miracle is suggested as instantly, and John cries out, "It is the Lord!"

Love has keen insight. It was the apostle of love, the man who nestled nearest to Christ's bosom at the paschal supper, who first recognized the Master. We must not strain this passage too hard; but how forcibly it recalls that other passage, "He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love!" Jesus manifests Himself soonest and oftenest to those whose hearts are on the lookout for Him. To them He becomes visible as He does not to the blind careless world. As a mother's eye can recognize the features of her son after years of absence, so the eye of a believer can recognize his Lord. It is both our fault and our loss that we do not oftener see Jesus in hundreds of cases through our whole lives. If love and faith were looking for Him, they would see Him.

And what blessed surprises He often gives us! For example, we are overtaken by sudden trial that bursts on us like a night-storm. Our boat seems likely to founder. We cannot understand why the trial came, or for what purpose this tempest has struck us. As soon as we cast ourselves down in humble, penitential prayer, and ask for light and help, we begin to discover a form moving towards us across the billows. We hear a voice, "It is I; be of good cheer, be not afraid." When we recognize our Lord through the driving gloom, we find that all this storm of trouble was not unknown to Him. He had been watching it and permitting it, and watching us also. But for the visitation of adversity and tempest we might not have had such a glorious revelation of our blessed Friend and Deliverer. Brethren, we can well afford to go through a great many dark hours and trying providences if they bring us fresh and precious discoveries of Him. Love can see through the dark, and cries out joyfully, "It is my Lord!"

We ought to write this sentence at the foot of every important event in our spiritual history. Have we had some especial success in our church or Sabbath school, or any enterprise of Christian beneficence? Instead of attributing the full draught in the net to any preaching or teaching or human agency, we ought to say at once, as John did, "It is the Lord!" He hath done all this for us and by us. Paul never claimed for himself any credit in standing unawed before Nero. "The Lord stood with me and strengthened me." Paul never boasted about the number of conversions under his preaching. "The Lord gave the increase."

Jesus has many disguises, but love can discover Him beneath the disguise. The two disciples found Him at Emmaus because they welcomed Him in and besought Him to "abide with" them. Christ sometimes conceals Himself behind some poor disciple's coarse clothes, or behind the couch of some sick sufferer, or up in the garret of some old bed-ridden saint. And when we go there on a visit of love, pretty soon we find that Jesus is there, and we hear him say, "Inasmuch as ye do this unto one of the least of my brethren, ye do it unto me." If we went oftener on such errands of charity, we should oftener be able to exclaim, "It is the Lord!"

Not long hence the voyage over life's dim, unsounded sea, will end. As we draw near to the shore of the better country, let us be on the lookout for the waiting Saviour on the strand. As eternity begins to dawn and the shadows disappear, what a joyful recognition will it be to hear Him say, "Come ye blessed, unto me!" and love shall exultingly answer, "It is my Lord!"—N. Y. Evangelist.

STUDY TO HAVE IDEAS.

A suggestive story is told of the late Joseph Harrison, of Philadelphia, inventor of the sectional boiler, for which the Academy of Arts and Sciences awarded him the Rumford medal, and widely known as the partner of Winans in Russian railway contracts. He was climbing the Gemmi, in Switzerland, accompanied by a young man, and the conversation fell on the younger's chances of rising in the world should he embrace the profession of mechanical engineer. Mr. Harrison favored the idea, saying that this was the age of invention and improvement, that machinery was constantly being applied to new uses, and that he who would make it a study and master it in all its forms would never lack for remunerated employment. "But I have no skill in drawing," objected the young man. "Neither have I," said Mr. Harrison; "I never had time to learn. But I have always found that if I had an idea I could express it on a shingle with a piece of chalk, and let a draughtsman work it out handsomely and according to rule. And I've generally had ideas enough to keep three or four draughtsmen busy. You can alway hire draughtsmen, but you can't hire ideas. Study to have ideas, my boy." It may be added that Mr. Harrison's success was due not to scholastic advantages, but to native capacity and personal effort.

It is a significant circumstance, and one that furnishes the basis for the severest criticism of the current methods of academic instruction, that men who, like Mr. Harrison, have attained signal eminence for originality of thought have rarely been men of much schooling.

The grand aim of the schools is to furnish the student with knowledge, a great deal of knowledge in a little time. To do this the method of cram, not that of original research and critical investigation, has to be adopted. The student's mental habit becomes that of a receiver, not that of a discoverer. He is loaded with knowledge, but in taking on the load he loses, through lack of use, if not through stern repression, the capacity to think or act, except along the lines of conventionality and habit. The scholastic bias becomes stronger than the original bent, and the man loses in productive power in proportion as he gains in learning.

The fault does not lie wholly in the schools. The people demand for their children a teaching that can be measured quarterly—measured by quantity, not by quality; and on this score the child who takes most kindly to second-handed ideas is sure to win. Capacity for original ideas, for original and personal independent work, is at a discount. In other words, what the man most needs to have, the child or youth is least encouraged in cultivating.

While knowledge and skill are both highly desirable, they are still of second rank, and it is possible to acquire them at too great a cost. If a man has ideas—original, individual, creative ideas—he can usually hire skill and buy knowledge; he cannot hire ideas. We should be the last to decry skill or knowledge. They are essential elements of education. But they should be gained by processes which make them the tools, not the end of culture. The man should be the master, not the slave of his learning; and whether he is the one or the other depends very largely on the way his knowledge has been gained. And it is better to be the master of a little knowledge, with capacity to use it creatively, than to be the unproductive carrier of all the learning in all the libraries. Our young readers whose scholastic advantages, so-called, have been few, may well take the lesson to heart. Study to have ideas; life will give no end of opportunities for using them.—Scientific American.

Christ delivers us from the yoke of the Law that we may pass under the yoke of Grace. The yoke of Christ is the inward sway of His personal character. Christianity is a kingdom as well as a gospel.—Geo. Dana Boardman.

They who have knowledge according to Christ's doctrine, but live badly, offer unto Christ wine mingled with gall: they who apply to Christ's precepts contrary to the truth, put vinegar on the sponge and apply it to His mouth.—Origen.

Love—like the rose, so bud, so bloom—
In glowing beauty live;
So sweeten life with the perfume
That gentle actions give.

Die—like the rose, that when thou'rt gone
Sweet happy thoughts of Thee,
Like rose-leaves, may be treasured up
To embalm the memory.

No man ever took hold of a godly life as men take hold of a secular life, and followed it up with such persistence as men employ in a secular life, that he did not, by augmenting knowledge and progressive steps, rise to the realm of spirituality and religion.

Peace is the sentinel of the soul which keeps the heart and mind of the Christian through Christ Jesus. So long as this sentinel is on guard and doing his duty, the castle of the soul is kept secure. But let the sentinel be removed and the way is immediately opened for an attack upon the fortress.—Goulburn.

And what can I give the weary,
To lighten their burdens sore,
Since only a single half-pence
Is left of my home-brought store?

Ah, nothing can I and a half-pence
Accomplish, howe'er so small;
Nay nothing—but God and a half-pence
Can compass and conquer all!

Love is the weapon which Omnipotence reserved to conquer rebel man when all the rest had failed. Reason he parries; fear he answers blow for blow; future interest he meets with present pleasure; but love, that sun against whose melting beams the winter cannot stand—that soft sublimine slumber that wrestles down the giant—there is not one human being in a million, nor a thousand men in all earth's huge quintillion, whose heart is hardened against love.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Sir Eardley Wilmot has postponed till next session his resolution for the exclusion of Atheists from the House of Commons.

There are at present 350 Christian churches in Burmah, and nine-tenths of the work of evangelisation is in the hands of the native teachers.

In spite of bad times the annual Peter's Pence Collection, which has just been made in Dublin, reaches the considerable sum of £2,000.

In Brittany there are about a million and a half of people speaking the Breton language, and who neither read nor write. One thousand eight hundred priests are the instructors of this unlettered population, and only two Breton-speaking Protestant pastors.

Nearly 500 Roman Catholics from Manchester and Salford started on Monday for Knock, in Ireland, at which place apparitions were, some time back, reported to have been seen. Among the pilgrims were a large number of cripples and other deformed persons.

Eight years ago the Protestant Church in Japan was organized and the first £200 towards the erection of its building was sent by the Christian converts of the Hawaian Islands. More than 2,500 native communicants are now reported in the Japanese mission churches.

It is stated in the Indian papers just received that the famous car of Juggernaut was not as usual dragged through the streets of Puri on July 9, and it seems that by religious custom or law if it be not drawn to the Goschidi Mandir on the ninth day of the car festival twelve years must elapse before it is again used.

Individual Jews have become conspicuous in European politics, but now Egypt, in turn, has promoted to the rank of Pasha and Assistant Secretary of State, an Austrian Jew, named Julius Blum. It is said that no other Israelite since the time of Joseph of old has reached such eminence in the land of the Pharaohs.

A great pressure is being exercised on the Pope to induce him to recouvoke the Vaticau Council next year at Malta. Cardinal Manning, it is reported, was authorized to treat with the British government, but the negotiations have failed so far, as the Pope refuses to make a direct application to the British Government, without which his wishes cannot be met.

There are abont 11,000 Church of England benefices in England (including Wales); of these about 1,000 are under the patronage of the Crown, about 1,000 under that of the bishops, about 1,000 of deans and chapters, 700 of universities and colleges, and the balance, about 7,000, of individuals. In short, considerably more than half the advowsons in the country are in the hands of private persons, and these are the classes most subject to sale and purchase.

The American newspapers of Tiflis have published correspondence from Constantinople stating that the Turks are excessively irritated against the American Patriarch, and that not long ago, during a visit he paid to a Packa, poison was given him in a cup of coffee. The Patriarch was made very ill, but after returning home he called in physicians, who administered to him emetics, which relieved him. This story has been confirmed by letters received by several Armenian gentlemen in this country.

THE LAW OF PROGRESS.

"To suffer and be strong," if not the law, is an essential factor of physical, moral and social existence. Progress comes from labor and toil. Nothing without labor, is the experience of those who have gained most of what the world can yield.

The young may well take these truths to heart and reduce them to practice in their lives. But labor, toil, hindrance, difficulty, suffering, or loss, any or all, are associated with or are incidental to, all great enterprises, whether in a secular or a spiritual sphere.

The historian tells us that previous to 1762 after the light of the sun was gone, London was wrapped in total darkness. Every species of atrocity was practiced wellnigh with impunity, and security was to be had only within the walls of home. Then followed the era of partial light, and for nearly fifty years faint and flickering rays from lamps filled with oil served to give some measure, yet but feeble measure, of security to pedestrians. In 1807 Pall Mall was lighted with gas, and in a score or less of years such was the improvement that the historian is enabled to record that "the adventurers in gaslight did more for the prevention of crime than the government had done since the days of Alfred."

How smoothly this reads! And just so smoothly read those histories of all enterprises which go no further than to tell us what was, what is not and what is, leaving the struggles, the trials, the losses to the oblivion of the past. But not so does our historian deal with us. He tells that the persevering German who had spent his own means and those of his friends in conferring an inestimable benefit on mankind reaped no reward. The original gas company encountered just the opposition that all new enterprises of any moment must meet and overcome. First their undertaking was only ridiculed. Every one in the prime of life can call to mind great undertakings which have been unsparingly ridiculed. But after the success of the gas company was more nearly assured they were attacked as rapacious monopolists. In a spirit of benevolence not altogether feigned members of parliament predicted the utter ruin of the whale fisheries and dwelt upon the scores of ships, the thousands of seamen, and ropemakers, and sailmakers, and mastmakers that should be thrown out of employment, and the millions of money that would be sunk.

We need not recount other cases with which the history of the last hundred years is teeming. The case we have cited is not so strong as others we might choose, perhaps, but it illustrates the progress of all good.

The history of missions to the heathen is a history of ridicule and opposition in the inception followed by trials and difficulties and martyrdoms, till accumulating evidences of success and the assurance of its final achievement have almost silenced opposition.

The moral of all is that God who reigns will also overrule, that his purposes shall be accomplished among men, and it is for us in serving Him to be content to suffer and be strong.

JURY SERVICE.

The system of trial by jury has perhaps been too thoroughly tried and has been found too well adapted to the ends proposed in its establishment to give any reason to suppose that it will soon be displaced by any other mode for the securing of justice. Nevertheless, the jury system is very imperfect and the proverbial uncertainties of law are rather increased than diminished through its operations.

The juror should possess in every case, intelligence, judgment, and, in the highest degree, conscientiousness. The numerous exemptions purchased by engagement for a term of years in other spheres of public service, or allowed on other considerations, render it difficult at times to obtain jurors who could stand a discriminating test. As to hardships they seem to be inseparable from the system, at least our country does not suffer more than others; all suffer much alike. The London Review makes this complaint:

Few troubles press more heavily or more partially on the middle class than the liability to serve on a British jury. It is notorious that either fortune is very perverse or else that jury lists are very defective. Some persons are constantly receiving writs of summons, while others enjoy an undeserved immunity. It is told of an eminent artist that having got letters of naturalization with difficulty, and having shortly afterwards been summoned to serve, he found this incident in the life of a British subject so intolerable that he was prepared to denaturalize himself rather than appear again in a jury box at Westminster. Not only is the service disagreeable, but the incidents are made as irksome and the duty as thankless as possible. The judge is suave and complimentary, but ushers treat the jurymen in waiting as if they were guilty of having assembled in the court for unlawful purposes. Payment on the scale at which it is now fixed is a burlesque, and the rule which ordains that exemption can only be obtained by application to the court is cruel in its arbitrariness. No doubt trial by jury is a great benefit to the community. But it is also an intolerable infliction on the jurors. The new law courts will probably lessen one grievance, and allow of waiting rooms, where jurymen whose duties may not have commenced may wait their turn with something approaching comfort. But a graver source of complaint remains without prospect of redress. The postman is the Queen's Messenger for the delivery of a writ summoning the juror to Westminster, and the only means of exemption from the exigency of his summons is by application to the court on the morning of the trial. Now it is clear that this is a great and an unnecessary hardship. It is to make trial by jury a source not of justice but of tyranny, if a juror who has a valid excuse for not serving can only put it forth at an inconvenient moment. Nor is it at all difficult to see how the evil might be amended. The Associates' Office might easily include a department where claims of exemption could be heard, examined, and adjudicated upon. That office should be open daily during business hours, so that the juror could state his case or have it stated by a friend, with some approach to consideration for his convenience. The services rendered by jurors are not only great and practically gratuitious, but often involve a greater injustice than the litigant has to complain of. It is the duty of the authorities to make it as facile as possible.

DEATH OF REV. DR. DANIEL LINDLEY.

Of the early life of Dr. Lindley we have no information, but will be glad to have some friend furnish it.

He died in Morristown, N. J., on 3d September, in the eightieth year of his age. Ever since his return from the missionary labors in which he spent his ministerial life he has resided beyond the bounds of Concord Presbytery, with which he retained connection until his death. He has been laid aside for some years from active duty by reason of paralysis.

We append the following, which we find in the Christian Intelligencer. It was evidently written previously to a knowledge of his death:

"The Rev. Daniel Lindley, D. D., went out in 1833 to the colony of Natal, in South Africa, under the auspices of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He and his wife went in company with five other missionaries and their wives. They landed at Port Natal, and thence tracked inland to King Mosalekatsee' territory. This king was at war with the Dutch, and shortly after his arrival among the savages Dr. Lindley's house was burned, and the war utterly destroying for the time missionary operations, Dr. Lindley returned to Natal. After being there a short time that country was overrun by the Zulus under Dingan, the uncle of Cetewayo. Dr. Lindley's new quarters were destroyed, and he was obliged to swim his horse to an island in Natal Bay, where he stayed until the Zulu army left. He then went down to Port Elizabeth, whither he had sent his family, and brought them to Natal again. The New York Board of Foreign Missions were now discouraged and withdrew its support from the mission. Dr. Lindley, however, refused to leave that field of missionary operations, and he became pastor of the Dutch church at Pietermaritzburg, which was the capital of the Dutch colony. He continued there seven years and then renewed his connection with the Board of Missions, and continued it for nearly thirty years with energy and success, until the health of his wife obliged him in 1873 to return to New York. While Dr. Lindley was with the Dutch his parish embraced the colony of Natal, the Orange Free State and the Transvaal Republic. Upon one annual circuit of his parish, at a single service he once baptized nearly two hundred children. After 1845, when the English government assumed full sovereignty, its officials sought Dr. Lindley's advice before enacting laws affecting the natives. After his return to the United States Dr. Lindley pleaded the cause of foreign missions upon tours through the States. In the summer of 1876 he made upwards of ninety addresses within ninety consecutive days. In the summer of 1877 he was equally zealous, so that as a result of these exertions Dr. Lindley received a stroke of paralysis, from which he has never recovered. He is justly regarded as a pioneer to South Africa, who has been of great service to civilization and religion."

THE DIVISION OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

The abstract of proceedings of Orange Presbytery to be found on our first page announces the adoption of an overture to the Synod of North Carolina to set off the Presbytery of East Orange and names the ministers who will be its members.

A short retrospect may not, under the circumstances, be uninteresting:

In 1788 at the same time that the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church was formed from the General Synod, the Presbyteries of Orange, Abingdon, and South Carolina were constitnted the Synod of the Carolinas. Orange embraced the territory within the State of North Carolina and its ministers were Henry Patillo, David Caldwell, Samuel E. McCorkle, James Hall, Robert Archibald, James McRee, Jacob Lake, Daniel Thatcher, David Barr, and John Beck.

In 1795 Concord Presbytery was set off by a line running the course of the Yadkin river, the now Presbytery being the western portion of North Carolina. The ministers retained by Orange Presbytery were Henry Patillo, David Caldwell, Calvin Lindsey, David Kerr, William Moore, James McGrady, Samuel Stanford, Augus McDermaid, John Robinson, and James H. Bowman.

In 1812 the Presbytery of Fayettoville was set off, leaving to Orange Presbytery the limits it has retained until this time.

The Synod of the Carolinas was divided in 1813 and the Synod of North Carolina formed of the Presbyteries of Orange, Concord and Fayettoville.

AN UNHAPPY MENDICANT.

An appeal has been made to the Romanists throughout the world for charity in behalf of the Pope. The habit of bleeding Romanists for the benefit of the Pope is not an uncommon occurrence. The present occasion seems to be more pressing than usual. The Romish organ of this city, which usually sings so sweetly of the rapid progress of Jesuit-Romanism, and has so many charming little stories to illustrate the swift extinction of Presbyterianism, cannot withhold from its readers the fact that the present Pope is, to use a familiar expression, "very hard up, indeed." It republishes the appeal of the Aurora, for "a generous charity." It no longer presents the Pope in the light of the Lord of the kings of the earth, who "holds all rights locked in the casket of his own breast," but as "a mendicant." As it stretches out its hand for alms this is the language of its impassioned supplication:

"He for whom it is asked is the Pope. But in giving to the Pope, you give to the most august mendicant on earth, and by giving to him you concur with him in the greatest works of beneficence in the world. In fine, you give to the propagation of the faith, to the relief of the wretched, to poor churches, and to needy institutions of piety; finally, you give to yourselves and to your souls, since He who has promised the kingdom of heaven to the merciful, and has declared that He will hold what has been done to His poor as done to Himself, with greater reason will concede this most high reward to those who have been generous towards His vicar."

Manifestly, the difficulty of the Pope's position is enhanced by the fact that many Romanists, considering that the Pope has been pulling this string for a long time, and with great effect, are inclined to think that he ought to refund some of that charity, to make good some of the losses which have befallen credulous Romanists who believed too well.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite items from all quarters for this column.

MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY

Is in session with the Lincolnton church. Thirteen ministers and sixteen elders are present, and nearly all of the churches, from the Yadkin river to the Tennessee line, are reported, and we hear from them by representatives and brethren who have been visiting among the churches. Brethren seem earnest in devising ways and means to sustain our efforts. It is just twelve years since Presbytery met here before. Then Concord Presbytery met here and was much larger than Mecklenburg is now. Some of the sermons preached here twelve years ago are remembered still. But only five of the ministers that were here then are here now. The venerable Penick, Rankin and Douglas and others have gone before, and Elders Moore of Philadelphia church and H. Cosher Reid of Sharon, who were present then, have gone before us. And many of the hospitable families here who received and entertained the members twelve years ago have been scattered, but their names are still precious. Soon we all will pass from these privileges and obligations, and how precious are the messages the brethren are giving us from the pulpit now! The moderator, Rev. J. P. Gammon, led us in the opening service to the mercy seat with a timely sermon on the words, "They went and told Jesus." We are trying to watch and pray and preach, and hope utterance may be given to all our efforts from above.

PASTOR LOCI.

Hope to have further news for next issue.

ROBESON COUNTY BIBLE SOCIETY.

It will be gratifying to the friends of the Bible cause to learn that the Robeson county Bible Society and American Bible Society have employed the Rev. A. H. Adams to supply Robeson county with the Bible. He has canvassed parts of townships, Smith and Blue Springs, has visited over two hundred families, found no destitution among the whites, found fifteen colored families and five individuals destitute, supplied them; found seven colored unable to buy and gave them a Bible; sold 76 Bibles and 71 Testaments. Rev. C. H. Wiley, superintendent of the Bible Society for North and South Carolina, employed Mr. Adams.

C.

UNITY CHURCH, MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

Rev. S. H. Chester writes from Lowesville, N. C., Sept. 5th:

Rev. G. L. Cook began to preach for us on Friday before the third Sunday of August and continued for ten days with one day's intermission. There was an unusually large congregation the first day and by Sunday morning a very manifest interest. The sermon preached by Mr. Cook Sunday morning on the third chapter of Romans ought to be published as a tract. It was pronounced by all that heard it to be the simplest and clearest explanation of the way of salvation any of us ever heard. Sunday evening we appointed an inquiring meeting, but only two persons came, and I was glad afterwards that they did not come though I could see that many were concerned. This one ineffectual effort at an inquiry meeting was the only departure we made from strictly Presbyterian principles; no mourners bench, no Moody and Sankey hymns and no "new measures," of any kind. We determined to see what could be done by relying simply on the Word and Spirit. The pastor watched the faces of the congregation and visited and conversed with every one whose face showed any sign of interest, privately, at home. It is hardly too much to say that every person in the community was made to feel the power of the truth, all except two that I can think of came to church that could come, and several of those who could not were brought under conviction at their homes. We did not open the doors of the church to receive members while the meeting was going on, but during our communion service which closed yesterday eighteen (18) were received on profession of faith. Some of the cases of conversion were quite remarkable. One whole family was received, consisting of a man, middle-aged who had scarcely been inside of a church for years before, his wife and wife's sister and two grown daughters. Another was that of a widowed mother between sixty and seventy years of age, two grown daughters, her son and son's wife. We all feel greatly refreshed and trust that the Lord will make this only a beginning for us of better things.

Yours, very truly, S. H. CHESTER.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Our term began on Wednesday, September 1st, with decidedly favorable prospects. A number of the old students and several new ones were on the hill, ready and waiting. Others are arriving every day. The opening sermon was preached Sunday night by Dr. Peck, from 1. Tim. 4: 12-16. It would not be possible to present an adequate report of the discussion. It was powerful and peculiarly appropriate, and those of us who heard it only regret that all the theological students in the land did not enjoy the privilege.

This is Monday, and there are, of the senior class, twelve present,—six others will return. Of the middle class ten present, two having been added this year. There are already fifteen in the junior class, making the total number to-day fifty-one. Three of these at least are here as the result of the close of Columbia Seminary. Others are expected. We regret the cause that brought them, but are glad to extend a brotherly welcome.

The number of pupils this session will doubtless be between fifty and sixty.

Dr. Dabney is expected by the first of Oct. Until that time his hours will be occupied by the other professors.

A. G. B.

On the 29th of February, 1860, the ladies of Steele Creek church, Mecklenburg county, N. C., met and formed a Ladies' Benevolent Aid Society. Our principal object is to aid our evangelists in the mountains of Western North Carolina, though our constitution does not confine us to that alone. We can give to any charitable object that may be presented. Though yet in its infancy our Society numbers one hundred and twenty-one, and we hope it will continue to increase until it goes far beyond the present number. Our meetings are generally well attended, great interest has been manifested and a kind and generous spirit has prevailed. God has been in our midst and greatly blessed us. How, then, can we, upon whom God has lavished such goodness and grace, remain idle, and refuse or neglect to aid in sending the Gospel to the destitute? We have great cause to congratulate ourselves on the success of our undertaking, yet much remains for us to do. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." A. L. T.

Rev. W. W. Bamford writes from Bullock Creek, S. C., Sept. 7th, 1880:

"In the bounds of my ministry one church has been organized during the past year. At a recent meeting twelve members connected with Bullock Creek church on profession of their faith. Also within the past ten days twelve were added to Ramah church. At our last communion at Harmony six were added to that church on examination. These churches belong to Bethel Presbytery. Ramah was organized on the 15th of last November with eighteen members. Since then there have been twenty added, and I hope at a very early day to receive into that Church ten or twelve more."

HOMER TEXAS.

We have news through Rev. D. A. McRae, of San Augustine, Texas, relative to the organization of a Presbyterian church at Homer, in Angelina county, and about forty miles from San Augustine. Rev. S. F. Tenney writes to the Christian Observer on the same subject, and from the two reports we gather our news.

The church was organized with eight members, but three others united immediately after the organization. Two elders and two deacons were elected. Mr. McRae and Mr. Tenney held services several days. Mr. McR. had to leave before the close.

A lady writes that the manse in Oxford is nearly completed, and presents a beautiful appearance. The ladies there are still working most effectively for their church and cause.

KENTUCKY ITEMS.

From a friend we have the following:

"At last, after more than two months' serious illness, Dr. Nall is convalescing. He rides out in the late afternoon and hopes to return to New Orleans early in October.

"Mr. Wm. George, a prominent minister of West Lexington Presbytery, went out to Texas recently to visit the field at Fort Worth, whither he has been invited."

AN INVITATION.

To all the Foreign Missionaries of the different Presbyterian Churches of this country:

DEAR BRETHREN: As the Council of the Presbyterian Alliance meeting in Philadelphia, on Thursday, September 23d, will have under consideration, the missionary work of the church, the committee on the programme most cordially invite you to attend that meeting, that you may share in its deliberations. Those of you who may be able to accept this invitation, are requested to send your names and addresses as soon as possible, to George Junkin, Esq., 1334 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Chairman of the Business Committee, who will make arrangements for your entertainment, during the session of the Council. Yours, in the name of the Committee,

PHILIP SCHAFF, Chairman.
GEO. D. MATHEWS, Secretary.

GENERAL PRESBYTERIAN ALLIANCE.

42 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

To the Presbyterian Churches throughout the land.

DEAR BRETHREN: The second General Council of the Presbyterian Alliance will meet in Philadelphia on Thursday, September 23d. At that meeting there will be present a large number of ministers and elders who will have traveled over many lands and seas that they may consult together on matters of importance to the Churches forming the Alliance. Among these brethren will be not a few of the most eminent and honored ministers and teachers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Many of the subjects that will engage their attention concern the doctrine and the work of the Church, and the deliberations of such brethren on such topics can hardly fail of having an influence lasting and spreading far beyond the mere duration of the Council Meetings. That influence will affect, more or less, the whole Church of the living God, and in proportion to the wisdom and spirituality of the Council, will be the measure of our realization of one of the great ends hoped for from the Alliance: "That by such a Council hallowed and quickened by the Redeemer's presence, there might proceed, as from a heart, new impulses of spiritual life, bringing every member of the Council into closer fellowship with his Divine Master, into deeper affection for his brethren, for the Master's sake, and into more entire consecration of all his powers to the Master's work."

Another destination giving importance to the occasion is that this meeting in Council of Delegates appointed by the different Churches of the Reformation that hold the Presbyterian system, is a striking manifestation to the world of the true unity of our Presbyterian Churches, a unity of creed, of polity—of spiritual life, and work and hope. Under these circumstances we ask our brethren in the ministry, in the eldership, in the membership of our Churches, to bear these meetings in remembrance, and to seek for us from the Father of lights, by special prayer on Sabbath, 19th inst., as well as during all the session of the Council, such a betokenment of heavenly wisdom, that we may come together in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of peace; that brotherly love may be promoted; that such precious opportunity may be truly used that we may consider all the matters to be brought before us under a deep sense of our responsibility, and to such conclusion as will be in full accord with the Divine glory, and the welfare of all our brethren.

WM. G. BLAIKIE,
GEO. D. MATHEWS.

Farewell Meeting.

During the sessions of the Council, a meeting will be held in the hall of the Y. M. C. A., on the evening of Tuesday, September 28th, at which addresses will be given in the German language, by Rev. Wm. Krafft, D. D., of Bonn; Prof. Pfeiderer, D. D., of Kornthal; Rev. O. Erdman, of Elberfeld; the Rev. Her. Krummacher, D. D., Consistorial Councillor, of Stettin.

ECLECTICISMS.

WORTHY OF A CONSPICUOUS PLACE.

Southern Presbyterian:

As infant baptism is a divine ordinance, as it stands intimately related to the whole scheme of Bible truth, as it is an important feature of church organization, and as it involves the gravest obligations resting on parents and children, as well as ministers and church officers, it ought to have a much larger and more conspicuous place in the teachings of the pulpit. Even if every child in the whole Church were baptized, this would be very far from meeting the claims of this institution.

FRATERNITY.

Holston Methodist:

The surest way to establish fraternity is to fraternize. It is our bounden duty to recognize the ministers of all orthodox denominations. We dare not snub them. If we do not receive them we reject Him that sent them. What do Cape May settlements and General Conference courtesies amount to unless, when our brother of the other Church comes into our congregation, we treat him as a brother and as a minister of the Lord Jesus?

THE FALSE AND THE TRUE.

Raleigh Christian Advocate:

The religion which reads the Bible at home and forgets it abroad; that goes to the prayer-meeting at home, but to the theatre or ball when away; that talks of holy things in a conventional way among religious acquaintances, but is dumb in the presence of strangers; that wears the Christian uniform in the camp of Christ, but doffs it on the enemy's ground, is but a sham. Forms, daily habitudes, and associations, are helps in the Christian life, and modify its development and expression. But the source of a true spiritual life lies deeper. The believer's spiritual life is hid with Christ in God. It is within him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life.

SOUND LOGIC.

Southeastern Presbyterian:

What is false in principle can never work out right in practice. Justice, benevolence, and truth, in all their applications, however varied, mean exactly the same thing. They lie at the foundation of all morality. The system of dealing that ignores them may be called policy, but it is not morality. It is immorality, just to that extent. And it cannot be claimed that a government which ignores these principles is according to a system of morality, at all. It is immoral in every particular in which it tramples on them.

WHAT TO EXPECT.

The Christian Register:

In evident good faith the Pilot wishes Catholics and Protestants to live together in peace and good-will, under just and equal laws. But many who share this wish are yet afraid that the real doctrine and purpose of the Roman Church are more truly represented by Bishop O'Connor, who says, "Religious liberty is merely endured until the opposite can be carried into effect;" or by the Archbishop of St. Louis, who says, "If the Catholics ever gain—which they surely will do though at a distant day—an immense numerical superiority, religious freedom is at end;" or by Father Hecker, who says, "There is, ere long, to be a State religion in this country and that State religion is to be Roman Catholic." Multitudes of honest Catholic laymen are entirely blind to the political game that can be carried on in the name of the Lord.

A CRANKY SPECIMEN.

Baltimore Presbyterian:

We know a church where, for years, the pews were unnumbered. A new pastor was inaugurated, acceptable to all, we believe. To be up with the times, it was proposed that the seats should be numbered. This met with the approbation of all save one, an elder, who thought it was wicked so to do. The matter was carried into effect, but our elder friend was unyielding in his opposition. He would not sit in one of the unholy seats—not he—and brought his chair and rested himself in an aisle. This amiable member was in well-to-do circumstances, and proclaimed to the world, through some of his friends, that, with his death, he would leave a few thousand dollars to the church. It was so written in his will, but not not a cent would it receive if those pews retained those sinful figures. Weighed in the balance of the world, this is an exceedingly small man, with a soul of the smallest proportions, but he had money, which secured him a following. He had made up his mind that that preacher should go, and there are intelligent church members ready to do the bidding of such crabbed specimens of humanity, and all for the sake of a few dollars which he has most graciously promised his church if the members thereof will do this and so.

A TERRIBLE CONDEMNATION.

Christian Intelligencer:

It is always a terrible condemnation of a church member, says Dr. Cuyler, that no one should suspect him of being one. We have heard of a young lady who engaged for many months in a round of frivolities, utterly forgetful of her covenant with Christ. One Sabbath morning, on being asked by a gay companion to accompany him to a certain place, she declined on the ground that it was the communion Sabbath in her own church. "Are you a communicant?" was the cutting reply. The arrow went to her heart. She felt that she had denied the Lord who died for her. That keen rebuke brought her to repentance, and a reconversion. Are there not many other professors of Christ who appear to be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God?"

Items from Our Monthly:

A most delightful meeting was held in the Clinton church, beginning on Thursday before the fourth Sunday of July and lasting to the first Sabbath of August. The pastor was alone most of this time, save two days of earnest, thoughtful and gratefully appreciated preaching by Rev. J. Y. Fair, the beloved pastor of the Laurensville Presbyterian church. During the meeting sixteen were added to the Church, making a total of twenty-two additions on profession of faith during the month. Our people thank God and take courage.

A short but interesting meeting was held at Rockbridge on the 31st inst. There was one addition to the church and much interest manifested. We hope soon to begin building there.

"The corner stone of "Faith Cottage," of Thornwell Orphanage at Clinton, S. C., was laid on 28th of July. After a hymn of praise, an address was delivered by the President giving the history of the Orphanage. Its name, "Faith Cottage," was given in recognition of the way the Lord had brought us on. Already $1,000, being two-thirds of the amount needed is in hand. The building is designed to accomodate sixteen boys with a presiding officer to direct and teach them. It will contain eight rooms, is to be an irregular shaped building 33x47; the first story to be of rock and the second of wood; the plan having been prepared gratuitously by Mr. G. L. Norman architect, of Spartanburg C. H. The work will proceed immediately, the design being to open it for use by the 1st of January."

Bœuf church, which is on the western border of the Presbytery of St. Louis and the centre of an inviting missionary field has enjoyed the labors of Mr. E. B. McCluer during the summer. Rev. Mr. Watson of Washington, held communion service at Bœuf on the fourth Sunday in August, at which time two persons were received on profession.

Mr. McCluer has returned to the Seminary at Hampden Sidney, Va., to complete his studies, and the Bœuf people are hoping that in April next he will go back to them to remain permanently.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

Items from Christian Observer:

Rev. J. H. Weaver writes: "We closed an interesting meeting at Big Creek church, Shelby county, Tenn., the last Friday of August. The meeting continued seven days, during which time there were added to the church eight souls—six on examination and two by letter."

Rev. H. M. Sydenstriker writes from Stanton, Tenn.: "At a communion service held August 21st and 22d, three persons were received into the church on profession of faith. Mr. Cochran, from Somerville, preached for us on Saturday and Sunday."

The ladies of the Presbyterian church at Corinth, Miss., organized a working society some months ago, and since February have put up the shell of a neat church. They are now endeavoring to paint it. With two exceptions the people are poor. But then it is often poor people that make the Lord's work prosper. They have also secured a new and neat communion set.

Rev. J. N. Craig, D. D., has had a call to the church at Oxford, Miss., but his people at Holly Springs protested so earnestly against his leaving them that he has declined.

Rev. E. E. Bigger has changed his postoffice address to 460 Poplar street, Memphis, Tenn.

At Tecc, in Presbytery of Central Mississippi, Rev. A. W. Wilson has been greatly blessed, and his soul made to rejoice in the presence and power of God's Spirit, in the conversion of eight precious souls and their public profession of faith in Christ. In the bounds of our Charlotte church also God has greatly blessed us. The work commenced under the ministry of Rev. Mr. Oats of the Methodist church. With little help he continued his labors for eight or ten days. As the result of his labors, assisted by a few faithful women, and a portion of the time the elders of our church at Carrollton, eight persons were added to the Methodist church, principally from families of that church. Twelve were added to the Presbyterian church from Presbyterian families. At Old Salem, in the same Presbytery, where Rev. T. L. Haman was assisted by Rev. J. McC. Caldwell, seven precious souls came out on the Lord's side, and publicly professed Him. At Hopewell, another congregation in Mr. Haman's charge, a meeting closed three week's since in which eight were added by profession to that church. He was assisted on that occasion by Rev. R. B. Morrow of Durant.

A meeting of great interest closed two weeks ago at New Providence church, Ky. The pastor was assisted by Rev. D. J. L. McKee of Danville. There were no new measures employed—nothing but the simple means that God has ordained for the salvation of souls, the preaching of the Word. The result was that this church is very greatly revived, and twenty-three have been added to its membership on a profession of their faith in Christ. To God be all the glory.

Items from the Central Presbyterian:

Richland church, Presbytery of Columbia, was greatly revived and strengthened by a meeting of two weeks, during which there were twenty-eight additions. Dr. J. W. Hoyte who did the preaching, has received a call to his old charge, Smyrna church, Presbytery of Nashville.

On Saturday, August 28th, Captain Wm. S. Hart as ruling elder, and Charles L. Teany, deacon, of Laurel Hill church, Abingdon Presbytery, were ordained and installed to their respective offices at Martin's Station. Rev. Robert C. Gray was present and offered the ordination prayer. Capt. Hart is superintendent and Mr Teany is treasurer and librarian of the Sabbath school at Martin's, which was organized this spring, and now numbers on its roll nearly a hundred, with a large average attendance. This place is the site of the Butha Zinc Furnace, and is growing more rapidly than any other place in the county. On Sabbath the second quarterly communion of Laurel Hill church was held at the Station, a mission point. A very large congregation was in attendance. Rev. B. C. Gray assisted the pastor elect. Three persons were received into membership in accordance with Rules of Discipline. Others will be received in the same way.

On the fifth Sabbath in August Capt. J. H. Larew, ruling elder, and Ernst F. Voge, deacon, of Newbern church, Va., were set apart with prayer and the laying on of the hands of the session to their respective offices, and pronounced and declared to have been regularly elected, ordained and installed.

I wrote you last fall of the organization of a church at Harpersville, (Ala.,) with fourteen members. With the help of friends here, and at other points, they have erected a very neat church, and organized a Sabbath School with forty-one scholars. Licentiate T. W. Raymond has been preaching for them during the vacation.

Last week I went up to help him in a protracted meeting, which continued from Thursday to Monday. Rev. James McLain and his son, Harry, a student of Union Seminary, also assisted in the services. We had communion on Sunday, when the church was crowded and many could not find standing room. There were eight additions, four on certificate and four on examination. Mr. Raymond writes me, "I have heard several say that this meeting did them more good than any they ever attended." Some of us sent them a pulpit Bible to day, but the church is still unplastered and unpainted and a spare dollar would help the small band of earnest worshippers. T. W. H.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Westminster Bible Dictionary. Prepared for the Board by the Rev. Thomas J. Shepherd, D. D., 600 pages, 556 illustrations. Price, postpaid, $1 50. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, 1880.

In this day of active study of God's Word, and destructive sceptical criticism, a compendious Bible Dictionary, fully abreast with modern scholarship and recent explorations in Bible lands; and marked by sound doctrinal exposition, is a great desideratum. We have here exactly the book wanted by Bible-students generally. Its letter-press is excellent—page and type clear and paper capital—illustrations and maps beautiful. Dr. Shepherd has received valuable aid from Prof. Isaac H. Hall, with his stores of oriental, linguistic and archæological information. Perhaps no other book can be found with a richer condensation of all accessible scolarship. This Westminster Dictionary will be found, as its name promises, sound on vital doctrinal points; e. g. Sabbath, Election, Predestination, Bishop and Elder, &c.; as well as in explaining words in our authorized version, demanding elucidation. Its cheapness is simply marvellous. It would not be high at $3—but it will be sent postpaid for $1 50. The Board deserves credit for the issue.

The Sunday Magazine for October is a capital number. We do not see that it has fallen off any since the retirement of Dr. Deems who did so much to make it popular and bring it before the public. $3 per year. New York.

Little Folks Reader for September is before us. It is the ne plus ultra of magazines for the little folks. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass.

The South Atlantic comes to hand very bright as usual. The September number contains: Omeron; Short sketches of the Old Southern Regime; The Romance of a Greenback; Our Young Mecenas Smitten in the Dark; Carmelita; Sonnet—On the emigration of the author's ancestors from England to America in the seventeenth century; The Late General Bryan Grimes; Abandoned—A sketch from the German; A New Theory of Woman; The Materialists Rhyme; Watauga; The Future of the South; Recent Literature. Mrs. Cicero W. Harris, Baltimore, Md.

We invite special attention to the advertisements in this issue: "Mrs. Joseph McLaurin on Dress Making, Munson on his new stock of Cloths, Cassimeres, &c., and R. M. McIntire, Dry Goods and Carpets.

It may be observed that no attempt is made to hunt up out-of-the-way or unknown places to find endorsement. SECULAR MISCELLANY.

In some respects the gentler sex far surpasses. No man, for instance, can deliver a lecture with a dozen pins in his mouth.

Nineteen mules in a drove of thirty were killed by a flash of lightning in Washington county, Ky. They had just been purchased for $1,444.

Dr. Charles T. Jackson, who claimed to be the discoverer of anæsthetics, died at Somerville, Mass., on the 30th ult., after an illness that lasted seven years.

Prof. Alexander Agassiz, since 1870, has given Harvard College $230,000. He is manager of one of the best copper mines in the world.

Lawyers are very critical. Once a young lawyer, upon being informed of an attachment between a young lady and gentleman, inquired whether the gentleman was "the lover or the lovee?" So an attorney in Dublin wrote a challenge to a gentleman to meet him "in the four acres, be the same more or less."

Mr. Tandy Bennett killed a rattlesnake near this place one day the past week which had sixteen rattles and a button.—Danbury Reporter.

During the first week of September, 1879, there were brought to this market only 57 bales of new cotton. During the corresponding week this year there were handled in our market 586 bales.—Raleigh News.

Mr. A. S. Crowell, who lives in Union county, sixteen miles east of Charlotte, showed us this week some of the finest specimens of gold quartz we ever saw, got from his mine at about fifty feet under ground. Mr. Crowell had a piece of rock about as big as a man's head, for which he was offered fifty dollars.—Charlotte Democrat.

This week we have had weather that makes the cate crawl under the kitchen stoves. Morning-glories bloomed all day long and smoke was seen rising from every chimney in town. Cold, raw and disagreeable, and hard on the cotton-pickers has it been.—Concord Sun.

A Dutchman, who married his second wife soon after the funeral of the first, was visited with a two hours' serenade in token of disapproval. He expostulated pathetically thus: "I say, poys, you ought to be ashamed of yourself to be making all dis noise ven dere vas a funeral here so soon."

On dit that Samuel J. Tilden has offered $1,000 for "the largest dog in America," which is now at Womelsdorf, Berks county, Pa. The dog is an Ulm dog, and was bought in Germany last summer. He weighs 182 pounds, measures six feet nine inches from tip of nose to tip of tail, and is only two years old.—Farmer and Mechanic.

So great was the heat in Brighton, England, on Saturday, August 14, that a tablecloth in a drawing room on Cliftonville was set on fire by the sun's rays concentrated through a decanter of water. At Cheltenham on the same day so great had been the heat that a child, aged four months, which was left under a small tent while the mother was at work at the Riddings, was found dead at 1 o'clock from congestion of the brain, caused by the excessive heat.

A Columbus, Ind., dispatch says: "A brilliant meteor was noticed in the heavens about 10 p. m. last night. It looked almost as large as the full moon, passed with a whizzing sound from the northwest to southeast, describing an arc of about eighty degrees, and toward the latter part of its course appeared to become elongated, taking the form of a writhing serpent. The meteor, or the trail probably, gradually assumed the form of the letter G, and so remained for several minutes. The phenomenon was witnessed by many persons."

Chicago has a floating hospital for poor mothers with young children. There is an awning over the wharf, which extends so far out into the lake as constantly to catch the cool breeze. A lady physician is in attendance throughout the day. A kindly-looking matronly woman sits and ladles out nice fresh milk for the children, all that they may desire. The mothers bring their own lunches and their sewing or knitting work. There they take the boat and steam away two miles or more. Some mothers come back on the same boat, thus spending only one hour. The boat makes four trips a day.

The Globe announces that the skull of Confucius is for sale in a curiosity shop in London, but that so far it has found no purchaser. It is said that it was found at Peking during the plunder of the summer palace of the Emperor by the allied French and English troops in 1860, and was then mounted in gold and ornamented with diamonds to the value of $50,000. It was taken to London in 1862, and exhibited in the Universal Exposition, where, on account of its mounting, it attracted attention. Sixty thousand dollars were offered for it, but now that it has been stripped of its gold and jewels, it cannot find a purchaser at any price.

Eastern North Carolina is fine for all crops. Mr. E. T. Snipes, of this county, raised this year on one acre of ground 9,000 pounds of well-cured German millet. He says he has been raising the chufa for three years, and thinks it a great crop.—Murfreesboro Enquirer.

Mr. J. M. Alexander, of Steele Creek, was in his corn crib last Wednesday and picked up an ear of corn to kill what he conceived to be a rat, whose body was partially exposed to his view. He struck at it and the head of a copper-head snake projected from the corn, and almost before he knew it, the reptile's fangs were fastened in his forefinger. He hurried to the house, and barely succeeded in getting within doors before he became blinded from the effects of the poison and perfectly helpless. His wife poured whisky into him, as much as his system would hold, and summoned medical assistance. The bite was cauterized, and at last accounts Mr. Alexander was slowly improving.—Charlotte Observer.

Yesterday some notably fine specimens of copper ore were received at the Geological Museum from this county. They came from a place near Asbury. Excellent copper ore also exists on the farm of Mr. Blake, four miles southwest of the city.—Raleigh News and Observer.

Who can tell the value of a smile? It costs the giver nothing, but is beyond price to the erring and relenting, the sad and cheerless, the lost and forsaken. It disarms malice, subdues temper, turns hatred to love, revenge to kindness, paves the darkest paths with gems of sunlight. A smile on the brow betrays a kind heart, a pleasant friend, an affectionate brother, a dutiful son, a happy husband. It adds a charm to beauty, it decorates the face of the deformed, and makes a lovely woman resemble an angel in Paradise.

A precious carpet was destroyed last spring in San Francisco. It had covered the floor of one of the rooms in the mint, and had been used for five years. The dust of the precious metals used in the coinage had during that period daily fallen upon it, and when it was taken up the authorities had it cut in small pieces and burned in pans. The ashes were subjected to the process employed with mining dust, and they realized two thousand five hundred dollars. Thus the carpet after years of wear was more precious than when it was new. It is an illustration of the lives of some Christians. The discipline they endure in the world chastens and purifies them, and when God tries them they come forth as gold" (Job xxiii: 10).

MARRIED.

No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

At the residence of the bride's father, in Cumberland county, Aug. 26th, Hon. D. P. McEACHERN and Miss MARY McNEILL, daughter of Hector McNeill, Esq., by the Rev. J. Evans.

In Gaston county, September 1st, by Rev. J. J. Kennedy, Mr. J. L. PHIFER and Miss EMMA A. RAMSEUR.

Near Clarkton, September 8th, by Rev. A. McFadyen, Mr. WILLIAM A. SUGGS and Miss CATTIE J. BALLENTINE, daughter of Col. J. H. Ballentine.

DIED.

Obituary notices must be paid for in advance The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines is charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

In Wilmington, N. C., September 4th, 1880, Mrs. ELIZA HANSLEY, in the 79th year of her age.

In early life the deceased became a member of the Presbyterian Church at Kenansville, N. C. Removing to this city many years ago, she became a member of the First Presbyterian church, and upon the reorganization of the Second Presbyterian church, in 1874, she placed her membership there, and died in full fellowship and communion. With a faith that gave patience she meekly endured all her trials and sufferings. Trusting her Saviour, she was sustained unto the last, and passed away with a bright hope of immortality. Many loving hearts mourn her loss, whilst they strive to follow her consistent example and hope to meet her above. "Let me die the death of the righteous." PASTOR.

FOR THE FAMILY.

A Receipt for a Racket!

What does it take to make a racket?
Two small boys in pants and jacket;
An empty room and a bare wood floor;
A couple of sticks to bang the door;
A chair or two to break and to swing;
A trumpet to blow, and a bell to ring;
A stamp and a tramp like a great big man,
And, when you can get it, an old tin pan;
A flight of stairs for a climb and tumble;
A nursery maid to growl and grumble;
A chorus of howl and cry and shriek
To drown your voice if you try to speak;
A dozen good blows on knees and back,
Each one coming down with a terrible whack;
A couple of falls that would crack a nut,
And one good bump on your occiput;
A rush and a skurry, a tear and chatter,
And a mother to cry, "How, what is the matter?"
You take these,
And shake these,
And put in a packet,
And you'll have just the jolliest kind of a racket!

Of course I am bound to confess
You can manage to make it with less,
(For this is a regular, rich receipt,
For pudding and sauce and all complete;)
And still have a very good show,
If you follow directions below:
You can leave out the room and the floor;
The bumps, and the bangs on the door;
The bell, and the sticks, and the stairs;
The trumpets, the howls, and the chairs;
The whack, and the fall, and the rise;
The shrieks, and the groans, and the cries;
Mamma, and the pan, and the tramp;
The nurse, and the growl, and the stamp;
But one thing you must have, however you get it,
(Or else, if you don't, you will sadly regret it—
For remember my words—if you leave pen to lack it
You never can have the least bit of a racket—)
And that is, two small boys in pants and in jacket.

—M. E. B. in Wide Awake.

Honesty Rewarded.

George and Harry worked in the same shop; but as the working season was almost over, and there would be little work to do during the summer months, their employer informed them, as they settled up on Saturday evening, that he could only give one of them work hereafter. He said he was very sorry; but it was the best he could do. He told them both to come back on Monday morning, and that he would then decide on the one he wished to retain. So the young men returned to their boarding-house a good deal cast down; for work was scarce, and neither knew where he could obtain a situation if he was the one to leave.

That evening, as they counted over their week's wages, Harry said to his friend:

"Mr. Wilson has paid me a quarter of a dollar too much."

"So he has me," said George, as he looked at his.

"How could he have made the mistake?" said Harry.

"Oh he was very busy when six o'clock came, and, handling so much money, he was careless when he came to pay our trifle," said George as he stuffed his into his pocketbook.

"Well," said Harry, "I'm going to stop as I go to the post office, and hand the money to him."

"You are wonderful particular about a quarter," said George, "What does he care about that trifle? Why, he would not come to the door for it if he knew what you wanted; and I'm sure you worked hard enough to earn it."

But Harry called and handed his employer the money, who thanked him for returning it, and went into the house. Mr. Wilson had paid them a quarter of a dollar too much on purpose, to test their honesty.

So when Monday morning came, he seemed to have no difficulty in determining which one he would keep. He chose Harry, and entrusted the shop to his care for a few months while he was away on business, and was so well pleased with his management, that when work commenced in the fall, he gave him the position of superintendent.

Five years afterwards, Harry was Mr. Wilson's partner; and George worked in the same shop again, but as a common laborer.—Presbyterian Banner.

A Real Hero.

Artie A boy—a real, live boy—not a sentimental little angel, or yet a top and ball boy of the story-books. He is a Canadian boy, awake to all that is going on in the world, and having his own word in the questions of the day, as they are freely discussed in his hearing. He has been reading French history lately and has temporarily enthroned Napoleon Bonaparte on the pedestal of his history.

"None of your milk-and-water goodies for me," he was saying the other day. "I wouldn't be a minister that's afraid to fight, for the world; nor a merchant to do nothing but make money like my father." (Artie is not particularly careful in the spending of all the money he can get hold of). "No, nor a statesman either, to pore over musty old books, attend committees, and write documents. The copy-book is just as wrong as usual when it says that 'the pen is mightier than the sword; the sword, or rather the rifle, is the thing for me. I'd like to be a real hero like Napoleon or some of those French marshals, and conquer cities and empires and make a name to be remembered."

"Artie, let me tell you about a French hero of whom I read to-day—a real hero, according to my way of thinking. I had rather have my name written where his is than have it all over the walls of palaces, as the imperial B's were in France before the last revolution."

"Where is it written?"

"I will leave you to judge when you have heard my story. Vincent de Paul was a French boy, born about 1576 at Pony, in Gascony. His parents were very poor, and the Franciscan friars at Arles taught him to read and write. He studied afterwards at the College of Toulouse. In 1605 he was captured in company with some other soldiers, on a voyage from Marseilles to Narbonne and carried captive to Tunis. He was here sold as a slave and owned by three successive masters, the last of whom proved to be a renegade Christian from Savoy. The beautiful behaviour of Vincent under the blows and suffering to which the slaves of those days were subjected so won upon this man that he renounced his false faith, gave his slave his freedom, and, in company with Vincent, escaped from Tunis, both reaching France in 1607. He soon went to Paris and was first chaplain to the ex-Queen Margaret of Valois, and then tutor and chaplain in the family of the Master of the Galleys at Marseilles.

"In this position he became much interested in the condition of the convicts who were compelled to toil at the galleys, chained together, exposed alike to heat and cold, badly clothed and worse fed. He succeeded in getting himself appointed Almoner-General of the Galleys and was thus enabled to do a great deal for the amelioration of their unfortunate condition. One day he was visited by a woman, who, with streaming eyes, represented to him that her husband was for some trifling crime condemned to the galleys for two years, during which she and her six little ones must starve. She desired him to interest with the authorities for a pardon, but knowing this was impossible, he offered himself in the poor man's place, saying, 'I have no wife or children depending upon me; I know by experience what the life of a galley-slave is; I can better stand it than he can.' The offer was accepted, and for two years the noble Almoner cheerfully performed the hard labor and endured the sufferings and privations due to the convict for whom he had sacrificed himself. There is no record of how the man shewed his gratitude, but I think Vincent must have conquered his wickedness and won an empire over the hearts of his wife and children better worth winning and having than all the victories of your hero, Napoleon."

"Yes," said Artie, rather as if he was convinced against his inclination. "He certainly was a hero. What became of him afterwards?"

"In 1627 he went back to Paris, and refusing to be made much of at the court and among the great ladies and gentlemen, he devoted himself to visiting hospitals, asylums, etc., and finding that no one ever cared for the poor little orphan babies, established the first Foundling Asylum ever known. You see, Artie, my hero is as real a hero as yours, only you and I look at heroes from a different point of view; you think it heroic to destroy life and cause unhappiness; my heroes save life, relieve misery, and especially give themselves, even as the Greatest of all Heroes did, in self-sacrifice for others. Depend upon it, that man is the truest hero, who most resembles Christ, and his name is written upon records which will last after all the history books have perished forever."—Exchange.

Luminous Paint.

The invention of luminous paint is based upon the fact that certain substances, after having been exposed to the light, will continue to shine for some time after the light is removed. The existence of this power in some gems has been known for a long time, and is mentioned in some of the works of the ancients. Japanese antiquaries tell of a luminous stone that was dug out of the ground in A. D. 669. The phosphorescence of barium sulphide was discovered in 1675. Canton, in 1761, discovered the so-called phosphorus which bears his name by calcining oystershells with sulphur, so as to form the calcium sulphide, the most remarkable of phosphorescent substances. Its luminosity appears to be permanent, for Prof. Heaton, in a lecture describing the qualities of the luminous paint, delivered before the Society of Arts, on the 11th of March last, exhibited a specimen of it which had been sealed in glass by Canton himself in 1764 and which still glowed. The power is attributed to a property which the substances possessing it have of absorbing rays and afterward emitting them with an increased wave-length, as is remarkably shown by quinine, which shines after having been exposed to the ultra-violet part of the spectrum, and converts invisible actinic into visible light-rays. The late Mr. Bahmain succeeded in producing from a compound of lime and sulphur a constant and very powerful phosphorescent substance, which he patented and applied as a paint; articles coated with it become luminous after exposure to the light and retain their glow for a considerable length of time. The sensitiveness of this substance was shown durin Prof. Heaton's lecture by passing electric sparks in front of a card painted with it which had previously been kept in darkness. Each spark impressed its image on the card, and made it luminous. Even a lucifer match struck in front of a dark pane produced a visible effect on the paint.

The highest effect is produced by the violet and ultra-violet rays. The red and yellow rays do not add to the luminosity; in fact, they diminish it when they are allowed to continue to act for a considerable time. This is owing to their caloriño effect, which, though it may stimulato the light for a while, in the end causes it to disappear more rapidly. A short exposure of the paint to ordinary day-light is sufficient to produce a high degree of illumination, the amount and duration of which will depend considerably on the quantity and quality of the light, and no other conditions. When paint has been exposed to the intense light of the sun, or of burning magnesium, a good deal of the brilliancy disappears quickly, but after that the fading is very slow; and it may be said that a more or less useful light will remain through the length of an ordinary winter's night. In one case, Prof. Heaton was just able to see the dial of a watch by the light emitted from a card which, after having been exposed to the daylight of moderate intensity for two hours, had been in total darkness for twenty-six hours. The paint appears to be of satisfactory durability as against all weathers and the action of seawater. The useful purposes to which it may be applied are almost innumerable. Clock faces painted with it will show the time; match boxes can be found all through the night; the roofs of railway cars will light passengers through tunnels; buoys in harbors and channels, and light-buoys, can be made visible; ships may show themselves to each other in the darkness; the diver, painting his dress with it, may be his own lantern and carry along daylight with him to enable him to work under water at a considerable advantage. Its application to use in powder magazines and coal-mines, and wherever fire lights are dangerous, may be considered as among the things that are practicable. The manufactures of the paint, Messrs. Ihlee & Horn, of Aldermanbury, London, say that it now costs twenty-eight shillings, or about seven dollars, a pound, and that a pound of it will paint about twenty-eight square feet. Two years ago they held it at five guineas a pound, but they have been able to lower the price gradually, and hope ultimately that it may be afforded at less than the cost of white lead.—Popular Science Monthly.

BOTANY.

Plants and flowers belong to the organic world, which is divided into the animal and vegetable kingdom. Botany is the science of the vegetable kingdom. It includes the knowledge of the parts, growth, uses, history and classification of plants.

In our little time together we cannot do what would be very pleasant otherwise—trace the growth of the embryo sleeping in the seed to the complete and perfect plant. But look for yourselves, and see how the seed, such as the pea, the bean or the acorn, contains the little bud or plumule, the radicle or rootlet, and enough food to nourish them in the first process of germination.

We take our food in our mouths, and our hands help to get it for us. In the same way the plant must have something with which to get its food.

These three things—the root, stem and leaves—every plant has, and with them it obtains all its nourishment. The root, the part that grows down into the ground, gets all it can there from the soil. The stem, the part that grows upwards, bears leaves which take from the air what is well for it to eat.

What is taken from the soil by the roots passes through the stem, which is something like a tube, and there it, with the food obtained from the air by the leaves is so changed by being exposed to the sun that it is made proper for the nourishment of the plant.

Among the plants those which climb are especially interesting. There are root-climbers; those which make their way up the face of rocks or walls and cling to them by means of little rootlets which they throw out, and into small disks that adhere to the wall. The English and poison ivy and woodbine are very good examples of this class.

Next, there are twiners; those that climb spirally, winding themselves round the nearest object strong enough to bear them. If at any time they run beyond their means of support the end of the vine will keep swinging slowly in a circle until it strikes some other object upon which it can climb. If you notice the way in which beans, honeysuckles and morning-glories grow, you will see that they belong to this class.

There are also leaf-climbers; those in which the stem of the leaf twines around its support, as you may see in the oleomatis. Not, always, however is it the stem which encircles the object, for in certain plants, the leaf lengthens into something like a tendril, and that grasps whatever it can reach to support the vine.

The last or fourth division is that of the tendril-climbers, in which the main stem of the plant does no climbing whatever, but the little tendrils which shoot out close around any object within reach and support the entire weight of the vine; as in the case of the pea, gourd and grape-vine.

Thus even in so short a lesson we see how marvelous and beautiful are even the common things of life, and we need only to open our eyes to see more of delicate and artistic loveliness than ever picture gallery held.—Christian Union.

How to Make Moss Baskets.

Very beautiful baskets for holding flowers can be made of the longer and more feathery kinds of mosses. We have made them often; and never do flowers, whether wild or garden, look more lovely than when clustered with a verdant border of that most delicate and beautiful material, which by proper management may be made to preserve its freshness and brilliancy for many months. We will here give a receipt for their manufacture. A light frame of any shape you like should be made with wire and covered with common paste-board or calico, and the moss, which should first be well picked over and cleansed from any bits of dirt or dead leaves which may be hanging about it gathered into little tufts, and sewed with a coarse needle and thread to the covering, so as to clothe it thickly with a close and compact coating, taking care that the points of the moss are all outward. A long handle made in the same manner shou'd be attached to the basket, and a tin or other vessel, filled with either wet sand or water placed within to hold the flowers. By dipping the whole fabric into water once in three or four days, its verdure and elasticity will be fully preserved, and a block of wood about an inch thick, and stained black or green, if placed under the basket, will prevent all risk of damage to the table from moisure. To make such baskets affords much pleasant social amusement for children, who will find a constantly renewing pleasure in varying their appearance.—Domestic Journal

The Life of a Sponge

To procure a living marine sponge is not very easy; but the fresh-water sponges are common enough, and will answer our purpose just as well. They may be procured in almost any slow-flowing river, and are adherent to twigs and similar objects that have remained in the water for some length of time. Take one of these sponges, the smaller the better, and place it in a glass vessel. A common watch glass will answer the purpose admirably. Presently distinct currents will be perceptible in the water, especially if a little carmine or indigo be dissolved in it. Prussian blue is poisonous, but the "blue" used by the laundress is safe enough. Carmine, however, is, in my opinion, better than any blue tint, as it is prettier in general effect, and the particles are so transparent that they do not become opaque when collected together. When the currents are fairly established the magnifying glass will exhibit a wonderful phase of animal life. The whole of the surface of the sponge is covered with little prominences, having at the tip of each a tolerably large aperture. Through this hole the colored water pours outwards with a steady rush, causing the currents which have made themselves visible. But how did these colored particles, which rush out with such force, get into the sponge at all? A more powerful lens will solve the problem. The whole of the surface is studded with innumerable little holes, piercing through the gelatinous membrane, and admitting the water into the interior of the sponge. A section of the sponge will show that these little holes lead into canals which travel in every direction through the substance of the sponge, and finally lead to the larger apertures through which the water is ejected. Every now and then the current will stop, and all the tiny orifices are closed, without even a mark to show where they had been. Presently it begins again, and then it will be seen that the former orifices are not reopened, but that fresh apertures are developed as they are wanted. Now we may ask ourselves how these larger apertures are kept open, and to answer the question we must call chemistry to our aid. In some sponges we can use the blow-pipe; but as a general rule some strong acid or caustic alkali will destroy the whole of the animal matter. If the residuum be examined with the microscope a vast number of glassy spicules will be seen, varying in shape, size and color with the kind of sponge. Some of them look exactly as if they were made of pink and white sugar-candy, and all children to whom I have shown them have expressed regret at their inability to eat such tempting objects.—Scottish American Journal.

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

PERFECTLY SAFE IN THE MOST INEXPERIENCED HANDS!
For Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cramps, Cholera,
AND ALL THOSE NUMEROUS TROUBLES OF THE STOMACH AND BOWELS SO PREVALENT AT THIS SEASON,
No Remedy known to the Medical Profession has been in use so long and with such uniformly satisfactory results as
PERRY DAVIS'
VEGETABLE
PAIN KILLER
It has been used with such wonderful success in all parts of the world in the treatment of these difficulties, that it has come to be considered
AN UNFAILING CURE FOR ALL SUMMER COMPLAINTS
and such it really is when taken in time and according to the very plain directions inclosing each bottle.
In such diseases, the attack is usually sudden and frequently very acute; but with a safe remedy at hand for immediate use, there is seldom danger of the fatal result which so often follows a few days' neglect.
The inclination to wait and see if the morrow does not bring a better feeling, not infrequently occasions a vast amount of needless suffering, and sometimes costs a life. A timely dose of Pain Killer will almost invariably save both, and with them the attendant doctor's fee.
It has stood the test of "forty years' constant use in all countries and climates, and is perfectly safe in any person's hands.
It is recommended by Physicians, Nurses in Hospitals, and persons of all classes and professions who have had opportunity for observing the wonderful results which have always followed its use.
THE BEST EVIDENCE!
I have long used the medicine known as PERRY DAVIS' VEGETABLE PAIN KILLER in my family and would say of it, that it is a valuable medicine. When Cholera was last epidemic here, I used no medicine of any sort but the Pain Killer, and although myself and several members of my family were attacked severely, I am happy to say that the Pain Killer was equal to every emergency. I consider that I am but doing my duty to the community, did I not say this much. I was prompted by the Cholera Infantum Pain Killer would be the only remedy I should use. I have thoroughly tested it, and know it can be relied upon.
P. H. REINHEIRD, Galena, Illinois.
Messrs. PERRY DAVIS & SON:
I know you need no testimonial to convince you that your medicine is all that you claim for it, but I cannot refrain from the impulse to communicate to you the fact that in my family it has truly done wonders. I endeavour it to my children (one eighteen months, and the other three years old) with perfect success. It regulates their bowels, and stops all diarrhœa. I myself and wife resort to it in all cases, both for internal and external use. We need it in my family for days gone, and will not be without it. Feeling assured, under much obligation to you, in many times, I am very truly yours,
T. F. MOORE, Raleigh, Dutchess Co., New York.
No family can afford to be without it, and its price brings it within the reach of all. The use of one bottle will go further to convince you of its merits than columns of newspaper advertising. Try it, and you will never do without it.
Price 25c. 50c. and $1.00 per bottle. You can obtain it at any drug-store or from

WHO ARE THE GUILTY?

The wretched man who was recently hanged for the murder of Senator Brown, denied that he was guilty of crime. "There was liquor in me," he said, "and I conld not control the act.' Liqnor had prodnced temporary insanity, and therefore, he argned that he was not responsible for the foul deed. No law, either divine or human, will punish offences committed by irresponsible persons. This being so, we are led to the inqniry, whether or not an insane person is or should be held responsible for acts committed dnring fits of insanity. Our conrts of justice have, in more than one instance, decided in the negative; therefore, if the murderer was insane at the time he committed the act, no matter from what cause, he was not guilty of murder, and consequently should not have been hung.

Just here, however, another question is presented, namely: does the drinking of spirituous liquors produce insanity? Our best physicians will testify that such is the fact. Now if the use of alcoholic stimulants produces derangement of the mind, and the person thus afflicted is not responsible for acts committed while in that state, does it not follow that the cause of such derangement, if known, should be removed? And does it not also follow, that those having the power to remove such causes, who refuse or neglect to do so, should be justly held responsible for the evils which occur from such neglect or refusal? Nothing can be plainer. It is no valid excuse to say that all who use spirits are not thus effected. As well might the physicians say "I know that a certain drug, the sale of which yields me an immense profit, will, and does actually produce insanity in some persons, but does not, or has not, so far as I know, had that effect on others to whom I have sold it at all." Suppose a physician is called to prescribe for a case of insanity, and that on examination, he immediately learns the cause of derangement; would it not be criminal in him not to apply the remedy at once if he had it by him? And suppose that while neglecting the case, the insane person should commit some heinous offense, would not men hold him responsible for such neglect? If so are not our legislators, both state and national, guilty of crime for their neglect in applying the remedy for insanity produced by strong drink? And is it not still more criminal for them to give permission to wicked men to scatter this accursed cause of mental derangement all over our land? Will they stand up and tell us that their constituents are opposed to their meddling in the matter? Our representatives ought to know that their constituents elect them to legislate for the good of the whole country, and to use all the means in their power to suppress evil in whatever form it may exist. They also know that the crimes committed in consequence of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, exceed those of all other causes combined; and knowing this, and refusing or neglecting to use the power invested in them to suppress the evil, criminates them. If those who are seeking the suffrages of their constituents would do what they know to be their duty; that is, tell the people that the liquor trade is destroying our beloved land from centre to circumference, which they know to be true, both as regards morals and religion, and that they are determined to use all their powers to suppress it, a responsible and hearty Amen would be echoed throughout of whole land.

Will they have the moral courage to do it? We will watch and wait. "He that knoweth his Master's will, and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes." G. J. R.

ORANGE PRESBYTERY

On Promiscuous Dancing, Theatrical Performances, Card-Playing and Kindred Forms of Worldliness and Ungodliness.

A LETTER TO THE CHURCHES, APRIL, 1875.

[Republished by request.]

The Presbytery of Orange to the churches under its care:

DEAR BRETHREN: Suffer us to address you with a few words of affectionate counsel and admonition upon a subject that seems to us intimately connected with personal piety, the honor of our religion and our usefulness as laborers in the vineyard of our Lord. We feel that there is no necessity to warn you against the ruder customs and more glaring vices of the age. Against these your good taste and enlightened Christian judgment unhesitatingly revolt. But there are others, more fashionable and more refined and consequently more alluring and seductive, to which we would call your serious attention. We refer to promiscuous dancing, theatrical performances, card-playing and all kindred forms of worldliness and ungodliness. Being fully persuaded that these are not things that are pure, lovely and of good report, but lead to frivolity, dissipation, waste of time, hardness of heart and alienation from God; that they expose to temptations, lead church members, especially the young, into associations and social gatherings where their souls suffer, and are altogether inconsistent with the character and conduct of the disciple of Christ, the Presbytery would unequivocally condemn them and bring the weight of its counsel and authority to dissuade from all indulgences in them. In taking this position, we are not only in full accord with the views of other churches and the universal testimony of the best and most eminent men of all denominations, but are sustained and authorized by the repeated action of the judicatories, from the highest to the lowest, of our own church.

In the pastoral letter of the General Assembly of 1818 we find a pointed condemnation of dancing in the following words:

"With respect to dancing we think it necessary to observe that, however plausible it may appear to some, it is perhaps not the less dangerous on account of that plausibility. It is not from those things which the world acknowledges to be most wrong that the greatest danger is to be apprehended to religion, especially as it relates to the young. When the practice is carried to its highest extremes all admit the consequences to be fatal, and why not, then, apprehend danger even from its incipient stages? It is certainly in all its stages a fascinating and an infatuating practice. Let it once be introduced and it is difficult to give it limits. It steals away our precious time, dissipates religious impressions and hardens the heart. To guard you, beloved brethren, against its wiles and fascinations we earnestly recommend that you will consult that sobriety which the sacred pages require. We also trust that you will attend with the meekness and docility becoming the Christian character, to the admonition on the subject, of those whom you have chosen to watch for your souls."—Minutes for 1818, page 55, bottom.

In 1865 our own General Assembly took the following action, to which we call your special attention:

OVERTURE No. 9.—A paper from the Rev. Dr. Ross on the subject of fashionable amusements, containing these inquiries, with their personal answers:

1. Question.—Whether every church session has the right to make it a rule that dancing and other amusements are disciplinary?

Answer.—No church judicatory has a right to make any new rules of church membership different from those contained in the constitution, but it is the undoubted right of the church session, and of every other judicatory, to make a deliverance affirming its sense of what is an "offence" in the meaning of the Book of Discipline.—Chap. 1, sec. 3.

2. Question.—Whether such rule commonly exists in Presbyterian churches?

Answer.—Probably none of our judicatories are as faithful as they ought to be, but it is believed that the churches generally do in some form discountenance dancing. And the Presbyterian Church through its supreme judicatory has repeatedly borne its testimony against dancing and other worldly amusements.

3. Question.—Whether such rule is expedient or what should be the mind of the whole body and what its action?

Answer.—It is the duty of every judicatory to enforce the teachings of our standards on this and other fashionable amusements, such as theatrical performances, card-playing, &c. And while the Assembly believes that the "lascivious dancings" declared to be forbidden in the 7th commandment by the answer to the 139th question of the Larger Catechism, are not those usual in our best society, yet it is our belief that the tenor of the teachings of the Scriptures and of our standards is in direct opposition to this social usage. Christ's kingdom is not of this world; and the apostle exhorts Christians not to be conformed to the world. Though we do not say that all these worldly amusements are "in their own nature sinful," it is clear that they "may tempt" those who engage in them, and others, to sin; and moreover the scriptures condemn them as worldliness. If the practice of the dance in mixed assemblies be not conforming to the world, it is difficult to name any offence against the injunction of the apostle. Nor need the Church of Christ have any hesitancy in announcing its position on this subject: for the men of the world, with one consent, agree that it is inconsistent with the nature of the Christian profession for members of the church to engage in the dance.

In this connection the Assembly would take occasion to exhort our Christian people to avoid the excesses into which they are in danger of being drawn by the demands of fashion. The scriptures forbid "revelling" and all intemperate self-indulgence, with which teachings the prevalent custom of protracting social assemblies with or without music or dancing to the hours of morning, but especially when accompanied with drinking or card playing, is manifestly inconsistent. Moreover, the Assembly, observing that parties of pleasure are usually composed almost exclusively of unmarried young people, would give it as its earnest advice that the best form of social reunion be made to partake as much as possible of the style and tone of the family circle, in which youthful enjoyment is tempered by the presence of the older and married members.

The Assembly expresses itself with the more earnestness on this whole subject because of the disposition which is observed in all parts of our borders to run into the inordinate indulgence of worldliness at this time, in forgetfulness of the mighty chastenings of God, which are even yet upon us; and because we see members of our churches, and beloved baptized youth in forgetfulness of the covenant of God, which is upon them, carried away with the world's delusions to the subversion of the divine influence of the sanctuary, and to the neglect of the interests of their souls. Wherefore the Assembly would urge upon our people to take the word of exhortation; to abstain from all forms of evil, and to study and pursue that sobriety which becometh the Gospel, as that the Church of Christ shall indeed be "a peculiar people." And we hereby exhort our ministers and Church Sessions to a discharge of their duties.

Let them proceed by affectionate and faithful instruction from the pulpit as well as in private, by admonition and by such other measures as Christian prudence may detect. But when all other means fail, then let them proceed to such methods of discipline as shall separate from the Church those who love the world and practice conformity thereto rather than to the law of Christ"—Minutes of 1865 pp 361—362.

In 1869 the General Assembly adopted the following in response to an overture to direct all its moral and spiritual powers by such measures as shall seem to the Assembly best, to the following objects, viz:

Effectually causing all church sessions and Presbyterians to enforce the discipline provided in our constitution against offences, especially against conformity to dissipated and lasciviens amusements of the world; that the Assembly would in hearty response to the second suggestion of this overture, earnestly and solemnly enjoin upon all the Sessions and Presbyteries under its care, the absolute necessity of enforcing "the discipline provided in our constitution against offences," under the word offences, including attendance, by our members, upon theatrical exhibitions and performances, and promiscuous dancing. —Minutes of 1869 p 391.

It is evident from the authorities just cited, that it is a violation of the rules of the Presbyterian church, for its members to engage in the dance, and that it is the solemn duty of the Session and other judiciaries to enforce the discipline of the church upon this subject; they are bound to do this, both by their ordination vows and the repeated injunctions of the Supreme Court of the Church.

But lest some should be ready to suppose that the Presbyterian Church stands alone in adjudging the practices to be prohibited by the word of God and detrimental to the purity of the Church, we give a few quotations from some of the most prominent denominations:

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

We cite the testimony of prominent men in the Episcopal Church—men distinguished alike for their purity and their learning. Bishop Hopkins wrote of dancing:

"Its incongruity with strict Christian sobriety and principles, and its tendency to the love of dissipation are so manifest that no ingenuity can make it consistent with the covenant of Baptism."

Bishop Meade said: "I shall not dwell upon these two arguments further, for obvious reasons. To my mind they are conclusive to show that social dancing is not among the neutral things, which within certain limits, we may do at pleasure, and even that it is not among the things, lawful, but not expedient, but that it is in itself wrong, improper and of bad effect."

Bishop McIlwaine said: "If the writer be asked whether in his view, in the pomps and varieties of the wicked world, which are renounced in baptism, are included theatrical amusements and dances, he answers without hesitation in the affirmative. If he be asked under the Apostles exhortation, "Be not conformed to this world," whether they are included as matters of worldly conformity to be forsaken, he answers 'certainly.'"

Bishop Coxe said: "The enormities of theatrical exhibitions, and the lasciviousness of dancing, too commonly tolerated in our times, are so disgraceful to the age and so irreconcilable to the Gospel of Christ, that I feel it my duty to the souls of my flocks, to warn those who run with the world to 'the same excess of riot' in these things, that they presume not to come to the holy table. Classes preparing for confirmation are informed that I will not lay hands, knowingly, on any one who is not prepared to renounce such things, with other abominations of the world, the flesh and the devil! Let all such choose deliberately whom they will serve; and if salvation be worth striving for, let them be persuaded to a sober life, to self-denial, and to the pure and innocent enjoyments which the Bible not only permits, but which it only can create."

We ask your special attention to this testimony because many cherish the opinion that this Church does not discourage dancing.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH:

In a little work written by a Methodist minister, and entitled "An appeal to all Christians, especially the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church against the practice of Social Dancing," we find the following:

"It is a flagrant violation of the 'General Rules' of these Churches, both North and South, and all those who desire to continue in the fellowship of these churches are required to abstain from all such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus, and this has always been interpreted as prohibiting their members from attending theatres, circuses, balls, dancing parties," &c. "So that if members of these churches dance or attend dancing parties, they not only violate one of the fundamental rules of their church, but they are guilty of violating a solemn pledge by themselves in the presence of the church, to observe and keep the rules of the church."

These quotations might be greatly enlarged and many more of similar import might be added.

We might furnish you with the opinions of many of the most pious and eminent ministers of the Presbyterian church, such as Drs. Archibald Alexander, W. S. Potts, N. L. Rice, B. M. Palmer, S. R. Wilson, Stuart Robinson, W. M. Engels and Albert Barnes. But let the opinion of one suffice as reflecting the sentiment of all.

In a published sermon on dancing, Dr. Palmer says:

"Oh! tell it not to earth, lest it rend again the very rocks and break once more the slumbers of the dead. A dancing disciple of a crucified Redeemer! Indeed so deeply impressed is my own mind with the inconsistency of dancing with baptismal obligations, I hesitate not to utter my mature conviction that members of the church who consent to the dancing of their children, are perfectly amenable to the discipline of God's house, on the ground of a breach of vows. Promiscuous dancing between the sexes is essentially voluptuous and demoralizing."

In conclusion we beseech you brethren, suffer the word of exhortation. Obey them that have the rule over you and submit yourselves. Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness; but rather reprove them. Abstain from all appearance of evil. Be not conformed to this world. Search the Scriptures. Pray without ceasing. Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together. Speak often one to another. "Now may the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working you that which is well pleasing in His sight through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever, Amen." JAMES H. FITZGERALD,
Moderator.

PROCEEDINGS OF PRESBYTERY OF MECKLENBURG.

Presbytery met with Lincolnton church, Wednesday, September 8th, 1880, and was opened with a sermon by the moderator, Rev. J. P. Gammon, on the words—"They went and told Jesus."

There were thirteen ministers and sixteen elders present.

MINISTERS.

Walter W. Pharr, Corbett, Parks, Harding, Johnston, McDonald, Davis, McIlwain, Chester, Robinson, R. A. Miller, Gammon and Cook.

ELDERS.

T. J. Price, from Steele Creek church; H. M. Parks, Providence; R. R. King, Philadelphia; H. M. Wilson, Olney; Samuel A. Torrence, Long Creek: E. Nye Hutchison, First church, Charlotte; Geo. L. Phifer, Lincolnton; James R. Hutchison, Mallard Creek; R. S. White, Sharon; J. C. Smith, Lebanon; A. T. Summey, Red Oak; J. H. Long, Bethlehem; S. X. Johnston, Castanea Grove; M. A. Murr, Wadesboro; R. I. McDowell, Second church, Charlotte; J. H. McClintock, Huntersville.

The Rev. G. S Robinson was elected moderator and A. T. Summey temporary clerk.

Letters from the following members were received, giving satisfactory reasons for absence:

Rev. L. R. McAbey, D. D., A. W. Miller, D. D., S. C. Alexander, W. R. Atkinson, D. T. Towles, Wm. Graves, Wm. N. Morrison, S. T. Martin, J. J. Kennedy, J. F. Latimer, Wm. M. McGilvary and M. R. Kirkpatrick.

HOME MISSIONS.

The time of Presbytery was chiefly occupied in hearing reports from the missionary portions of our territory and devising ways and means of supplying them.

On motion of the Committee on Home Missions, Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick was directed to give the fifth Sabbaths to Charleston, in Swain county, and Robbinsville.

Ordered, that so soon as the way may be clear, the Monroe and Wadesboro charge will be separated and the Executive Committee instructed to provide for supplying the Wadesboro and Anson field.

The Executive Committee was directed to estimate the probable demands for conducting our missionary work next year, and apportion the amount among the churches.

The following were appointed to serve as the Executive Committee of Home Missions for the next year: Revs. G. D. Parks, S. H. Chester, G. L. Cook, G. S. Robinson, E. H. Harding, Wm. E. McIlwain and Walter W. Pharr and Mr. J. L. Brown.

HISTORY OF PRESBYTERY.

Rev. Wm. E. McIlwain, chairman, read an interesting historical sketch of the Presbytery since its organization, and Presbytery directed the same to be returned to the Committee for further correction and improvement at next meeting.

PRESBYTERIAL FUND.

This matter was examined, and it was found that the debt due the Synod of North Carolina, could be paid off if the churches in arrears to this fund would pay up promptly one-half the amounts due; and it was ordered that the arrearages due from the following churches be scaled as follows: Charlotte, First church, $110; Charlotte, Second church, $80; Hopewell, $40; Caldwell, $20; Philadelphia, $8.

The stated clerk was ordered to report this action to these churches, and urge payment as soon as possible, in order that our treasurer may be able to pay off our debt before the meeting of Synod.

The annual assessments on the churches were re-arranged and reduced, and churches will be advised of same in time for spring meeting, when they become due.

VACANT CHURCHES.

Two churches are vacant—Bethlehem and Hephzibah, in Union and Gaston counties.

Ordered, that Rev. Dr. Harding conduct a meeting and administer sacraments at Bethlehem, and Rev. W. B. Corbett do same for Hephzibah Church.

The Postoffice address of Bethlehem church is, Oak Grove, Union county, N. C., care J. H. Long, clerk; Hepzibah church is, Dallas, N. C., care Carpenter's Store, S. S. Gardiner, clerk.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

Revs. G. D. Parks and W. H. Davis were re-elected trustees of Davidson College, and the following paper was adopted:

"With great pleasure we hear of the continued prosperity of this excellent institution, and we are satisfied that, from the convenience of its location, sound financial condition, good, moral and thorough instruction in all departments furnished on most reasonable terms, Davidson College above all other similar institutions in the State deserves our hearty support.

"In order to further its interest we place it on our docket, and invite Rev. Dr. Hepburn, the president, and his co-laborers of the Faculty, to meet with us as they may be able at our fall sessions. This institution ought to have at least two hundred students, and to secure this number, we pledge ourselves to establish and foster academies and high schools in every church in our bounds as far as possible, and to direct the attention of young men preparing for college to the superior advantages of Davidson, and to pray the Great Head of the Church to baptize it with His Spirit and make it more than ever a blessing and a praise in the whole Church."

PUBLICATION.

The agent, Rev. S. H. Chester, resigned, and it was ordered that this whole subject be entrusted to the Committee on Colportage—the committee to report at every fall meeting of Presbytery.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The agent, Rev. W. B. Corbett, brought this subject up in an interesting report, showing the aggregate sum raised in our bounds during the year ending April, 1880, to be $1,743, which is more by about $300 than was raised by any Presbytery in the Carolinas. Our congregations did not contribute quite as much as they did the year before, but the Ladies' Aid Societies and Sunday school children more. All of our churches, except seven small and feeble ones, contributed. Presbytery urged ministers and elders to instruct charges upon this subject, and heartily commends the efforts of the Ladies' Aid Societies and Sunday schools, and directs the last Wednesday of October to be observed as a day for special prayer for the cause of Foreign Missions in all the churches, as far as practicable, as recommended by the last General Assembly.

Rev. S. H. Chester (Wm. E. McIlwain, alternate,) was appointed to preach a sermon at the next meeting on the cause of Foreign Missions.

THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Presbytery urges ministers to give proper attention to the religious culture of the colored people, and when opportunity offers, open the way for worthy candidates to go to the Institute at Tuscaloosa, Ala.

THE SABBATH.

Revs. E. H. Harding, G. L. Cook and F. Scarr were appointed Presbyterial Committee on the Sabbath, as recommended by the Assembly, and Rev. G. D. Parks was appointed to preach on "The Scriptural observance of the Sabbath day," at our next meeting.

PASTORAL RELATION.

Several churches having stated supplies were called on for reasons why the pastoral relation may not be established. Rev. G. D. Parks was directed to call the attention of the Matthews congregation to this matter, and the stated clerk was directed to write to all other churches, not called on our roll, to report touching this matter.

COMMISSIONERS.

All the commissioners to the last General Assembly were present and made reports, which were approved.

Presbytery deferred nominating commissioners at this meeting for the next Assembly.

EVANGELISTS.

Rev. S. H. Chester was authorized to act as evangelist at Tate's Factory, and D. T. Towles in Jackson and Haywood counties, where there is no organized Presbyterian church, till next meeting.

CANDIDATES AND LICENTIATES.

Mr. Henry Cyrus Long, member of Monroe church, was received as a candidate and referred to the Committee on Candidates.

Presbytery cancelled the note due from Mr. G. F. Robertson, now a licentiate in Arkansas, and directed Licentiate J. L. Williams to labor under the advice of the Committee on Home Missions.

Presbytery adjourned to meet with the Huntersville church in April, 1881.

R. Z. JOHNSTON, Stated Clerk.
Lincolnton, N. C., Sept. 16, 1880.

PRAYER FOR SATURDAY EVENING.

Chafed and worn with worldly care,
Sweetly, Lord, my heart prepare;
Bid this inmost tempest cease;
Jesus, come and whisper peace!
Hush the whirlwind of my will;
With Thyself my spirit fill;
End in calm this busy week,
Let the Sabbath gently break.

Sever, Lord, these earthly ties—
Fain my soul to Thee would rise;
Disentangle me from time,
Lift me to a purer clime;
Let me cast away my load,
Let me now draw near to God.
Gently, loving Jesus, speak;
End in calm this busy week.

THE IDLENESS OF GIRLS.

A great mistake that many girls are making, and that their mothers are either encouraging or allowing them to make, is that of spending their time out of school in idleness or in frivolous amusements, doing no work to speak of, and learning nothing about the practical duties and serious cares of life. It is not only in the wealthier families that girls are growing up indolent, and unpracticed in household work; indeed, I think that more attention is paid to the industrial training of girls in the wealthier families than in the families of mechanics and people in moderate circumstances, where the mothers are compelled to work hard all the while. "Within the last week," says one of my correspondents, "I have heard two mothers, worthy women in most respects, say—the first, that her daughter never did any sweeping. Why, if she wants to say to her companions, 'I never swept a room in my life,' and takes any comfort in it, let her say it; and yet that mother is sorrowing much over the shortcomings of that very daughter. The other said she would not let her daughter do anything in the kitchen. Poor deluded woman! She did it all herself instead."

The habits of indolence and of helplessness that are thus formed are not the greatest evils resulting from this bad practice; the selfishness that it fosters is the worst thing about it. How devoid of conscience, how lacking in all true sense of tenderness or even of justice, a girl must be who will thus consent to devote all her time out of school to pleasuring, while her mother is bearing all the heavy burdens of the household. And the foolish way in which mothers sometimes talk about this, even in the presence of their children, is mischievous in the extreme. "Oh! Hattie is so absorbed in her books, or her crayons, or embroidery, that she takes no interest in household matters, and I do not like to call upon her." As if the daughter belonged to a superior order of beings, and must not soil her hands or ruffle her temper with necessary housework. The mother is the drudge; the daughter the fine lady for whom she toils. No mother who suffers such a state of things as this can preserve the respect of her daughter, and the respect of her daughter no mother can afford to lose. The result of all this is to form in the minds of many gifted girls not only a distaste for labor, but a contempt for it, and a purpose to avoid it as long as they live by some means or other. There is scarcely one letter I have received which does not mention this as one of the chief errors in the training of our girls at the present day. It is not universal, but it is altogether too prevalent. And I want to say to you, girls, that if you are allowing yourselves to grow up with such habits of indolence and such notions about work, you are preparing for yourselves a miserable future.—Rev. W. Gladden.

THE PREACHER.

A great writer has told us that one of the most beautiful and touching things one sees on earth is a man standing and speaking spiritual things to men. And he asserts that "the speaking function—this of truth coming to us with a living voice—nay, in a living shape, and as a concrete practical exemplar—this, with all our writing and printing functions, has a perennial place." For some have thought, and staunchly maintained, that the pulpit has done its work, and that the multitude of newspapers, books and magazines is enough for all the requirements of man. It is remarkable, however, that never did so many men and women listen with solemn and earnest attention to so many preachers, throughout the land; and that wherever there is a preacher whose peculiar gifts proclaim his vocation to speak to men of the glad tidings of good things, crowds have joyfully assembled to hear him. The truth is, that philosophy has never made men moral, nor abstract doctrine made them holy. The Incarnation was as needful to sanctify as it was to redeem; and the warm presence of humanity, not merely thinking the truth, but feeling it, not denouncing sin, but fighting it, carries a force with its living energy which nothing else can simulate or rival. Every era of rising religious life has been an era of preaching. Even now, while men complain that we have so few great preachers, they seem to forget that we have so many good ones; and if they demand an excess of pastoral care, it is because they are anxious to continue during the week the good influence they felt on the Sunday, and to be better acquainted with him who so deeply enters their hearts, and so tenderly touches their lives.—Quiver.

THE TWO BROTHERS.

The name of Bradlaugh will, I presume, be well known to you—I mean the infidel lecturer. His Brother William, who was never an infidel, attended one of the Moody and Sankey services at the Agricultural Hall, after which he sought Mr. Sankey in the inquiry room. Mr. Sankey questioned him for a time, and then questioned him to read John 3: 16, inserting his own name in the text. He first read it to himself, thus: "God so loved William Robert Bradlaugh, that he gave his only begotten Son, that if William Robert Bradlaugh believeth in him he shall not perish, but have everlasting life." While thus reading the passage he believed unto salvation. He was afterwards employed in evangelistic work, and his services were obtained in connection with the "Circus Mission" in Northampton. Without any pre-arrangement his brother Charles was published to lecture in the same town on the same evening, which fact intensified the interest awakened. William addressed above five thousand people, at four services, delivering most faithfully the message of the gospel of Jesus. A few Christian friends joined him in a special prayer meeting for his brother—a time ever to be remembered * * * The parents of the brothers Bradlaugh were pious members of the Church of England. They have now passed to another world. And the infidel brother was once a Sunday-school teacher.—Letter to Sunday School Times.

EVERYDAY RULES FOR THE JOURNEY OF LIFE.

Never ridicule sacred things, or what others may esteem as such, however absurd they may appear to you. Never resent a supposed injury till you know the views and motives of the author of it. Do no occasion relate it. Always take the part of an absent person who is censured in company, so far as truth and propriety will allow. Never think worse of another on account of his differing in political and religious subjects. Never dispute with a man who is more than seventy years of age, nor with an enthusiast. Do not jest so as to wound the feelings of another. Say as little as possible of yourself, and of those who are near to you. Never court the favour of the rich by flattering either their vanities or their vices. Speak with calmness and deliberation, especially in circumstances which tend to irritate.

USE GOOD WORDS.

A writer advising youth to abandon slang and acquire the habit of writing and speaking good English, says: "The longer you live the more difficult the acquisition of good language will be; and if the golden age of youth, the proper time for the acquisition of language, be passed in abuse, the unfortunate victim of neglected education is very probably doomed to talk slang for life. Money is not necessary to procure this education. Every person has it in his power. He has to use the language which he reads instead of the slang which he hears; to form taste from the best speakers and poets of the country; to treasure up choice phrases in his memory, and habituate himself to their use, avoiding at the same time that pedantic precision and bombast which shew rather the weakness of vain ambition than the polish of an educated mind."

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The death is announced at Furth of Rabbi Neckarsulmer, one of the most distinguished Talmud scholars in Germany, at the age of eighty-two.

The Bishops of the Episcopal Church in Scotland have presented a petition to the House of Commons against the admission of atheists to Parliament.

At a special meeting of the Rev. Mr. Macrae's congregation at Genrock, it was resolved unanimously to secede from the United Presbyterian communion and invite Mr. Macrae to become their pastor.

The Abbe Germain, the vicar of the Sainte Trinite, Cherbourg, has refused to deliver a prize crown to a child of four years, because, dressed in the national colors, she presented a bouquet to M. Grevy.

Distressing news comes again from Africa. A message from Zanzibar reached London on the 10th ult., reporting that Captain Carter and Mr. Cadenhead, of the Royal Belgian Exploration Expedition, have been murdered by a chief named Wrambo.

The London Missionary Society have received a telegram announcing the death of the Rev. M. A. Sherring, the eminent Indian missionary, at Benares. He was the author of several works bearing on religious establishments in India.

A new Jewish synagogue was opened on Wednesday at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, by the Rev. Dr. Adler of London, who preached the inaugural sermon. The building cost upwards of £5,000, and will accommodate nearly 700 persons.

The Cure of Carentan, who refused to hoist the national flag on his church on July 14, and spoke impertinently to M. Grevy, has been ostentatiously rewarded for his courageous conduct under delicate circumstances" by his diocesan, the Bishop of Contances, who appoints him honorary canon of the cathedral.

Cardinal Manning, who has upwards of 2,800 orphans under his care, is making arrangements with the Canadian bishops to obtain situations for such as are able to fill them in Roman Catholic families, where they would be under the supervision of the clergy. The demand for them is already very great, and it is expected a number will shortly leave for their new homes.

The continued diminution of the offerings of Peter's pence causes great and increasing anxiety at the Vatican, and various plans are under consideration for arousing the Roman Catholic world on this important point. Much uncertainty still prevails as to the steps to be taken for securing a sufficient and permanent income, and in the meantime Leo XIII. is compelled to limit all extraordinary expenses, and to suspend the completion of various works of art.

Japan has experienced a complete revolution in the past seven years. The Government has established the Sabbath as a statute holiday, and introduced many of the institutions of Western civilization. The tramps have been removed to the great agricultural works on the Northern Island of Yezzo and schools are generally established, and the progress of Christian and Greek missions has been very rapid. The Minister of Education says:—"The fact that the English education schools have increased, while other foreign languages have decreased, is significant as to what language will most prevail in this country in the future."

Moody and Sankey's hymns have been translated into Italian, and they are already on the lips of the boys in the streets of Florence. A correspondent writing from Italy says:—"Demolition is fast going on. That which in England is being built up in Italy is in rapid process of destruction. A few more years and there will be no Roman Catholic, such as she now is, to cognette with and to imitate. As it now is, she is, in the mind of the majority of the people of Italy, a Church fast passing away. What presses much more upon the minds of Italians than the prospect of demolition is that of reconstruction, and the basis and principles on which it should proceed. Here it is that they want direction."

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1880.

TAXATION.

Where the duties of civil government are properly understood, the design of civil government is to promote the material prosperity and the social and moral well-being of the people governed. In its administration it employs agents, instrumentalities and appliances either in the direct promotion of that which will inure to the benefit of the State, or in the correction, suppression or prevention of abuses and evils which afflict it. In this administration of civil government money is largely needed: hence taxation.

That taxation in one form or another is indispensable and essential to government will be readily conceded, yet there are few subjects upon which so little thought is spent, in regard of the purposes to which revenue should be applied, or the subjects upon which taxes should be levied. It is these facts, that taxation cannot be avoided, and that the masses of the people are in general uninformed as to the cardinal principles upon which equitable taxation is based, which constitute to the mere demagogue the lever with which he lifts himself into office. We propose, in as plain and direct a way as we can, to give our readers a few thoughts on this subject.

As the well-being of its citizens is a cardinal motive in the administration of the government of well regulated states, those enterprises or properties which specially promote the welfare of the people, are allowed abatement or even remission of taxes. Churches and educational institutions are exempted upon this principle, in connection with the consideration that the effect upon any community of educational training and the diffusion of religion and morality, by producing thrift and increasing wealth, is to largely provide subjects for taxation. Great secular enterprises having in their prospect a large increase of material wealth, and especially of such wealth as constitutes taxable property are also considered as properly entitled to abatement or remission of taxes. Following this, necessaries of life are regarded as occupying peculiarly favorable positions in the scale of taxation, while luxuries are taxed in a high degree; and this discrimination against luxuries is reasonable and just in that they tend in no measure to the prosperity of the state, and that indulgence in them indicates ability to bear special burdens.

But no principle is more universally accepted than that the great burden of taxation should fall on professions, occupations or commodities that are prejudicial to the community. The careful consideration of the principle last named we commend to our readers. The correctness of what has been adduced being admitted the following are corollaries:

Whatever profession, occupation or traffic saps the foundation of morality, and antagonizes those forces and influences which tend to thrift and material prosperity should bear a large proportion of taxation.

Whatever indisposes to labor, or incapacitates for employment and thus directly produces idleness and begets that poverty which adds nothing to the wealth, or that pauperism which burdens the state, ought to be well taxed.

Whatever, through begetting poverty or otherwise, tends to cause ignorance, and thus sets itself against thrift and unfits citizens for performance of their duties to the state, ought to be highly taxed.

Whatever destroys life, engenders disease, and in general impairs health ought to be heavily taxed; for that to increase mortality is criminal, and to produce disease or impair health is to detract from wealth producing power, and thus sap the source from which taxes are to be derived.

Whatever promotes vice or crime ought to be taxed unsparingly; for that in the highest degree it militates against the very principles for which government is designed, and not only so, but that it constitutes in great measure the necessity for the levying of taxes, and absorbs the collections in correcting or suppressing the evils it induces.

In general then whatever is prejudicial to the moral, social or material welfare of any state, ought to bear the great proportion of taxation, and what tends to produce, encourage, promote or foster such welfare should be relieved as far as possible of the burden. This is not only justice but common sense.

It will be objected, of course, that if any one traffic or occupation be taxed beyond others, the exaction will defeat the purpose of the law, for that such taxes will not be paid. Strange that such reasoning should find its admirers! If the law in one case can be executed, so in any other case; if not, it must be because, that in the one case the enactment is sustained by public opinion, and in the other it is not so sustained; or, it must be because in any supposed case the law is operative, not because of its inherent power but of the sufferance of those against whom it is directed. To the first supposition this is to be said, that public opinion if intelligently formed, will always sustain what takes burdens from that which promotes the welfare of the people of the state, and lays them on that which is prejudicial to such welfare. The second hypothesis as applicable to the circumstances under discussion is too absurd to demand serious consideration. It assumes that parties who pursue a calling detrimental to a government will from the mere impulse of patriotism pay taxes for the support of that government, and it makes the degree of taxation dependent absolutely upon the will of those who are at enmity with the best interests of the state. This is neither justice nor common sense. Other things are to be said, but we cannot press them now.

The Philadelphia Times will contain full reports of the proceedings of the Presbyterian Council. We advise such of our readers as desire to get full and accurate information to subscribe to the Times. We shall avail ourselves of the reports as far as may be, but cannot be full.

EDUCATION.

Our people are awaking to the importance of education, and the prospect ahead is really more hopeful. Rev. Dr. Pritchard is doing excellent service in arousing the public mind and conscience and political speakers are taking up the subject. Information on the subject can never go amiss, and we give our readers the following remarkable statement with regard to the schools of Scotland. Think of this: "The schools of Scotland provide places for 40,000 more children than there are to be educated." The extract is from the Echo:

"What strikes an English traveler in the United States is that as soon as a new settlement is made a piece of ground is set apart for a school-house. The Scotch have acted upon a similar principle for centuries, and, knowing that education would furnish their children with a wealth which their comparatively sterile land could never provide, they have established schools in an abundance not equaled in any other part of the empire. The Scotch Education Department has reported to Parliament how education stood in that country last year. The population in 1871 was 3,360,018, and the school boards estimate that in 1878 it was 3,653,238. The number of children of the school age—namely, from five years to thirteen—was ascertained to be 620,254 at the last census, from which it advanced in the seven years to 645,076, and the schools in Scotland provide places for 40,000 more children than there are to be educated. This is a remarkable record, and it is accomplished by five classes of schools. Public schools number 2503, with 463,363 places; State-aided schools, non-public, are 605, with accommodation for 130,853; other elementary schools recognized as efficient are 508, with room for 50,031 scholars; there are seventeen higher-class public schools, having 9414 places; and lastly, 260 higher-class schools, non-public, with 57,036 places, the total number of schools being 3893. This gives an average of 176 scholars to each school; and as some of the schools are in the sparsely populated Highlands and in the Western Islands, it is manifest that for the most part each school will have more than 200 scholars. To give an instance of the educational enterprise, in two small islands belonging to the county of Inverness, named Muck and Rum, the Board employs a teacher who visits the towns alternately, as there are only twelve pupils in each island, and the people of this school district pay a school rate of 6d. in the pound."

SCIENCE AND PRAYER.

Our friends of the Central Presbyterian are so convenient, benevolent and amiable, and, in the scientific treatment of scientific subjects so capable withal, that we call in the following for our readers:

"If Northern Europe, in the second century, had been unmolested by the Romans, the quantity of rain-fall in Britain, Germany, etc., would have remained (probably) about the same that it had been for some centuries previous. But when the Roman generals discovered that the barbarians took refuge in their impenetrable and marshy forests, they ordered a wholesale destruction of the forests (as in Hatfield, Mass). This must have diminished the amount of rain-fall. Here is an instance in which "the course of nature" was interrupted and modified. The mental determination of a Roman emperor exerted an influence on the amount of rain which fell in Britain and on the amount of marshland in that country. God might have originated [did originate] that mental determination of the Roman emperor; therefore God interfered in this instance with "the course of nature;" spirit operated on matter, and the activity of matter received a new impulse or repression. God might have done this in answer to prayer. Therefore "the course of nature" may be altered by prayer. Therefore it is not unphilosophical to believe that the character of the seasons may be influenced by prayer. This establishes the principle; how far this may be permitted is only a question of degree, and depends on the welfare of the creation as a whole, which will not be sacrificed for mere individual convenience. And when God answers the prayers of his people for rain, it will not be done by miracle; He will employ the laws of nature to execute His will. We shall detect no departure from the ordinary operation of natural causes.

If the French engineers can re-establish the great interior sea which formerly stretched across Northern Africa, they will interfere with "the course of nature" in both Europe and Africa. They will modify the climates of both Europe and North Africa, the temperature as well as the winds and rain-fall. Therefore, WILL may turn the course of natural law, and put an entirely new aspect on nature. But Will is an indeterminate quantity; therefore Science can only predict with exactness the course of physical events within those limits which are not invaded by the power of Will—human or Divine.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We are under great obligations to the agents of the PRESBYTERIAN who year by year act for us in their congregations. We beg that they will continue their efforts in behalf of the paper, without further notification.

Prof. Blake, with characteristic modesty, declines to publish the paper read by him before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, but he furnishes a rare budget of scientific news very gracefully presented. We commend it to our readers.

A friend and subscriber from "away down South," in a private letter puts the following very pertinent query:

"Look at Japan, with her Christian Sabbath; then look at Louisiana with no Sabbath, all her grog shops open, and more bad whiskey drank on that day than on the balance of the week. Don't you think we need the missionary?"

The value of solid good sense combined with absolute fearlessness, is admirably illustrated in the dealings of Count Lewis Melikoff with the Russian Nihilists. We hear nothing of plots, conspiracies and assassinations now. His course has been conciliatory while firm and he has thus succeeded in quieting the devilish passions which cruel repressive measures only served to inflame. The Supreme Executive Commission over which he has presided has been dissolved and the Third Section or Department of Police has been abolished.

Count Melikoff has control of the gendarmes and is Minister of the Interior. He ranks as First Minister of the Empire and is virtually Dictator of Russia. His honors are well-deserved. The London Review says: No Russian enjoys so much public confidence as this sagacious statesman, who evidently desires to prepare his country for that large measure of freedom which will be the best security against a return of terrorism. More formidable even than the Nihilism, which he has succeeded in skillfully repressing, has been the bureaucracy, whose corruption and cruelty has been one of the main causes of revolutionary agitation. Administrative reforms can now be initated by the new Minister of the Interior, and these will, probably, in due time, be followed by constitutional concessions. It is certainly as gratifying as it is remarkable a change, and all will hope that it will be enduring.

DEATH OF MRS MARY R. LACY.—Mrs. Lacy was the wife of Rev. Dr. Drury Lacy and sister of Rev. Dr. John H. Rice. Rev. W. S. Lacy was with her in her last moments. Universal sympathy will be extended to the bereaved brethren. We clip from the News and Observer:

"Though such an event was not unexpected the many friends of Mrs. Mary R. Lacy were greatly pained on yesterday to learn that their worst fears were realized, and that she had died in Baltimore on Wednesday night at 9 o'clock. Only one week ago she went to that city to consult with physicians as to her failing health, and soon after her arrival the worst symptoms developed in her case. It is not our purpose to write a full tribute to the memory of this noble Christian woman, whose life has been one of such eminent usefulness. Our whole community, and numbers of persons in our State, know of her great Christian worth and influence in her church and as an educator of the young. Mrs. Lacy was the eldest daughter of the late eminent divine, Dr. Benjamin Rice of Princeton, N. J. She was born in Virginia, and was in the sixty-first year of her age. As soon as her death was known here the exercises at Peace Institute were suspended. She had long been an honored and important member of the corps of teachers of that school."

The remains were brought to Raleigh for interment.

We are glad to learn that there has been established at the University a college of pharmacy, wherein young men may be trained for the profession of druggist. The recent formation of the N. C. Pharmaceutical Association and their evident purpose to exclude from the profession all unworthy and inexperienced members, have met with hearty approval by intelligent people everywhere. The college of pharmacy at the University is well equipped with teachers, laboratories and apparatus, and persons desiring instruction, both practical and theoretical, will find it to their advantage to address Dr. Harris at Chapel Hill before deciding to go elsewhere.

The Presbyterian says:

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has decided that a "purely public charity," within the meaning of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, may be one in which the designated beneficiaries are to be all of one particular religious faith, provided that the persons to be benefited are indefinite within the specified class. The fact that the beneficiaries were to be of a particular religious faith did not make the institution any less a "purely public charity." This relieves some charitable institutions from taxation that were threatened by some decisions in the lower courts. The "Orphanage," "Widow's Home," &c., are "charities" which come within the scope of this decision.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

NAHALAH, ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

The pastor writes:

TARBORO, N. C., Sept. 16, 1880.

Dear Brother McLaurin: Last Sabbath, Sept. 12th was the second sacramental occasion at the newly organized church of Nahalah. Four united with the church upon a profession of faith in Christ. The number consisting of two gentlemen and their wives. The four were baptized with one other person who had previously united with the church.

There are several others in the community who have professed Christ, who will unite with the church at an early day. At our communion occasion at Rocky Mount three weeks ago, three persons united with that church by letter. These new churches are making a gradual and healthy growth.

We were favored with a visit from Brother Jordan, of Henderson and Rose of Portsmouth, Va., at Nahalah church in August. They preached a number of sermons of interest and power to large and attentive congregations. They left a decided influence, for good in the community. We would enjoy a visit, in this part of our work, from the Editor of the PRESBYTERIAN. Mr. Editor, if you will come to see us we will promise you some new subscribers. H.

[New subscribers always wanted and welcomed. Do not wait for us, but send on the names].

We refer to the "Proceedings" as published on first page for news from Mecklenburg Presbytery.

Correspondents of Rev. H. T. Darnall are requested to note the change of his address from Milton, N. C., to Durham, N. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA ITEMS.

From Rev. A. L. Miller we learn that Mt. Calvary Presbyterian church, in Enoree Presbytery, will be removed from its present location to Walnut Grove, some three miles from the original site.

Landrum City, on the Spartanburg & Asheville Railroad, some twenty miles from Spartanburg C. H., is building up rapidly. Several Presbyterian families reside in and near the town, and they will soon have a Presbyterian chapel erected.

SECOND CHURCH, WILMINGTON, N. C.

On last Sabbath, 19th inst., three members were added to the Second Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C., of which Rev. C. M. Payne is pastor; of these one was received by certificate and two upon profession of faith. Ten members have been added to this church since the spring meeting of Presbytery.

BETHEL CHURCH IN ORANGE.

In a recent issue we had the pleasure of laying before our readers a note from Rev. J. C. Alexander in reference to a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon this church. At the time referred to the meeting was in progress. The following gives further heart-cheering news:

"Mr. Editor: The protracted meeting at Bethel church, of which I wrote you, continued eleven days. It was a precious meeting. The interest was continued to the very last, and there were still signs of promise when, from the force of circumstances, we closed. God's people were greatly revived and there was scarcely, so far as I can learn, one unconverted person in attendance that was not deeply thoughtful about his soul. There were no noisy indications of excitement. The feeling was deep and solemn, but silent. I have never seen such deliberate, business-like thoughtfulness among anxious persons. Some thirty-five professed to experience a change of heart. Among them there was one seventy-five years of age, several heads of families and a number of young men. I believe that every one who came out and asked for special instruction, professed conversion. I hope great good has been done. The Lord be praised for it. The Rev. B. W. Mebane and Rev. W. B. Tidball assisted the pastor, and both rendered valuable service. PASTOR."

FROM TEXAS.

Mr. Editor: I have just returned from Antioch church, in Panola county, where I preached on last Sabbath and on three succeeding nights. Five persons were received into the church; one deacon was elected and ordained, and two children were baptized.

Yours truly, D. A. MCRAE.

San Augustine, Sept. 10, 1880.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

East Hanover: Met at Hebron September 8th. A committee was appointed to consider the report of the Assembly's Committee on the Directory of Worship. Berkeley Springs church presented a call for pastoral services of Licentiate Charles Ghiselin, and the call was retained by Presbytery until a meeting during the session of Synod. Licentiate W. H. Robertson was received from Abingdon Presbytery, and $250 pledged to his support as a domestic missionary.

Abingdon: Met at Rich Valley, September 1st. Rev. J. W. Rogan asked for a dissolution of the pastoral relation with Second church, Bristol, and the church gave reluctant consent. Presbytery requested parties not to press the matter. Arrangements were made to install Rev. W. E. Hill pastor of Newbern church on September 18th. An adjourned meeting was ordered at Marion, November 11th, for ordaining and installing Licentiate D. E. Frierson, if the way be clear.

Savannah (Special Meeting): Met in Savannah, September 6th. Rev. E. C. Gordon was at his request dismissed to Montgomery Presbytery. Mr. Gordon presented his report as chairman of the Committee on Home Missions, and it was accepted. Rev. D. K. McFarland was appointed chairman of the committee.

South Carolina: Met at Cokesbury, S. C., Wednesday evening, Sept. 15th. Opening sermon preached by Rev. J. O. Lindsey, D. D., in the absence of the last moderator, Rev. W. T. Pearson. A pretty fair representation of ministers and elders present. Sessions harmonious. Rev. Dr. Mack presented the claims of Columbia Seminary with encouraging prospects. Rev. E. P. Davis was elected moderator. Next stated meeting at Newberry C. H., on Wednesday before second Sabbath in April. S.

NO RED TAPE.

Several persons have lately inquired how orphans may obtain admission to the Orphan House, at Oxford. Some have written to prominent persons, asking that their influence be used in favor of certain orphans. I wish to give notice that we have room for about thirty more orphans than we now have, and that there is no circumlocution about their admission. If they are between the ages of 8 and 12, sound in body and mind, without estate, and have no rich uncles, the door stands wide open, and transportation will be provided. All good people are requested to send us the names of poor and promising orphans, and we will do our best to help them. But we do not take deserted children. This would encourage bad men to forsake their families. Neither do we receive any children able to pay, nor any who have friends willing to pay for them. Such children can attend other schools. We help those only who have no other reliance. I will thank the papers of the State to circulate the foregoing notice. J. H. MILLS,

Superintendent.

LISTEN.

Who will respond at once to the call of our young brother from far-off Texas?—a call made with the modesty born of innate refinement, pathetic in its very quietness. Richard Burwell is one of our own boys. He is riding on his pony, sometimes as far as 150 miles, to preach under arbors, in school-houses—wherever he can gather a congregation—doing the very mission work to which his mother, of blessed memory, devoted him.

This appeal will reach the eyes of many who are treading paths of usefulness into which they were guided by her who has gone up higher, and by him, the father, whose hallowed presence lingers with us a benediction still. Will not ten, twenty, fifty of them send one dollar each? "So many calls!" Oh, yes, no one knows it better than she who pens these lines. But, my sisters, let us wear our old gloves this winter, or do without for that matter, and send the price of the new ones to Richard Burwell—a tribute to Presbyterianism in the "Lone Star State,"—and with God's blessing another star shall shine there, a star indicating no fleeting political dominion, but signalizing the reign of Him, the King of Peace, the star so sweetly sung by Raleigh's gifted son—

> The star above the manger,
> The star, the star of Bethlehem,

And here is one dollar, the first in answer to my own call. Who comes next?

Money may be sent to R. S. Burwell, Denton, Texas; or to Rev. R. Burwell, Raleigh, N. C. RALEIGH.

ANOTHER MISSIONARY FOR SOOCHOW.

Some months ago a lady in North Alabama placed $500 in the treasury to send another missionary to Soochow. A letter from the Mission Rooms of date of June 17th says: "I have been busily engaged in looking around for some one to reinforce the Soochow Mission, but as yet have found no one that would seem to meet the demands of the case. I met —— at the Assembly and he told me he could get $300 or $400 more to send out a missionary to Soochow."

As only fifteen out of twelve hundred ministers and licentiates are in heathen lands it does not seem that our Church is impoverished by Foreign Missions. There are many brethren recently from the Seminary who turned their thoughts to pagan countries. The experience of a few years in the home pastorate might be of great value in the foreign field. The friends of the Soochow Mission are requested to pray to the Lord of the harvest that He who has provided the silver and the gold would send forth a laborer for this great city which lieth in wickedness, the centre of a mighty plain whose inhabitants are as the sands of the sea for multitude.

"AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE."

Mr. Editor:—In your reference to the Scientific Association which recently held its twenty-ninth annual meeting in Boston, you requested your correspondent to furnish for publication in the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, a paper submitted by him to that body: Perhaps it will serve your purpose as well, and the interest of your general readers better, if, in place of a formal scientific paper, I should send you a running sketch of the meeting itself and some of the science gossip connected therewith.

I may be excused for expressing the regret that only two North Carolinians were present as members at that meeting; for when I tell you something of the rich and varied entertainment it offered, you will see why one must earnestly regret that all his friends could not have been present to partake of the enjoyment.

In the first place, to summarize the conspicuous features of this meeting I will say that it has never been paralleled in the history of the Association. There were 979 registered members present from all parts of the Union, and 594 new members were entered. Two hundred and eight papers were submitted to the various Sections, and Sub-Sections, on Physics, Mathematics, Astronomy, Geology, Biology, Anthropology, Entomology, Chemistry, Microscopy, &c.

Nor was the physical man less amply provided for than the intellectual. The local committee of Boston gave a free lunch to the entire association which was furnished profusely, with the richest delicacies of the sea and land. Many public receptions were given by private citizens accompanied with elegant collations of whatever was best calculated to tempt the appetite. Excursions by land and sea illustrated the princely hospitality of a wealthy and cultivated city, and the telegraph companies also gave free use of their wires to the members.

This Association is national, and strictly non-sectional. It held its annual meeting recently in the city of Nashville, Tenn., and I know of nothing better calculated to break down sectional prejudice, and bridge over the "bloody chasm" than such scientific meetings composed of large-hearted men, of similar tastes and pursuits, who eschew politics; and who from every part of the land congregate into one brotherhood for the united pursuit and diffusion of scientific truth.

Among the scientific novelties, of a popular character, which rendered this meeting conspicuous, may be mentioned the Photophone, the last achievement of Prof. A. Graham Bell of telephone memory. This invention was first made public at this meeting of the Association, and like all that Prof. Bell does is marked by extreme simplicity in its last analysis, though reached through endless details of experimental research. An elementary substance called selenium has long been known to be sensitive to light: Any light, artificial or natural, will affect its power of conducting electricity. The problem, then, before the Professor was to increase the sensitiveness of this substance sufficiently to make it respond to every variation of light falling upon it; and to give this light, at its distant origin, all the modulations of the human voice, so that when the light falls on the selenium it will give a modulated conductivity to the substance. If this selenium thus prepared, be placed in the electric current of a common Bell Telephone receiver, and a beam of light, modulated by the human voice, be thrown upon it, this light will modulate the conductivity of the selenium, and the selenium will modulate the passing current of electricity, and the electricity will, in turn, modulate the vibrations of the telephone disk, and thus reproduce the original sound that modulates the light.

But how was the light to be modulated? Simply thus: It is thrown upon a thin, elastic, plane mirror, and reflected to the distant selenium. Now any word spoken behind this plane mirror causes the mirror to vibrate in unison with the voice, and this causes the reflected light to converge and diverge with each vibration of the mirror and thus its intensity is increased and decreased in exact unison with both the vibrations of the mirror and with the pulses of the voice: By this arrangement all the modulations of the voice behind the mirror, are repeated by the selenium in the telephone circuit at the distant station exactly as it is in Edison's carbon telephone.

A curious side-product of Mr. Bell's investigations on the Photophone, is the discovery that nearly all of our most common substances, when they are cut into their disks, and have an intermitting beam of light thrown upon them, will give out a musical note if the beam intermits with sufficient rapidity. I heard, myself, this note from a piece of hard rubber; and probably everything around us, wood, stone or metal, utters this molecular music in sympathy with the pulses of the sunbeam.

Prof. A. M. Mayer also explained and illustrated another "phone" which he called the topophone, the special object of which is to determine the direction and distance of sounds, and it may also be used, in the most simple way, to investigate and determine the surface of sound waves. But all this, and much more, though beautiful for its simplicity, must be passed over without explanation, and only mentioned as points in the path of scientific progress.

One other thing, unique in its character and new to American scientists, I must not omit. I refer to the celebrated experiments of Mr. Crooks on "Radiant Matter," by which he claims to have established the existence of a fourth state of matter as different from the solid, liquid and gaseous states as these are from each other.

These experiments were never before exhibited in America, and it was an interesting sight to observe the great leaders of science gathering around the experimenter's table, and all gazing into the vacuum tubes and catechising each other with the freedom and simplicity of children as to the precise nature of the results they were witnessing.

It may interest some of your readers, Mr. Editor, to learn that a full set of these instruments for illustrating radiant matter has been secured for the benefit of Davidson College.

You will observe that I have confined myself in these illustrations of the work done at the recent meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, exclusively to the physical section of that body, while this was by no means the most popular section. The rooms occupied by the sections of geology, biology and anthropology attracted much larger crowds, and if time permitted I would like to refer particularly to some papers on the geology of North Carolina by my friend, Prof. Kerr of the State Geological Survey. He was the only other North Carolinian present, and took a prominent part in the geological section.

I will say, in conclusion, that a very delightful feature of the Association was the formal addresses which were delivered every evening before a full meeting of the members, and which were sometimes elaborately illustrated with stereopticon views projected on a large canvass. These addresses sometimes, and the papers read in the biological and geological sections still oftener, had a strong flavor of the evolution doctrine; and the address of Prof. Barker on the "Life Problem" particularly, seemed ambitious to attain the most advanced outpost of the most advanced guard of materialism, and did actually reach what a distinguished Southern professor not inaptly called "advanced nescience," and a Boston editor pronounced to be a "thousand years ahead of the age," which last remark I heard the learned lecturer repeat in private, as if he had not perceived the irony it contained.

Suffice it to say that there can be but little to fear in this direction so long as the Association has among its members such Christian champions as Principal Dawson of Montreal, and such conservative scientists as Professors Hyatt, Gray, Agassiz, and a host of others.

Let us hope that our North Carolina students of science may more generally avail themselves in future of the social, intellectual and scientific advantages offered by the American Association of Scientists. J. R. B.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Observations concerning the Scripture Economy of the Trinity, and the Covenant of Redemption, by Jonathan Edwards. With an Introduction and Appendix by Egbert C. Smith, 1880. Post-paid $1.—Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York.

It has been boldly charged that Jonathan Edwards had radically modified, if he had not recanted his orthodox views about Calvinism, and Trinitarianism; and that the custodians of his numerous unpublished manuscripts persistently and criminally refused to publish his later views. They have been challenged to do this, not only in 1851 by Dr. Bushnell, but this year by Dr. O. W. Holmes, who claims that Mr. Edwards became an old-fashioned Unitarian. This book contains the special manuscript referred to, now a hundred years old. It is published with illustrative notes from other unpublished manuscripts, and edited by Prof. Smith of Andover. Other papers will soon be issued in Bibliotheca Sacra. This interesting tractate will lay to rest the wild charges against Mr. Edwards; for every reader will see how clearly he enforces the teachings of Scripture according to the ancient faith of God's Elect. It is a volume of unusual interest, being fresh matter from the great "Metaphysician of America."

The Grandissimes. A Story of Creole Life. by George W. Cable, author of "Old Creole Days." 1880. Postpaid $1 50. Charles Scribner's Sons. New York.

This story is laid in the time of the cession of Louisiana to the United States by Napoleon, in 1803. We have only had time to dip into it, but the taste has excited our appetite for more. The narratives of Creole life, and their opposition to annexation; and of the deadly feuds prevailing in that mixed Spanish, Tentonic and Gallic society of those early days, with the tragic episode of Bras-Coupe, and the chivalric sacrifice of Honore Grandissime, afford fine scope for the author's analytic and descriptive powers, and enticing food for those who love to look into the face of by-gone days. The book is gotten up in handsome style.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The Presbytery of Central Texas is to meet at Bolton at 11 a. m., on Thursday, October 14.

L. TENNEY, S. C.

Concord Presbytery stands adjourned to meet in Newton, on Thursday, the 30th of Sept., at 7 o'clock p. m. WM. W. PHARR, S. C.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville will hold its 135th session at Shoe Heel (Quelele), Robeson county, N. C., commencing Thursday, October 14th, 1880, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Churches in arrears to the Presbyterial Fund will please forward the amounts due to the treasurer. J. P. MCPHERSON, S. C.

Bethel Presbytery holds its next regular session at Winnsboro, S. C., beginning Wednesday, Oct. 13th, 1880, at 7:30 p. m.

ECLECTICISMS.

LAW MAKERS.

Christian Neighbor:

The aim of law-makers should be wholesome laws, and the aim of the people in elections should be righteous men in office. So far as civil laws accord with the precepts of the New Testament they are wholesome; so far as they antagonize or diverge from those precepts so far are they anti-Christian—mischievous. So far as the ballot-box puts pure and faithful men in office so far is the voice of the people "the voice of God;" so far as the people put wicked men in office so far is such expression a choice the voice of the devil. So far as party spirit antagonizes the entrance of pure and competent men into office so far has the corruption gone; and when all other considerations are subordinated to party interpest then are the leaders of that party corrupt—not worthy of trust.

THE COVER OF THE BOOK IS WHAT COSTS.

Southwestern Presbyterian:

Strange to say, that while the methods of making books have displayed such a wonderful development, there has been no advance at all in the method of preserving books. The art of making them has reached a great degree of perfection. But science has not been able, as yet, to discover a way to bind a book so as to preserve it, which will at all compare with the reduced cost of printing the book. As to the majority of books in common use, the expensive thing about them, is not the book itself, but the cover. We see every day works in pamphlet form selling at twenty cents, which, it bound and covered, would cost a dollar and a half or two dollars. The chief tax on literature is not levied by the publishers, but by the bookbinders. When we think we are paying money for books, in most cases we are mistaken; we are merely paying for covers. We are purchasing covers under the notion that we are buying books.

THE TREE IS KNOWN BY ITS FRUIT.

Raleigh Christian Advocate:

No licenses for the sale of liquor have been granted in Potter county, Pa., since 1860, and this is the net result: The county attorney, at a recent term of the court, stated that he had no indictment to present to the grand jury; the sheriff informed the court that he had no criminals in prison, and the directors of the poor house reported that they had no one to keep at the charge of the county. Read this item to your county commissioners.

THE WAY TO HEALTH.

Exchange:

The only true way to health is that which common sense dictates to man. Live within the bounds of reason. Eat moderately, drink temperately, sleep regularly, avoid excess in anything, and preserve a conscience "void of offence." Some men eat themselves to death, some drink themselves to death, some wear out their lives by indolence and some by overexertion, while not a few sink into the grave under the effects of vicious practices. All the medicines in creation are not worth a cent to a man who is constantly and habitually violating the laws of his own nature. All the medical science in the world cannot save him from a premature grave. With a suicidal course of conduct he is planting the seeds of decay in his own constitution, and accelerating the destruction of his own life.

A PRIEST WANTED.

The Interior:

Wanted immediately, a Christian priest in every Presbyterian family.

We enter some household where family worship should close the day, and we stand awed and humbled. The family altar is in ruins, the altar fires are all dark. No father kneels by the old armchair, no household group get first sweet glimpses of the Crucified. The children are on the streets or worse, and one by one they reach the home they eat and sleep in, exhausted and disgusted by the world's follies. A family altar, a few sacred moments with a yearning Savior: are moral impossibilities.

THE TRUEST CHURCH.

Central Presbyterian:

The truest church will be found where there is the most vivid realization of the person of Christ. When He is forgotten, the form is nothing, and the creed dies. Personal union to Him in the work of regeneration is the great active principle of life in a church, and when something else—be it sacraments, or a ceremonial, or a dead orthodoxy—is substituted for this, the Church becomes a ghastly skeleton without flesh and blood, and from which the soul has fled.

SURE ROAD TO DEATH.

United Presbyterian:

We have heard it said of a certain church that not so much could be expected of it since its members were in the habit of spending their Sabbaths in social visiting. What ever was expected, but little—little good, that is—was realized, for it seemed to wither to the very roots. Even its pastor became a worldling. Its life, which ought to have been vigorous and aggressive sank away into formality and pretence, and though having all the exterior of an establishment strong and useful, it soon exhibited itself as inwardly poor and decrepid. It is always so. The Sabbath is not for dining out but for quiet worship at home, except in so far as it is to be devoted to public religious service. And if a set of Christians give themselves up to social visiting and festivity on the Lord's day, no matter if they do pay the church the compliment of their presence at the hour of worship, they will shrivel into a spiritual nothingness and live as a sad example of loss resulting from their own misdoing.

DOUBTFUL MEANS.

Banner of Holiness:

Untold harm comes to the Church by the use of even questionable measures to raise money for the support of God's work. It creates the impression on the minds of the worldly that the Church is a kind of pauper dependent for its existence on the community that it is a sort of genteel beggar which it is proper and fashionable to support; that it is an object of charity and even of pity and contempt, which is grateful for the tolerance of the people that let it live. The ungodly regard such churches as engaged in seeking money rather than souls, and exalting wealthy members more than poor saints. To stand before the world in this light is humiliating and degrading beyond expression. Such churches ought to be cleansed or closed, or killed! Churches that are doing the Lord's work and are worth supporting, can be supported without the use of questionable means.

EDUCATE CHILDREN RELIGIOUSLY.

Nashville Advocate.

The first consideration is the moral welfare of your child. Let every other interest be subordinated to this. No advantages in other particulars can compensate for failure at this point. All knowledge acquired at the expense of sound opinion and moral purity is a loss and not a gain. It is scarcely needful for us to say that in our opinion the question of morals involves that of religion, and that religion involves dogma. An earnest Christian naturally prefers that his child should be educated under teaching and in the midst of associations in harmony with his own views. A school under decided religious influence is to be preferred to an irreligious one; and all things else being equal, a school of your own denomination to that of another.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Items from the Texas Presbyterian :

We learn that as the result of Bro. Gillespie's camp-meeting in the neighborhood of the Bethel church, there were twelve additions to the church.

Rev. J. H. Zively, evangelist sends to the Texas Presbyterian the following good news from San Marcos, Texas. Preaching continued ten days. Rev. W. C. Kelley assisted Mr. Zively:

The Lord has revived His people. Sinners have been converted. Eight have been added to our branch of the Church, by profession of their faith in Christ—and, among the number, four of my own children—my daughters—my jewels To God be all the praise! Another, a young man, was converted to-night, who will probably join our church. I am sorry to say that the pastor of the church, Rev. W. L. Kennedy, has been sick all the while, and unable to attend the meetings The interest is unabated.

Rev. S. M. Luckett informs the same journal that the congregation of Files Valley church, in Hill county, Texas have erected a large, well built and comfortable house of worship without asking aid from any one at a distance. It will be dedicated as soon as the seats and pulpit are completed and will be free from debt.

The Rock Hill Herald states the health of Rev. James S. White has not been benefitted by his trip to the Springs and that he expects to resign the pastorate of Pleasant Grove church, Chester county, S. C. His physician enjoins rest.

Items from Southern Presbyterian :

Six communicants were recently added to Swan Creek church, in the Presbytery of Columbia, Tenn.—all on profession of their faith.

During a camp-meeting at Lebanon church, Miss., seven communicants were added on profession of their faith, and one by certificate.

Items from the Central Presbyterian :

Rev. A. S. Moffett, whose pastoral relation to the church of Loch Willow was dissolved at the late meeting of Lexington Presbytery, has received a call to take charge of Round Hill church near Winchester, which has been hitherto connected with Loundon Street church.

Rev. F. B. Webb writes to the Central Presbyterian from Union Springs, Ala., on 9th inst: "I am sorry to announce the death of Rev. James A. Wallace. He was stricken down with the third attack of paralysis yesterday evening and died in about two hours. He has been preaching only once a month for the past six or eight months, and filled his appointment last Sabbath, thus laboring until the Master called him up higher."

In connection with this the St. Louis Presbyterian says:—The deceased gentleman had reached a ripe old age after a life of usefulness in the pulpit and with the pen. For a number of years he has been a very acceptable contributor to our columns. He was an older brother of the late excellent Rev. M. J. Wallace, of Arkansas, and Mr. L. C. Wallace, of this city, and father of Rev. W. G. F. Wallace who has charge of the churches in the Presbytery of LaFayette.

Rev. Wm. A. Campbell, of Manchester, who was compelled to desist from labor early in the summer on account of impaired health, has been sojourning with his friends in Rockbridge county, Va., and has, in a great measure, regained his health. He expects to return to his charge in a few weeks.

The Presbyterian church at Ashland, Va., was recently struck by lightning and the roof slightly damaged. The Richmond Dispatch says: "A funeral service was going on at the time, and it is related as a most remarkable coincidence that not a lady in the audience fainted or exhibited the least audible symptom of fear."

Items from Christian Observer :

A church with twenty members has recently been organized in Williamston county, Tenn., and called Bethel. Credit is due to Rev. R. W. Wilson for this result.

On Sabbath, Sept. 5th, a house of worship for the Presbyterians of Carlisle, Ky., was dedicated The attendance was very large. Rev. H. M. Scudder was assisted in the services by Rev. R. Douglass and Rev. J. A. Dickson.

Last Sabbath the Presbyterian church at Carrollton, Ky., extended a unanimous call to the Rev. Ben Helm to become its pastor. The church has been supplied for a few months by Rev. J. Walton Graybill, who gives it up to go on with his studies, preparatory to engaging in the work of Foreign Missions in Mexico.

Rev J. W. Moseley writes: "On Friday, September 3d, I began a meeting at Calvary church, Miss., of which Rev. Mr. Gibert is stated supply. Although it rained almost every day the attendance was good and interest in the Gospel sufficient for us to continue the meeting until Tuesday. We had five additions and I baptized fourteen—twelve infants and two adults. Mr. Gibert has a most interesting field, his church consisting largely of young people."

At Zion church, near Lowryville, Ky., a most interesting meeting began August 26th and ended September 1st. Rev. Messrs. F. L. Leeper and G. A. Trenholm were with them and preached with great power and effect. The Lord visited them with a refreshing shower of divine grace. Their hearts were encouraged by the addition of fifteen to the church. May God continue the work which He has begun there.

Rev. W. E. Caldwell is engaged to supply the churches at Cuero, Concrete and Clinton, DeWitt county, Texas, once a month. He has entered on his labors there. Correspondents will address him at Cuero, DeWitt county, Tex.

The Nelson Record states that Rev. W. Cane has been unanimously called to the pastorate of Big Spring church, in Nelson county, Tenn.

The following postoffice addresses are changed: Rev. A. R. Kennedy from Little Rock to Augusta, Ark.; Rev. M. McN. McKay from Highlands N. C., to Griffin, Ga.

Rev. A. H. Berkley writes to the Southwestern Presbyterian : "On last Sabbath I preached for Brother Flinn at West Point, Miss., and ordained and installed two deacons and three additional elders. The church now has four elders, all of whom are zealous in the cause of Christ. The prospects of this church are more flattering now than at any previous period of its history. Brother Flinn is much beloved by his people, and has gained the confidence of the entire community."

Items from St. Louis Presbyterian :

Rev. Evander McNair's correspondents will note his removal from Mossy Creek, Tenn., to Liberty, Mo.

We grieve to learn that our esteemed brother, Rev. W. N. Dickey, of Ladonia, Texas, has been bereft of his wife. She died on the 2nd inst.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

Rev. John N. C. Grier died on 12th inst. at his home in Chester county, Pa., in his eighty-ninth year. For nearly fifty years he was the pastor of the venerable Presbyterian church of Brandywine Manor. From under his care and culture, says the Presbyterian Journal, came forth many eminent and useful ministers, among them Dr. M. B. Grier, Dr. J. G. Ralston and Dr. R. Happersett.

The Presbyterian says: "Miss Sarah C. Smith, a member of the First Presbyterian church, Elmira, is under appointment to go by the next steamer to Japan as a missionary of the Presbyterian Board."

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

About one-third of the membership of the Cumberland Presbyterian church at Brookline, Mo., have seceded and organized a Congregational Society. Some from other denominations have united with them, and the result is a church numbering about fifty.

The Cumberland Presbyterians organized a church last October at Caney Creek, Chickasaw Nation. At a late meeting eight persons joined the church. Membership now twenty-eight, full-blooded Chickasaw Indians.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

Mr, George A. Jarvis of Brooklin has given $10,000 as an endowment of an annual course of lectures in connection with the General Theological Seminary in New York. The fund is to be known as "The Bishop Paddock Lectureship Fund."—Presbyterian.

The Episcopalians are building a new church at Gaffney City, Spartanburg county, S. C.

METHODIST.

Rev. S. W. Moore, D. D., a native of Stokes county, N. C., and a graduate with distinction of Randolph Macon college, died on 2d inst at Brownsville, Tenn. He was 52 years of age and at the time of his death, was pastor of the First Methodist church of Memphis Tenn.

The membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in St. Louis, numbered 1,351 in 1879—in 1860 it was 1,366.

George I. Seney of New York has again given $75,000 to the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn. In all he has given a quarter of a million of dollars to the institution.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Shortly after midnight on Wednesday morning, September 1, Rev. Dr. Oliver E. Daggett, died in Hartford, Conn. His wife left him reading in his chair, and awaked and found him dead, he having passed away quietly and without premonition.—Presbyterian.

The Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D., LL. D., Professor in Bangor Theological Seminary, Maine, and formerly President of Roberts College, Constantinople, has accepted the Presidency of Middlebury College, Vermont.

DR. PAYNE, in his lecture upon the Foe and Grace, says that Dyspepsia is a great Foe to Grace. It darkens the sky and breaks the hopes of many Christians. They think the trouble is in their hearts, when it is in their stomachs. Thus the stomach influences the feelings to such a degree that it should be more carefully looked after and regulated with the never failing Simmons Liver Regulator, the constant use of which will so improve the feelings as to make the heart happy and the spirits light. It is a well-known fact that food, ill digested, but imperfectly nourishes the system, as it is only partially assimilated by the blood. Sufferers with Dyspepsia, whose circulation is impoverished and nerves weakened, experience a rapid and decided improvement in their physical and mental condition by the use of Simmons Liver Regulator. Try it, and you will be astonished at the good results.

During their absence the tramp sent the little boy out and forthwith proceeded to ransack the premises, securing two watches and a small amount of money. Upon Mr. Ludlum's return the robbery was shortly discovered and pursuit given the thief. In the meantime the track hounds of Col. Maxwell were sent for, and in charge of Mr. Louis Perdue, the trail was soon struck and chase ensued, extending as far as Pineville, where the Frenchman was overtaken, some half mile ahead of the dogs, and arrested by persons there, who had been apprised of the robbery. The thieving tramp was brought back to this city last night and lodged in jail.—Charlotte Press.

A WIFE'S POWER.

A good wife is to a man wisdom, strength and courage; a bad one is confusion, weakness and despair. No condition is hopeless to a man where the wife possesses firmness, decision and economy. There is no outward propriety which can counteract indolence, extravagance and folly at home. No spirit can endure bad influence. Man is strong, but his heart is not adamant. He needs a tranquil mind; and especially if he is an intelligent man, with a whole head, he needs its moral force in the conflict of life. To recover his composure home must be a place of peace and comfort. There his soul renews its strength, and goes forth with renewed vigor to encounter the labor and troubles of life. But if at home he finds no rest, and is there met with bad temper, jealousy and gloom, or assailed with complaints and censure, hope vanishes, and he sinks into despair.

THE VALUE OF CHANGE OF SCENE.

To the majority of us life is most frightfully monotonous. A perpetual round of duties has a depressing effect both on the body and mind. It wearies us day by day to see the same faces, view the same things, hear the same voices, smell the same odours, listen to and talk the same platitudes. After long experience at home we know exactly how the tea will taste, how the sirloin of beef is likely to be served up, what probability there is of the mutton being tough or the steak under-done. We know, too, exactly what the wife will say when we come home, and the exact tone in which she will say it. When people live together day after day, month after month, and year after year, they find it very difficult to find subjects for profitable conversation. This monotony can best be combatted by change of air; for with this comes variation of scene! with that arrives change of thought; and with that, again, start up new trains of ideas and expansion of mind. To go for change of air is, or ought to be, an expedition in quest of information, and a search for something new. From it one returns with a fresh fund of anecdotes, a new collection of stories, a fuller repertoire of experiences, and an additional store of illustrations, which for months to come serve to brighten the dull realities of life. It is obvious that if the main object of change of air is to get over the results of monotony, Paterfamilias should not always travel with his wife and family.—Scottish-American Journal.

In Reidsville, where he had gone to attend the sessions of Orange Presbytery, on the 7th of September, 1880, Mr. WILLIAM J. WALKER.

As ruling elder in the Cross-Roads church, he was very zealous and faithful in the duties of that office. He loved his Church, was industrious and successful in business, a blameless and good citizen, a kind and generous neighbor, an affectionate husband and brother, a constant and sympathizing friend.

In early life he connected himself with the church, and feeling that God had a work for him to do, he exerted himself to prepare for the Gospel ministry, but feeble health arrested his collegiate course and compelled him to abandon the profession to which he had devoted himself.

He leaves a wife and child, parents and many relatives and friends to mourn his death. The pastor, the session and the church mourn with them. God will be the husband of the widow and the father of the fatherless. PASTOR.

On Wednesday, the 8th inst., Mr. CORNELIUS McMILLAN, an old and highly respected citizen of Duplin, in the 77th year of his age.

The deceased was a man of unbounded hospitality, and of him it may be truly said, he fed the hungry and took in strangers. Quiet in manners and retiring in disposition, he "let not his left hand know what his right hand did."

A great sufferer for years with the bronchial consumption, he bore his affliction meekly. In his last days he manifested a marked resignation. He talked calmly of his approaching end, and seemed anxious to depart and be at rest. Conscious to the last, he quietly passed away and "came to his grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season." The aged widow and children sorrow not as those who have no hope. He was for fifty years a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Charlotte Female Institute

OPENED ITS SESSION SEPTEMBER 8TH with a greater number of pupils than ever before. This great increase of its patronage, both in numbers and area, is a testimony of its continued excellence.

No other institute in the South offers greater advantages in any of these respects:

1. Well-furnished, comfortable rooms, and good fare.
2. Healthiness of locality and provision for the sick by an infirmary.
3 High grade and thoroughness of instruction by the same accomplished and experienced teachers who have given the School an unprecedented reputation in this respect.
4. No other institute south of the Potomac can show such testimonials as this from the professors and teachers in the South.
5. The departments of Art and Music are equal to those of any other institute in the South.
6. No other School can show such rapid and substantial increase of patronage.
7. An elaborate Chemical and Philosophical Apparatus in constant use in the class-room of Natural Sciences.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Things in the Bottom Drawer.

There are whips and tops and pieces of strings,
There are shoes which no little feet wear,
There are bits of ribbon and broken rings,
And tresses of golden hair,
There are little dresses folded away
Out of the light of the sunny day.

There are dainty jackets that never are worn,
There are toys and models of ships,
There are books and pictures all faded and torn,
And marked by the finger tips
Of dimpled hands that have fallen to dust,
Yet I strive to think that the Lord is just.

But a feeling of bitterness fills my soul
Sometimes when I try to pray,
That the reaper has spared so many flowers
And taken mine away,
And I almost doubt if the Lord can know
That a mother's heart can love them so.

Then I think of the many weary ones
Who are waiting and watching to-night,
For the slow return of faltering feet
That have strayed from the paths of right;
Who have darkened their lives by shame and sin,
Whom the snares of the tempter have gathered in.

They wander far in distant climes,
They perish by fire and flood;
And their hands are black with the direst crimes,
That kindled the wrath of God.
Yet a mother's song has soothed them to rest;
She hath lulled them to slumber upon her breast.

And then I think of my children three,
My babes that never grow old.
And know they are waiting and watching for me
In the city whose streets are gold.
Safe, safe from the cares of the weary years,
From sorrow and sin and war,
And I thank God with falling tears
For the things in the bottom drawer.

Sailor Jack's Story.

It's twenty years and more, d'ye see, since the story happened, but the entire business is as clearly scored on the log-book of my memory as though it was yesterday. The good ship Hector and Captain Anerley for skipper, was as fine a man o' war as could be found in the navy. She was a tremendous big vessel, and carried 64 guns, but was as easy to handle as a lady's fan, and when forging through the waters, she made her sixteen knots an hour, and with so little heeling and yawing that you might have played a game of billiards on her upper deck. But that's neither here nor there, as the boy said when the bubble burst. Well, the Hector was stationed in the Mediterranean and at the time I m telling of, she was anchored off the coast of Africa, near the port of Ceuta. Captain Anerley was a topping sailor and as good a commander as ever wore epaulettes; he was a cool sort of a chap; a bit haughty like, and didn't seem as though any thing could make him show a bit of feeling; he mostly looked so high and mighty, and had so standoffish away with him, that we used to call him "Old Stiffback." But he was upright and downright, all courage from the heel of his boot to the peak of his cap, and all the crew had a solid respect for him, and were proud of him into the bargain.

Well, d'ye see, the captain had a son on board, a fine, sharp, bright-eyed little customer about eight or nine years old. He wasn't old enough to be rated, but he was dressed like a little midshipman an' used to mess with the middies an' share their cabin and their drill. Captain Anerley didn't seem to take any more notice of Master Arthur than of anybody else; we used to think the skipper was too proud to care for him; any way he never showed it. Master Arthur was as active as a squirrel, and as mischevious as a monkey, an' he used to climb about the ship and mount the ladders, and swing from one rope to another as if he was a Barbary monkey born and bred. One day when the sea was as smooth as a millpond, and the sky was as blue as a sailor's jacket, and not a capful of wind was to be had for whistling, the men were sitting and lolling under any shelter they could find for the sun was as hot as a bosun's temper. The middies were having a game of 'setting suppers," as they called it, daring each other to do all sorts of tricks and climb to all sorts of places; now swinging on the mizzen chains, now swarming along the bowsprit, now mounting to the cross-trees; an' that young pickle, Master Arthur, small as he was, was more daring than the rest. At first the men watched their antics, and laughed at their jokes, and then most of 'em left the lads to themselves. By and by, however; oon 'o the youngsters shouted out, "Oh, look at Master Arthur!" There was terror in his tones, and in a minute a hundred eyes were fixed on the little fellow as he mounted the last splice of the mainmast, right away up in the sky, where it was not much thicker than a mop handle, and not so stout as a handspike. It made me dizzy to look at him, not one of us dare utter a word for fear it should startle him, and we expected to see him fall every moment a dead and mangled mummy on the deck. The lad still mounted higher and higher, until at last he stood bolt upright on thn little block which was just big enough for his feet, and looked for all the world like a tailor's button at that dizzy height, while Master Arthur himself looked as small as a little wooden soldier on top of a weathercock. The first mate had a face as white as a sheet, and going on the tips of his toes, as if he was afraid to shake the mast with his steps, he made his way to the Captain's cabin, and told him the dreadful news. The Captain never said a word, but when he came out his face was stern and his mouth set, but his cheeks were deadly white, an' his lips as bloodless as a stone. Standing where he could get a good view of the lad, who was still standing on the narrow ledge with his hands on the point of the mast, the Captain called out, "Arthur!" "Yes, papa," said the boy who was now aware of his danger. "Do you see this pistol?" pointing it directly at him. "Yes papa." "Well, as sure as I live, I'll shoot you if you do not jump overboard. One, two THREE!' In an instant the boy sprang from and dropped like a shot into the sea. Half-a-dozed blue jackets were stripped a twiukling, an' swam to the spot where the daring boy had gone down. No sooner had he risen to the surface than he was borne in triumph to the ship, and when he reached the deck, and stood dripping before his father's stern, white face, thn crew stood breathless wondering what next? The captain stooped and kissed his son; the men set up a ringing cheer as he turned in silence down the gangway. The boy was none the worse for his big jump, but when the captain appeared on deck next morning, we saw that his dark hair was streaked with silver, and then we know what the father had felt when he bade his boy take that desperate leap for life.

The three lads had listened with bated breath to Sailor Jack's exciting story.

"I'll tell you what," said Harry, "that youngster was a plucky Briton."

"Aye," said Frank, "and his father was a plucky Briton, and no mistake. I'll warrant tho hand that held the pistol was as steady as a statue, though his heart was thumping against his ribs with fear."

"What a jump!" said Tom. "I wonder how he felt as he went flying through the air, and then drop twenty fathoms deep into the sea."

"Why," quoth Sailor Jack, "the youngster declared that he was afraid to venture, but he felt so certain that his father would shoot him that he was bound to make the spring. Many a time since then I've thought when thn Grnat Captain sternly orders us into trouble an' distress, He does i' order to make us jump into the deep sea of His wonderful love. I remember talking about it wi' Tom Simpson a messmate o' mine on board the Hector. 'Jack,' says he 'that pistol business looked confounded cruel, but it was a marciful dodge to save the young'un, an' I've a notion that God sends many a gale o' wind to blow great guns an' drive us snugly into port.' 'Aye, aye,' says I, 'but what a pity it is that we are so fond o' getting into mischief, and climbing about into risky places without the Captain's orders.' 'Right you are, messmate,' says he, clapping me on the back, 'an' we'll give 'em a wide berth, an' keep the solid plank o' truth and duty between us and danger.' Poor Tom Simpson, he was a brave fellow an' a good Christian; he was wounded in a brush with some Malay pirates, an' now he's gone aloft where there is no danger, an' no need o' jumping down."

Here Sailor Jack bade the boys good evening, and they thoughtfully bent their steps to Capstan Cabin.—London Christian Globe.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Commercial View of Roses.

A Genoa paper states roses in that part of the world are so abundant that if the prevailing fine weather there continues buyers will not know where to stow their merchandise. To our English minds this idea of storing roses away as merchandise is incongruous. There are several parts of Europe, however, where the rose is not so much a flower as a crop, and when we are told some 300,000 blossoms are ruthlessly destroyed to produce a single ounce of "attar." When it is added that the greatest rose-growing district of Europe for commercial or rather manufacturing purposes, something like 5,000 lbs. of this "attar" is made in a year, with 300,000 roses for every ounce of it, it may be easily understood that in those parts the rose does not commend itself to the attention of the natives as an object of beauty at all. Roses collectively are so much merchandise just as with us the delicate and pretty clusters of the hopvine are merely a crop to be plucked and squeezed into "pocket," and sold by the hundredweight or ton. It is a curious fact, by the way, that—according to all authorities on perfumery matters—the rose was thn first flower of which we have any record as having been made to yield its scent in an embodied "extract." "Rose-water" is pronounced to be the earliest of all commercial productions of the kind. This is not, perhaps, so remarkable when we observe how generally among the ancients thn rose was a prime favorite, not apparently so much for its beauty as for the particular property—its delicious perfume. They were habitually employed by the wea thy in a manner that betrayed no recognition of their beauty, as, for instance, when Cleopatra at a feast she gave to Anthony, covered thn floor of h r banqueting hall with the blossoms of roses to the depth of an ell, keeping them down in a compact layer by stretching a net over them. Beds and pillows made of fresh roses were common both with the Romans and Greeks, and some of their monarchs were fond of showering blossoms down on their guests as they sat at table, one of them, as the story goes, pouring them down in such overwhelming profusion as to stifle some of his visitors, who were covered so deep in them that they were unable to extricate themselves. Thern were a good many other purposes to which thn more luxurious of the ancients applied roses. It was made to impart its odor to a wine, and it is related that Heliogabalus, not content with drinking this "rosn wine," was wont to bathe in it, and even went so far as to set up a large public swimming bath filled with this costly fluid. It would, of course, be a great mistake to imagine that because the ancients put their roses to these utilitarian purposes they were indifferent to their beauty. The rose was with them, just as it is with us, the queen of flowers; and they showed their appreciation of it by decking the brows of their brides, their heroes and their statues with wreaths of them. One use of thn rose by the Greeks has, in a very curious way, made its mark on our own times. Thn flower was the emblem of secrecy with them, and it was their custom to suspend it over the guest table as a reminder that conversation passing there was not to be repeated abroad. Hence, it is said, we have derived our practice of saying that a thing was said or done sub rosa.

Lunching with Gladstone.

A few hours spent in the homo and company of Mr. Gladstone was a glimpse of English life not to be forgotten. The invitation to a lunch at Hawarden Castle, which our little party of Americans had so gladly acceptad, suggested three in the afternoon as an hour when Mr. Gladstone's carriage could be in waiting for us at the little railway station, sitting by itself in the meadows, two or three miles from the castle. Turning from the highway into the magnificent park in which the castle stands we drove for about a mile along its perfect road, overhung with grand old trees, through which we caught charming pictures of vale and slope studded here and thern with the finest oaks and beeches. Approaching the castle, a large structure overhung with ivy and tipped with turrets and battlments in Tudor style, heavy oaken doors swung open to admit us to the court. A bevy of dogs—hound, collie, mastiff and I know not what other breeds—studied the visitors with dignified interest as they alighted at the door, and footmen showed the way inside. Wrappings laid off, we were ushered into what seemed to me, in Yankee term, the family sitting-room, where we found Mrs. Gladstone and other members of the family, including one of her sons, the Rev. Stephen Gladstone, who is the earnest and esteemed rector of Hawarden parish.

The room was richly but not showily furnished, the two features which most quickly attracted the visitor's eye being, perhaps, the glistening candelabra holding scores of wax tapers, which did servien instead of gas, as in most English mansions, and the full book cases that had taken possession of all otherwise unoccupied space upon the walls, even to the back of the swinging doors which opened into the dining-room, to which they hung like barnacles. One door, through which the grand old commoner—surely the greatest commoner of his generation, to say no more—by-and-by came in to greet us, opened into the library, the shop in which so much literary work has been done. Here again book-cases ruled supreme upon the walls, while up and down the long, wide room were table-topped cases filled with the scholar's tools and treasures. One table was an odd exception to the rest, for on it lay nearly a dozen axes of varying English and American patterns. Mr. Gladstone's penchant for wood chopping is well known, and this table was to him something what stables and kennels are to many Englishmen. We recalled the familiar story told of him to the effect that he never lost but one night's sleep in his public life, and that was because of his anxiety lest a high wind should blow down a tree—which he had partly felled the previous day—before he should have the pleasure of finishing his task. He laughingly confessed to its substantial correctness. He dwelt with the interest of a connoisseur on the merits and defects of the various patterns in his kit of axes, and showed us his favorite—a bit of Yankee make, with a waxed end wound around the cracked helve!

If my feminine reader asks what we had for lunch, I have to plead that I could hardly have told an hour afterward. I only know that the company was broken up into little groups at round tables; that Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone would not take their own seats until they had helped to servn nvery guest; and that thence-forward thn wide-ranging, delightful conversation of thn great scholar and statesman was more than meat and drink to all who sat near him. None of thn pictures I have seen of Mr. Gladstone do justice to the genial spirit that plays over his face at such a time, no picture could do justice to a certain light and depth in his eyes, which I shall always remember as the finest thing in his fine face.—Good Company.

Growing Pot-Plants.

There are many who would like to grow plants for the love of them that have not had opportunity to learn, and therefore do not know how to begin. All such I would like to help, if I could, by telling in as plain language as I can just how to work now, even though it is a little late, to have nice plants next winter. If you expect them to flower then you must give them a chance to prepare now. They lay up not money, but roots, for the winter. July is a good month to start new plants for the winter; but in many parts of the country the heat and drought have been so severe that it has not been favorable this year. I take it for granted that you want to know how to grow a plant from a slip, and not buy it already started from the florist. There is more pleasure in growing a plant yourself.

So, although it is a little late in the season, we will suppose you have a handful of slips—tonale geranium, rose geranium, abutilon, petunias and heliotrope.

Some people think anything is a slip, whether it is one or six inches long. The best slips are taken from the ends of the young growing branches. With your thumb and finger snap them off about two inches long. Take off the lower leaves and buds, if there are any, and your slip is ready. Prepare some garden loam and sand, equal parts; take three-inch pots (if they are new soak them in water to fill up the pores, else they will absorb all the moisture from the earth and leave your slips high and dry); put a piece of broken pot or chip to cover the hole in the bottom of the pot; fill up with the soil; water and put the slips around the edge of the pot as thick as you can, pressing the soil against each one. When it is done put the pots under a shrub on the ground, or where they will be shaded out of doors. Watch, and water if the soil gets dry. In ten days they will probably be rooted. Fill some thumb pots, smallest size, in the same way as for the slips; take out each plant (it has roots and is a plant now) and put it in one of the thn thumb pots, spread out the roots and fill in the soil. Give it a rap on something hard to settle it; water and shade for a day or two, then put the pots on a board out of doors, where there they will have the morning sun and be shaded at mid-day, and they must not be left out if the nights grow cold. Now you have fairly started your plants.

In the course of two or three weeks turn them out of the pots carefully; if the ball of earth is filled with roots repot into three-inch pots, and when these are filled with roots, into five-inch, where they will grow all winter. The last time they are potted mix some well decayed manure with your soil, and leaf-mold from the woods if you can get it. Perhaps you will say, "Why not put thn slips into five-inch pots at once, and save trouble?" Well, it would be something like putting your baby Charley into trousers because you expected some years hence he would don the masculine habiliments. To speak plainer, your slip would die if put into the large pot at once, because you would water it when dry; there would be only a tiny root to absorb the water, the rest would go into the soil; before your plant filled the pot with roots the soil would be sour and your plant would die. When your plants are about four inches high nip the tops to make them throw out branches, and when these have grown a little nip again. Then you will have nice stocky plants that will be ready to bloom as soon as you will let them. If any buds appear during this process harden your heart and nip them. You don't want flowers now.

When thn nights begin to grow cool bring in your plants, but not into your sitting room. Put them in a room without fire. If you have a south attic window you have just thn right place; open the window in thn middle of the day and close beforn it is cold. When you bring them into thn sitting room give them all the air you can. Your heliotrope will want the hottest place, and thn more sun and water you give it the better it will like it. Geraniums and abutilons like to be cool. I hope I have said something to encourage those who have not had success beforn to try again; and those who have not tried before to now begin.—Christian Union.

Buy Native Cows.

It will not pay to buy costly cows for dairy purposes; that is as a business. If a person, for his own personal gratification, will ignore the earning of interest on his investment, he may be paid in that way for the keeping of a herd of choice pure-bred Jerseys or Ayrshires, but he will not get one cent more for the milk or butter in the market. A grocer won't give a cent for the pedigree of the cows which produce the butter he buys. Quality is all he wants, and common cows, well selected, will yield just as good butter as any pure-bred cows, and as much on the average. Therefore, for profit, one should pick up a herd of the best native cows he can find at the common market price; feed thnm well and manage his business in the best manner, and he will have the same income as he could get from the same number of cows that would cost him five times as much.—Am. Dairyman.

STATE NEWS.

Hog cholera is prevailing in some sections of Northampton, Hertford and Bertie counties.

— Cotton is greatly damaged by rust, and the yield will fall far short of what was at one time anticipated.—Jackson Reporter.

The Wilmington Star compares the prices of naval stores last year with those at present thus: On September 15th, 1879, the price of spirits turpentine was 24½ cents per gallon; rosin 92½ cents to 97½ cents per barrel for strained and good strained; tar 90 cents per barrel and crude turpentine $1 60 per barrel. On the same day in 1880 the prices ruled as follows: Spirits turpentine 34 cents per gallon; rosin $1 10 to $1 15 per barrel; tar $1 90 per barrel and crude turpentine $2 10 per bbl. Thn gain is as follows, as compared with the prices one year ago: On spirits turpentine 9½ cents per gallon, equal to $4 50 per barrel; on tar $1 10 per barrel; on crude turpentine 40 cents per barrel.

The New York and North Carolina Smelting Comnay, which has just erected at heavy expense, larger reduction and smelting works in Charlotte, announce in another column that they are ready for the purchasn of gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc ores, at assay value, less their charges.—Charlotte Observer.

Our enterprising young townsman, Mr. George Bishop, shipped on yesterday 4,000 cedar bucket staves. This is the second large shipment of bucket staves Mr. Bishop has made recently.—Newbern Nut Shell.

Mr. Wm. J. Walker, the visiting elder from Cross Roads church in Alamance to Presbytery, died at the residence of Mr. Robert Harris, where he was a guest, last Tuesday evening. He was not well when he came here and was taken with something like a congestive chill on Friday morning in church. He was 33 years of age.—Reidsville Times.

Col. Thomas B. Long of the Postoffice Department arrested in Morganton, on September 13th, William McGarland, for robbing the postoffice at this place on the 26th of August last.—Raleigh News and Observer.

D. G. Worth, Esq., and Col. John D. Taylor, a majority of the commission appointed to ascertain the compensation which should be made by thn American Union Telegraph Company to the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad Company for right of way, have fixed the amount at $10,800. The amount accorded to thn Wil., Col. & Augusta Railroad Company is $4,666 66. Mr. M. Cronly dissented.

Mr. Daniel Asbury is applying for a patent upon his brick-drying invention, and now his son, Mr. Eugene Asbury, comes to the front with an improved stove, for which a patent will be applied for.—Charlotte Southern Home.

Mr. E. L. Pell, who has taken charge of the Southern Home, is a son of Rev. W. E. Pell, at one time editor of the Raleigh Sentinel. We wish him all success.

A freight arrangement has been made between leading railroad lines in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia, by which, as we learn from the Star, rates, both standard and special, will be as low between Greensboro and points east to Wilmington as to Richmond, and in the territory of the Greenville & Columbia and Charlotte, Columbia & Augusta railroads, rates to or from Wilmington are to be the same as between Charleston and the same points.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

LETTER FROM SIAM.

FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

SIAM, June 23, 1880.

Dear Friends: I believe my last letter to you was written from Hong Kong, whither I had gone with my family, who were on their way to the United States. In that letter you were told of the illness of Mrs. McGilvary, which necessitated the change. She has, however, sufficiently improved to allow my return to my work. So committing each other to the care of our Heaveuly Guide, we separated on the 4th of February, she and the children to go in the City of Tokio to San Francisco, while I returned in the steamer to Bangkok. My last date from her reported their safe arrival in California. By this time we presume they are in North Carolina. Cornelia and Allie are ready to enter Mrs. Grant's school in Statesville, where their oldest sister found such a delightful home and such good training. To all the friends who have shown so much kindness to our children we owe a debt of gratitude that we can never repay. Their happy homes, and cheerful letters, and good reports can be appreciated only in part by considering how much sadness the reverse would have caused us. All we can say or do is to pray that God's richest blessing may rest on those who have been kind to them for our Master's sake. Mrs. McGilvary will seek a home for the present probably as near to the children as possible, while our last letter has greatly relieved us of anxiety for her health, which was much improved. My own health did not demand the change, while the weakness of the mission forces in stations already occupied, and the crying demand in scores of unoccupied fields, as well as the chronic pressure on the mission funds, seemed to say, "Your time is not yet; work while you have strength, as your working days at longest will not be long; the night cometh when no man can work."

I had a delightful trip down to Bangkok with the monsoon. Stopping there a few days I proceeded up the river in our Chiengmai boat, which had waited for me. The first week seemed very lonesome, accompanied with a feeling of sadness, as I passed the places where we had stopped before and where the children had played. But such feelings were not to be indulged. We had chosen the separation from a sense of duty. My obligation to my family, as well as to my work, called for it. By staying myself on His arm, to Whom, I trust, all my young friends will learn to go in trouble, and becoming filled with other plans and thoughts, the sadness gave place to positive pleasure, which I have enjoyed in my work to an unusual degree. Bro. Mebane, of sainted memory, of Orange Presbytery, used to say he never made a self-denial for his Master's cause in which he was not greatly blessed. My visions were full of touring and evangelistic work Since the breaking up of my family had become evident it has appeared a favorable time for engaging in other pioneer work. It had been my plan, as soon as possible after reaching Chiengmai, to go over to the Loos towns to the east, and, by spending a few months in each, try and lay the foundation of a permanent station as soon as we command the laborers. True, our force at Chiengmai is still small, but then it is large, compared with what it once was. For four years since its establishment there had been only one family. Then, too, there was hardly a church. Now, besides a minister, there is a physician and his family and two young lady teachers, and a large working church of over fifty members. The time had come to think of other departures, and other centres. And had not Providence pointed to me as the one to start? I confess, too, all my life to having had a pleasure, like the Apostle, in not building on another's foundation, or even on my own after it was occupied with others to carry it on. Union and Carthage, and every man and woman in North Carolina, will hear the Gospel, whether I preach it to them or not. So I argued when a young man, and that thought sent me to Siam, and I have had no cause to regret my course. While the places left have been supplied with those who have more than filled my place, my experience in pioneering has given me an advantage that all do not possess. So much for plans, and now you will see how they have been modified: In twenty-nine days we reached Rahang, about half way, in time, to Chiengmai. The rains had already set in, and the season for touring was over. This place is most as large as the city proper of Chiengmai, though unlike Chiengmai, as its population as a trading town is confined to the city. Originally Loos, it has now a mixed population, one half Loos and the rest Siamese and Chinese and other races. On our way down it had seemed to grow in importance since I had seen it before, and I had thought it a possibility to stop here on my way back. In leaving it behind, and forming stations further in the interior, we are like an invading army which has left an important position unoccupied in its rear. It seemed probable that my labor would avail more here for the cause during the season than by spending it in Chiengmai, where I would be only one of many. I hope, too, it was pardonable selfishness, under the circumstances, if the facility of communicating with an invalid family weighed somewhat on the subject. Another selfish motive was probably not selfish, for one form of selfishness often rises to the scale of duty. There was the hope that by making friends in Rahang we might, in a few months, improve our mail facilities, the one great need of our Loos mission. The direct intercourse between Bangkok and Chiengmai is very limited, while that between each of those places and Rahang is frequent. This is the great depot where most of the trade changes hands. If we can make the connecting link a great point will be gained. But, to make a long story short, I did stop here, and propose to remain here seven months. A lot was found that could be rented and a bamboo house was put up at a moderate cost, one end of which serves for my sanctum and the other for our sanctuary, where we conduct worship. On the eighth day after the first bamboo was cut we entered and raised our standard, "Jehovah Nissi, Jehovah our Banner."

Seven months will bring us to the end of the rains, the first of November, as long as one can plan for at a time. What will be our next move, or when, we leave to the moving pillar of cloud and fire to direct. Do you know that, if we could see it, God's guiding pillar is just as real to His people now as it was to the wandering Israelites? How often are we taught the folly of making plans, because God's plans are different and better, and we are always taught the wisdom of the prayer, "Guide me, guide us, O, thou Great Jehovah!" In this prayer now we ask all our friends to join.

So far we have had every reason to be encouraged. Although Rahang has had a hard name as a wicked and lawless place, we have thus far received no little kindness from our neighbors. As a border town it is often the resort of ruffians, and I had myself once witnessed a regular street row where several opposing crowds were vigorously whirling bricks and stones at each other. The town seems now to be very quiet and better governed.

We have been collecting a small congregation of attendants on our Sabbath services, and some of them are evidently worshipers with us of the one great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. It shows how open Siam is to the Gospel when one man may settle alone in the worst and most lawless of its towns with perfect safety to himself and great encouragement in his work. Where are the young men who are preparing to enter all these fields white with the harvest? That, my young friends, is the one question for you to ask.

On the first Sabbath of the month we celebrated the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, for the first time in this place. We had one applicant for admission to the church, though we had only been here two months. He was advised to wait another month, when, from present prospects, he will be received. I must leave a short notice of him and some other cases and subjects of interest to another letter. Yours, truly, D. McG.

PROCEEDINGS OF ELDER'S AND DEACON'S CONVENTION.

TUESDAY, Aug. 3d, 1880, 10 A. M.

The seventh annual convention of the Elders and Deacons of Mecklenburg Presbytery, met according to adjournment in Mallard Creek Presbyterian church.

The convention was called to order by John A. Young, permanent clerk, and opened with devotional exercises conducted by Elder R. A. McNeely.

On motion, a committee of three, consisting of Elders F. Scarr, and J. R. Hutchison, and Deacon L. Query was appointed to nominate officers for the convention. The committee retired and after a short interval returned and reported Elders J. P. Alexander, for President; C. H. Wolfe and R. R. King, for Vice-President and J. W. Moore for assistant secretary. The recommendation of the committee having been adopted by vote of the convention, the officers elect entered upon the discharge of their respective duties.

On motion the roll of churches was called, when representatives responded from nine churches, who with the congregation filled the large church with an attentive audience.

The minutes of the last convention were read for information.

The following subjects were introduced for consideration and discussion.

1. The best manner of increasing the spirituality of Church Members.

Introduced by Elders. J. P. Alexander and J. N. Hanna.

2. The duty of the Church in regard to the Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. G. Hanna and Deacon G. E. Wilson.

3. The relative position of the Sunday school to the Church and family. Elders J. S l. Reid and F. Scarr.

4. What relation does the Church sustain to the children of its members? Elders T. B. Price and J. W. Reid.

5. The study of the standards of the Church, the duty of all church officers. Elders A. G. Neal and H. K. Reid.

6. The duty of the Church in regard to Foreign Missions. Elders A. McNeely and J. R. Kincaid.

7. Bible Society. Elders J. A. Young and J. W. Moore.

8. The necessity of greater attention to the cultivation of singing in the services of the Sanctuary. Mr. J. A. Collins.

On motion, a committee of three, consisting of H. M. Dixon, A. H. DeArmond and John Kirk was appointed to arrange a programme for the proceedings of the convention.

On motion, the convention took recess until 1 o'clock p. m.

Convention assembled at 1 o'clock p. m. and opened with devotional exercises conducted by the president.

The committee to arrange a programme submitted the following report, viz:

The convention to assemble at 9½ o'clock a. m., and take recess from 12 m. to 1 p. m.; to adjourn for the day at 4 p. m.; each meeting to be opened with devotional exercises, and daily sessions to close with same. Report adopted.

On motion, ministers of the Gospel and officers of other churches present were invited to sit as corresponding members.

The order of the day being subject No. 6, of programme of Convention of 1879, viz:

"Methods of raising funds for church enterprises, and the duties of Christians in relation thereto," was taken up and discussed by Deacons M. W. Caldwell, D. F. Dixon and J. T. Swann and Elder J. W. Moore; the discussion elicited many important facts in regard to the different modes pursued by different congregations in this matter, which it is hoped will be felt in a general benefit. No specific action was taken upon it.

On motion, subject No. 8, was taken up; the discussion was opened by Deacon J. S. Collins, who was followed by Deacon T. P. Pyron, and Elders T. B. Price and others. The discussion was listened to with much attention, and showed a general spirit of improvement in this part of church worship existing among the delegates.

Subject No. 7, was presented by the president, Elder J. P. Alexander, in an animated address, claiming that the subject comprised the whole duty of the Christian. By request Rev. J. G. McLaughlin, A. R. P., Rev. G. D. Parks and Rev. W. W. Pharr, Prs., each delivered addresses that were full of instruction, and highly appreciated by the convention.

On motion, convention adjourned until 9½ o'clock to-morrow a. m. Closed with devotional exercises.

August 4th 9½ o'clock A. M.

Convention assembled as per adjournment. Session opened with devotional exercises conducted by Elder T. B. Price.

The president announced the convention ready to proceed with its duties.

Subject No. 2, of programme of convention of 1879 being the special order for this hour, and subject No. 5, of above programme, being upon the same and kindred subjects, were made the special order for 10 o'clock a. m., of second day of next convention.

Subject No. 2, was taken up and discussed by Mr. George B. Hannah, president of the Young Men's Christian Association of Charlotte, by Elders F. Scarr and B. H. Garrison and by request Rev. W. W. Pharr. The following resolutions was introduced, and unanimously passed, viz:

Resolved, That this convention consider the Young Men's Christian Association as calculated to do much good by exercising a moral influence over its members, in throwing around them a protection against the multitude of temptations to which they are exposed, and as tending eventually to bring them into the folds of the Church, and therefore commend it to the favorable consideration of all Christians, and as far as practicable, to the fostering care of the Church.

Subject No. 3, was introduced by Elder F. Scarr, who had been appointed to that duty, and presented in a clear and forcible manner, evincing much experience in Sabbath School work, and much thought upon this subject. The discussion was participated in by Elders McNeely, Price, King and McLintock. The discussion upon this subject seemed to awaken a deep interest among the members of the convention and the congregation, and could not fail to produce much reflection by those present upon the discharge of their individual duties as Christians and parents.

On motion, convention took recess for one hour.

Convention reassembled at 1 o'clock p. m., and opened with devotional exercises by C. H. Wolfe.

On motion, the following members were appointed an executive committee, to transact the business of the convention with the next annual meeting, viz: Elders F. Scarr, J. R. Hutchison and Deacon F. S. Neal.

On motion, the following members were appointed a committee on programme and subjects for next annual convention, viz: Elders T. B. Price and J. H. McLintock, and Deacon J. C. Burroughs.

Elder T. B. Price having been appointed to that duty, introduced subject No. 4, by an address marked with evidences of much reflection, and a due sense of responsibility. He arraigned Christians for a neglect of a duty towards the children of the Church, for which they were inevitably answerable, and pressed his point in a manner that produced a deep impression upon his hearers; on closing he offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted, viz:

Resolved, That the children of the members of Christ's Church having been claimed by God under the old and new Gospel dispensations, the Church is derelict in duty when it fails to claim them in His name, and to exert its influence to bring them within the folds of the Redeemer.

Subject No. 6, being introduced was the subject of a general discussion and one in which extensive interest was manifested throughout the convention. The duty of the Church to extend aid to the full extent of its ability in this great work being universally conceded.

The remaining subject No 7, was then introduced by Elder John A. Young, president of Mecklenburg Bible Society, who presented its claims upon the Church, as the great Christian enterprise of the nineteenth century, in which all Christian denominations unite, and urged that it was the duty of the Church to adopt it, and extend to it, its liberal support as the great Christian work based upon the last command, given us by our Redeemer, after completing His mission upon the earth.

The hour of final adjournment having arrived, a resolution expressing the thanks of the convention to the congregation of Mallard Creek for their marked kindness and generous hospitality was introduced and passed. The resolution was responded to by the pastor Rev. W. W. Pharr, who assured the convention that their session and visit to his people had been both pleasing and profitable to them and to himself. He urged the convention not to grow slack in their good work, and especially to direct their efforts to induce the churches of the Presbytery to send delegates to the conventions.

The convention having determined by vote to accept the invitation sent to it by Rev. R. A. Miller, to hold its next annual session in his church in Monroe, on motion voted to adjourn to meet in the said Presbyterian church, on the first Tuesday in August 1881, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Session closed with devotional exercises conducted by the president.

J. P. ALEXANDER, President.

JOHN A. YOUNG, J. W. MOORE, } Secretaries.

Forwarded by order of the convention to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, with the request to the Editor to publish it.

GOOD-NIGHT.

EDNA DEAN PROCTOR.

Now fades the sun, and one by one
The stars gleam soft and fair;
No robin sings, no swallow wings
Its eager flight in air,
But only silent dews distil,
To fall in fairy rain,
And only whispering breezes thrill
The hush of grove and plain.

The lilly slumbers on the lake,
Where not a ripple stirs;
The hair lies crouched amid the brake,
The partridge 'neath the firs,
And down the roses droop
Their crimson and their snow,
And poppies hide their scarlet pride,
And wait the hour to blow.

Good-night! good-night! the moon will light
The east before the dawn,
And stars arise to gem the skies
Where these have journeyed on,
Good-night! and sweetest dreams be thine
Through all their shining way,
Till darkness goes, and bird and rose
With rapture greet the day.

THE LOSS OF LITTLE CHILDREN.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

It is only to the unthinking that the loss of a little child appears to be a small thing. There are about it, indeed, elements of sorrow which do not enter into the deaths of those who are older. The babe's whole life is before it. Its very helplessness and dependence have endeared it to its parents and household. Father and mother both have seen visions and dreamed dreams, in which its future has played a very large part. Long before other eyes have perceived them, the dawning indications of its powers have arrested their attention and charmed their hearts. The mother brooding over her treasure, as only a mother can, has imagined beautiful possibilities before and within it. From Eve onward, every mother in the race has felt a thrill of joy in holding to her breast her first-born son. "I have gotten a man from the Lord." is the enraptured cry of her nature. And every Christian mother feels an equal gladness when she looks into the sweet face of her infant daughter, and wonders what mystic endowment shall come to the little one, as the birthright of her womanhood. Every week, every month, every year, in the life of infancy, is a stepping-stone, a distinct progression; and the household knows, whether others do or not, how sweet is the babe of twelve months, how lovely the child of two years, and how wonderful the little questioner and prattler of three. Father works hard and endures fatigue and trouble without a murmur, and he is repaid when dimpled arms clasp his neck at nightfall. Mother loses sleep, grows wan and pale, and all but gives her own life over again for her child's, during the perilous "second summer," thoroughly blessed and happy if at last the lillies of pain yield to the roses of health.

I have seen many little funerals lately, white ribbons on many bells, small caskets ready for many short graves; and I have sorrowed with the sorrowing, knowing how empty and commonplace the ordinary words of condolence must sound, in ears attuned to listen to the baby's cry, now stilled. Ah! "this old, old-fashioned—death. Yet thank God, all who see it, for that older fashion of immortality."

There, friends, is the comfort. At first, you who have lost dear children can find consolation only in resting on the thought of God's will—that supreme, inflexible, divinely compassionate will, which is as the shadow of a rock in a weary land, as the softness of a pillow under an aching head. As time passes, other comforts may come to you. You may see, even here and now, how much your child was taken from, how gentle were the arms which carried it home so soon, and how wise was the love that lent it, though but for a season. If you never learn to see the reasons of God's withdrawal of your child, leave the matter with him, and do not seek to find out what he has chosen to hide. What thou knowest not now, it may be thou shalt know hereafter. But your experience will differ widely from that common to men and women, if there do not rise hereafter days and crises, when you will be thankful that for one dear child you need have no anxiety, and need suffer no dread. That one is safe from danger, from temptation, from sin, and from grief. The others may go forth, scattering far from the nest as they find out how strong are their wings, and the time may come when the child nearest you, will be the little one laid under the green sod to-day, your little one in heaven.—Christian Weekly.

GET NEARER.

Some people imagine that Sinia is extinct. Certain pulpits seem to be pitched so far away from the sublime mountain that its august peak is no longer visible, and its righteous thunders against sin are no longer audible. With this school of rose-water ministers the theology of law is voted obsolete and barbarous; the world is to be tamed and sweetened and sanctified entirely by a theology of love. They preach a one-sided God—all mercy and no justice—with one-half of his glorious attributes put under eclipse. Even sinners are not to be warned, with tears and entreaties, to flee from the wrath to come. They are to be coaxed into holiness by a magical process which makes nothing of repentence, and simply requires a "faith" which costs no more labor than the snap of a finger. This shallow system may produce long rolls of converts, but it does not produce solid, subsoiled Christians.—Dr. Cuyler.

PETTY WORRIES.

What a blessed thing it is that we can forget! To-day's troubles look large, but a week hence they will be forgotten and buried out of sight. Says one writer: If you would keep a book, and daily put down the things that worry you, and see what becomes of them, it would be a benefit to you. You allow a thing to annoy you as you allow a fly to settle on you and plague you; and you lose your temper (or rather get it), for when men are surcharged with temper they are said to have lost it; and you justify yourselves for being thrown off your balance by causes which you do not trace out. But if you could see what it was that threw you off your balance before breakfast, and put it down in a little book, and follow it out, and ascertain what becomes of it, you would see what a fool you were in the matter. The art of forgetting is a blessed art, but the art of overlooking is quite as important. And if we should take time to write down the origin, progress and outcome of a few of our troubles, it would make us so ashamed of the fuss we make over them, that we should be glad to drop such things, and bury them at once in eternal forgetfulness. Life is too short to be worn out in petty worries, frettings, hatred and vexation.

BEING TRUE TO ONE'S SELF.

To the careless thinker, it would seem to be the easiest thing in the world to go through life in a spirit of fidelity to one's own interest's Though it may be hard to conquer self, and to spends one's days in the performance of service to others, it naturally seems a simple matter to look out for one's wants, to follow an individual purpose, and to spend a whole career in the pursuit of purely selfish advantages.

But the self-seeker is the last person in the world to be able to pursue a course of faithful devotion to his own interests. In the first place he starts out in fundamental error concerning the nature of good, and the consequent object to which he is to devote his ambition and his activities. If he calls the getting of money the chief good, he finds that beneath every hoarded dollar there lurks some corresponding evil or deprivation, which counterbalance the pleasure it brings. If purely physical comfort is the good thing sought, and to eat, drink and be merry is the means used for its attainment, the jaded appetite and worn body sooner or later take away that which they once added to his sum of satisfaction. Cold self-seeking in the line of personal advancement brings no brighter reward, and the purely selfish plan—at the opposite extreme—of merely avoiding the duties of the world, so far as is possible, at the end abandons the idle self-seeker to a cruel loneliness and neglect like that to which he has condemned others. The whole moral history of the world has nothing better to promise to him who proposes to live for himself, and not for others, than the awful picture presented, in colors at once cold and burning, in the Book of Ecclesiastes.

Aside from the hollowness and deceptive character of the object sought by the person who determines to make his life a life for himself alone, is to be noted the fact that the selfish man is seldom methodical or constant in his selfishness. Failing to get that which he hoped to find in one thing, he turns to another, and meeting with new disappointment there, he goes on and on, without devotion to anything, and with ever-failing perseverence and courage. There is not, as a rule, even the discipline of a stern mental habit, or of a personal loyalty to an idea, in the career of him who imagines his one constant plan in life to be the reaping for himself of a rich harvest of worldly advantage. Few followers of the arch-fiend possess his absolute and unwavering devotion—as shown in Milton's description of Satan—to a principle of evil. Being certain of ultimate loss, they also lose meanwhile the poor satisfaction of a temporary joy in the feeling that they are at least following faithfully a definite plan of conduct.

There can be but one true fidelity to self, and that is the fidelity of a constant purpose to answer the calls of duty and self-sacrifice. The man with a false ideal of happiness, the man who runs hither and thither in search of new means to gratify his desire for selfish gain, and the man who has a proper standard of living a part of the time only—all these unite in wasting the one earthly life they have to lead, because that life knows nothing of such a true and constant purpose of rectitude as alone can make it worth living, or fruitful in good to any one. Emerson, in his latest essay,—an essay rich in moral truths—thus speaks of the man whose heart does not prompt him to "central and entire action": "The human race are afflicted with a St. Vitus' dance; their fingers and toes, their members, their senses, their talents, are superfluously active, while the torpid heart gives no oracle. When that wakes it will revolutionize the world. Let that speak, and all these rebels will fly to their loyalty. Now every man defeats his own action—professes this but practices the reverse: with one hand rows, and with the other backs water. A man acts not from one motive, but from many shifting fears and short motives; it is as if he were ten or twenty less men than himself, acting at discord with one another, so that the result of most lives is zero. But when he shall act from one motive, and all his faculties play true, it is clear mathematically, is it not, that this will tell in the result as if twenty men had co-operated—will give new senses, new wisdom of its own kind; that is, not more facts, nor new combinations, but divination, or direct intuition of the state of men and things?"—S. S. Times.

GOOD MORNING.

Don't forget to say "good morning!" Say it to your parents, your brothers and sisters, your schoolmates, your teachers—and say it cheerfully and with a smile: it will do you good, and do your friends good. There's a kind of inspiration in every "good morning" heartily spoken, that helps to make hope fresher and work lighter. It seems really to make the morning good, and to be a prophecy of a good day to come after it. And if this be true of the "good morning," it is so also of all kind, heartsome greetings; they cheer the discouraged, rest the tired one, and some how make the wheels of life run more smoothly. Be liberal with them, then, and let no morning pass, however dark and gloomy it may be, that you do not help at least to brighten by your smiles and cheerful words.

READING SEVEN MILES FROM THE LIGHT.

On the evening of July 12th, the Maxim electric light was put in operation on the tower of the Grand Union Hotel, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., with a view to test the extent of its illuminating powers. An opera parabolic reflector was used—no lenses—and care was taken by Mr. Maxim to set the points of the carbons a little at one side of each other, and to adjust them to the exact focus of the reflector. When this was fairly accomplished, the light was turned toward a spot in Ballston Spa, New York, 7 miles distant, where, by previous arrangement, a group of several hundred persons were assembled to witness the experiment. So powerful was the light, so accurate the focusing and alignment, that the designated place in Ballston was instantly illuminated, so that ordinary print could be read, the time seen on watches, etc. The experiment was made at 9½ o'clock, p. m. This is believed to be the greatest distance at which illumination of equal degree has been accomplished. We are indebted to Mr. H. S. Maxim for the above particulars.—Scientific American.

NITRO-GLYCERINE.

Nitro-glycerine was discovered in 1847 by an Italian named Sobrero. It is made as follows: If a quantity of nitric acid be added to twice its weight of sulphuric acid, and glycerine be poured into this and stirred carefully, the whole being surrounded by a freezing mixture, we obtain that wonderful substance known as nitro-glycerine, which has more than ten times the explosive force of gunpowder. It forms on the surface as an oil of a pale yellow color, is perfectly inodorous, and has a sweet aromatic taste. It is poisonous whether taken internally or absorbed through the skin, and small doses of it produce distressing headaches. It does not explode when brought in contact with fire, and remains unchanged even when raised to a temperature of boiling water; but at 40 deg. Fah. it becomes converted into an icy mass, which merely requires friction to develop its explosive qualities.

HOUSEKEEPERS AND THEIR WORK.

Some housekeepers who keep their houses in excellent order have a very annoying way of talking about what they have done in detail. It is foolish of women to make their work the subject of conversation at all the meals, and at the occasions for social intercourse in the evening hour, for it irritates the husband and children, although all are too respectful to say so. Women would do well to examine themselves in regard to this point, and avoid a persistent habit of telling over how much they have done. On the other hand, the husband should not forget that his wife is a faithful worker. How astonished some wives would be if, after a multifarious day's work, the husband should make some such remark as this: "How pleasant it is to come home at night and find the house so clean and tidy, the children so fresh and the supper so deliciously cooked. You are a valuable woman, wife!" If a man should make such an appreciative remark a wife would be foolish then to tire him with relating the details, while he would be careful not to express himself again. Bear and forbear, and a careful study of one another's necessities for sympathy, is needed to make domestic happiness. The wife should not expect too much estimation of her labor from her husband; neither should he leave her to struggle alone with her side of difficulties of household life, especially where there is a family of children.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

A Society is attached to Mr. Spurgeon's London Tabernacle to furnish clothing to needy persons and their families. It distributed $1,200 worth of goods last year.

The "Palace of the Inquisition" at Rome is for sale. It is not older than 1614, and must therefore have been erected long after the palmy days of the Grand Inquisitor.

The leader of a band of robbers in the Mabratta country of India was converted to God six years ago, and is now the ordained pastor of the mission church in Watlaw.

The Municipal Council of Paris has struck "Robinson Crusoe" off its list of prize books for school children because of its religious tone! On his desert island, poor Crusoe had the wickedness to pray to God.

We learn that within three months fifty Christians have been killed by Mohammedans within a few miles of Robert College at Constantinople. This illustrates the unsettled state of the country and the prevalent Mohammedan ill will toward the Christians.

A wealthy Englishman has given $5,000 to the Church Missionary Society, with a request that it be spent in Afghanistan. He believes that the policy of England toward the Afghans is likely to lead to the Christian religion being despised in the country, and he is anxious that missionaries should be sent to preach the Gospel of the Prince of peace.

In accordance with arrangement made with the congregation of the Propaganda Fide, the Pope has given his assent to a proposal that a portion of the Jesuit community of France should constitute a Society for the Propagation of the Catholic Faith in Central Africa.

There are not less than 225 separate Protestant congregations scattered through the country from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean, and from Turkey to Persia. There are 176 schools, with an average attendance of 15,500 persons. There are boarding schools for girls, under the supervision of the American missionaries in Marsovan, Brusa, Bitlis, Mardin, Kharpoot and Aintab, with theological seminaries and colleges at other places.

Rev. Dr. Geikie, whose "Life of Christ" has made his name so widely known, is about to relinquish his ministerial charge in Paris, and will return to London. Originally an independent minister at Islington, he went over a few years ago to the Anglican Church.

At a coroner's inquest at the Flora Inn, Harrow Road, one of the jurors, a Jew, objected to being sworn on the Bible. The coroner said he had never heard such an objection before, as the Jews took the oath by opening the book and kissing the Old Testament. The juror replied that his religion forbade him kissing any book but a Hebrew Bible. As this could not be procured the coroner's officer had to procure another juryman.

The English journals announce the death of Rev. John Newton, Jr., M. D., a member of the Presbytery of Lodiana. His death occurred at Sabathu, the missionary station which was the scene of his labors. The funeral was numerously attended by Europeans and natives. Soldiers, who loved and respected him, carried the coffin from the house to the grave in the old cemetery, where his mother and a young child lay side by side. The Rev. John Newton, the aged father of the deceased, who has been nearly fifty years a missionary in India, read the Scriptures and made an address. A hymn was sung by the soldiers present from Moody and Sankey's collection, "Home at last, thy labor done."

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1880.

VISIT TO THE ALLIANCE.

Here we are, among the lions of Presbyterianism, outside indeed of the charmed circle of concentrated Calvinism, yet breathing its atmosphere and partiking of its bracing effects. At Goldsboro we were disappointed at not meeting Rev. L. C. Vass, en route, and this disappointment our readers are called to share in missing the reports from his facile pen with which they were to be favored. But here we are delightfully located with a Quaker hostess, and pen in hand ready to report as best we may. With the admirable report of the Philadelphia Press before us, we shall furnish notes original and borrowed—with a free hand borrowed—of what has yet transpired.

The Academy of Music, in which the reception of delegates on the evening of the 22d, is one of the largest, perhaps the largest, hall in the city of Philadelphia. On this occasion, to the masterpieces of painting and statuary, which enriched the salons, were added a profusion of floral decoration. Tinted-leaved caladiums, magnificient caronas, delicate lady-slippers and fragrant tuberoses were tastefully distributed about the entrance and along the corridors, with wide-spreading palms and ancas and ferns and exotics generally. The platform too was profusely decorated with tuberoses, carnations and beautiful roses. The whole delightfully captivating to the senses. In the audience room were permitted only the delegates, their wives and daughters, the committee of entertainment and the privileged guests. Of this room the grand canvas, "Christ Rejected," was the background. The Mothers of the Church, venerable ladies with benignant countenances and silvering hair, occupied the foreground.

Mr. George Junkin introduced the delegates to the Governor of Pennsylvania and the Mayor of Philadelphia, with a brief and happy reference to the universality of Presbyterianism as represented by the guests, and a short retrospect of its origin and its progress in this country. Governor Hoyt and Mayor Stokely responded appropriately and were followed by Rev. Dr. Cairns of Edinburgh, Rev. Dr. McIntosh of Belfast, Ireland, Gov. George B. McClellan of New Jersey and Rev. Narayan Sheshadri of India. Gov. McClellan's address was remarkably, and that of Rev. Narayan Sheshadri was particularly appreciated. We append the Press' descriptions of the foreign speakers:

REV. DR. CAIRNS.

Rev. Dr. John Cairns, principal of the United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, then stepped upon the platform and responded feelingly to the welcome given the delegates. a more typical Scotchman or Scotch Presbyterian it would be difficult to find than Principal Cairns; tall, of almost muscular shoulders, on which sits a head strong in jaw, in forehead and in the characteristic Scotch lineaments, the broad, square brow capped by a wealth of snow-white hair. Side whiskers of medium length, fleecy white, add squareness rather than grace to his massive jaw. It is the face of a man who could lead an army or suffer at the stake. He speaks with strong Scotch accent in a voice as hard as his intonation, rising at times into pathos when his subject warrants it. His gestures appear abrupt and a trifle hard, which effect is intensified by a habit of raising and lowering his body—graceful, perhaps in the gown, to which he is accustomed, but somewhat awkward without. What he said elicited "Hear! hear!" from his European colleagues and the customary hand plaudits from the American divines.

REV. DR. M'INTOSH.

Rev. Dr. McIntosh of Belfast, Ireland, who next spoke, might well be Scotch, as far as appearance goes—the same square-set forehead, piercing gray eyes and hard lines of countenance that are supposed to mark the Gælic face. His manner is more sympathetic than that of Scotchmen generally.

REV. NARAYAN SHESHADRI.

The last speaker was Rev. Narayan Sheshadri, a very swarthy, almost black gentleman representing India and the other Oriental countries. He appeared for the occasion in his native costume, the most conspicuous feature of which was his cotton turban, next a surtout of brown cotton material falling with almost tunic freedom, and his white ankle-fastened trousers. He showed the Presbyterian divine only in his white shirt, collar and neck-tie. He spoke with considerable fluency, making few errors in his English, and with the distinctness that marks the English of foreigners. His voice has a florid and sympathetic quality, such as few general orators, and fewer ministers, possess.

After the speeches the delegates were personally introduced to Governor Hoyt, Mayor Stokley, ex-Governor Hartranft, Governor McClellan and the ladies present, and after a little free and pleasant chatting the exercises closed.

THE REGULAR EXERCISES.

The business meetings of the Alliance will be held generally in Horticultural Hall, which has been specially and uniquely decorated for the occasion. The Press describes it in detail in three full columns. We can give its introduction only:

"Horticultural Hall, where the business is to be transacted, has been decorated in a remarkable manner. The general idea is to express in the decorations in a condensed way the history of the Reformed Churches represented in the Council. All the decorations, therefore, have an idea behind them. There are ten columns, five on each side, twenty feet in height and about seven in width, in the whole hall being upward of twenty-one hundred square feet of decorations and perhaps five thousand feet of evergreens. Each column contains large paintings of the seals of the Churches represented by the column, with the coats of arms, seals, mottoes of distinguished Reformers; both divines and princes and kings, with a number of names of distinguished persons and dates and events that have been central points in the histories of the Churches. There are five columns and a half on each side of the hall, each column being appropriated to one of the foreign Churches, the honors of the decoration in this way being given to the foreign Churches. But wherever the American Churches could be introduced, historical points in connection with the ecclesiastical ancestry of those churches, that has been done. Over each column there is a placard giving the name of the country represented, and the top of the column is crowned by flags, of America on one side and the national flag of the country represented on the other. Starting on the north side is Scotland."

The proceedings of the Council began really with the forenoon of the 23d. A procession was formed at the Chamber Street church and proceeded to the Academy of Music. There were, it is said, fully one thousand persons in the line, which including the delegates, members of the various committees and the entertainers. The Academy was crowded to overflowing. Rev. Dr. W. M. Paxton preached the opening sermon from Matt. VIII., 11: "And I say unto you that many shall come from the East and West, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of Heaven." On all hands it is agreed that this sermon was excellent in spirit, able in thought and most admirable in expression. It had been memorized and was delivered without notes.

In the afternoon Rev. Dr. Breed of Philadelphia welcomed the foreign members. This was capital in conception, though we feel free to say we have heard better delivery. The Doctor's voice was not so clear and sonorous as his reputation led us to expect. His welcomes was separately, to the various countries represented and these were spontaneous when he referred to France rapidly retrospecting to the grand procession of Presbyterian worthies Conde, Sully, Philip du Plessi Mornay, Palissey, Lonise de Mont Morency, the Duchess Rence and others and coming down pitched the hopeful footfall of the coming legions of Presbyterianism. Ireland, too, drew applause.

After the address of welcome, tributes of respect usual in such cases were paid to deceased members. The remainder of the evening session was taken up with reports on credentials and statistics, electing of moderators to preside successively and the appointment of a business committee.

At night the subjects were severally "The Ceremonial, the Moral and the Emotional in Christian Life and worship," "Modern Theological Thought" and Religion in Secular Affairs." Professor Hitchcock in the first address deprecated the apologetic style in preaching, and expressed the feeling that we need more of the emotional in our services, and indeed he evidently decidedly favors a liturgy, or thinks the use of a liturgy might be made a matter of foreclosure. Principal Rainy's address—the second was solid and deep, too profound for the general public and too long. He had not half finished when required to suspend. The last paper was that of Principal Grant. It was more intelligible to the general audience, practical and replete with sound sense.

The necessity for limitation as to the time taken in addresses has become apparent on Thursday night a motion was made proposing a change in the programme.

The question has been asked what good will come of the Alumni if free and general discussion did not follow, and on Friday the conclusion was reached to read no papers if the authors themselves are absent, that the reading of papers should not consume over an hour and that in any subsequent discussion speeches should be limited to five minutes each.

On Friday forenoon Dr. Humphrey read an able paper on the Inspiration, Authenticity and Interpretation of the Scriptures," after which the papers of the preceding evening and Dr. Humphrey's paper were brought under discussion. The discussions on Inspiration were free and entirely orthodox. On the discussion appertaining to a liturgy Dr. Hoffinger a delegate of the Reformed Church from Cape Colony in Africa plead for a moderate liturgy such as is used in the church at Cape Colony.

In the afternoon Prof. Wilson of Alleghany City, Pa, read a paper on the Distinctive Principles of Presbyterianism, and was followed by Dr. John DeWitt of Philadelphia in an address on the Worship of the Reformed Churches. Dr. DeWitt's address was offhand and charmingly delivered. He was specially earnest in pleading for simplicity in worship in opposition to any style or form of liturgy. He was applauded to the echo.

Rev. Dr. C. H. Reid of Richmond, Va., read a paper on Ruling Elders, giving the authority for them and their appropriations the Church.

In the evening Dr. Orvington was to have read a paper on "Family Religion and the Training of the Young," but not being present Rev. Dr. Graham of London addressed the Alliance on "Christianity in Practical Life." The Doctor's manner was unusually demonstrative, and his accent unmistakably Scotch, the latter making it somewhat difficult to keep the thread of his discourse, though adding a charm of its own to the discourse. The audience were greatly pleased, and payed the closest attention. His humor, which unscientifically bubbled over, drew applause, and when, as he was about to close with a story in illustration, the inexorable gavel dropped, they would have forced him on. Professor Blaikie of Edinburgh read his paper on the Application of the Gospel to Employers and Employed. It was sound and logical but so indistinctly spoken that to many it was lost. Chief Justice Drake read an essay on Christianity, the Friend of the Working Classes.

We can give no more of the proceedings to our readers at this time. Without providential hindrance they will be the better served by Rev. R. B. McAlpine in our next.

We must before closing these notes express our happiness at meeting brethren of our Synod at the Alliance. Rev. R. B. McAlpine we had the opportunity of grasping by the hand. To Rev. J. L. Currie we could barely tip a wink; Dr. J. R. Wilson, now on his vacation, we took unawares, and Rev. John M. Rose, ours by right, we fell upon right gladly. Rev. H. G. Hill is, and Rev. Dr. J. Henry Smith we think, here. Of course we invaded the sanctum of the Presbyterian, and found Dr. Grier looking older much than when last we saw him, but cordial and unaffected as in the days of our youth, when were we shepherded in his fold.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The letters from Rev. Daniel McGilvary, missionary to Siam, which we are now publishing on the first page of the paper, though addressed to the "Little Folks," will be found most interesting to all who will read them.

We learn from the principal that Peace has opened very auspiciously, having 140 names on the roll the third week. It will no doubt be gratifying to the friends and patrons of Peace to learn that Rev. Mr. Watkins, pastor of First Presbyterian church, is in future to be instructor of Mental and Moral Philosophy and Evidence of Christianity. He enters upon his duties at once.

We call attention to the extract from the letter of the secretary of the N. C. Agricultural Society published in another place. We hope his anticipations of a successful fair may be fully realized.

Some communications which will not loose by keeping, have been laid aside until next issue.

The press generally speaks in the highest terms of the ability of the Council, judging from our own branch of the church—the Presbyterian Alliance could furnish material to form several other councils equally able and leave enough at home to defend the faith.

George Junkin, chairman of the business committee, when the delegates had been ranged in a semi-circle before the platform addressed the Governor and Mayor Stokley as follows:

Governor Hoyt and Mr. Mayor: I have the honor to present to you our guests of this evening, the delegates of the Reformed Church through the world which is under Presbyterian Government. Their faith is the Calvinistic, or, as I would rather call it, the Pauline. Their government is republican: neither pope nor prelate has ever assumed superior power in their councils.—They have ever championed the cause of freedom and have been the firm friends of liberty of conscience and liberty of government. They come from every quarter of the globe. They are here from sunny Italy, from dyked Holland and from all the countries of the continent. They come alike from the regions of heat and cold, to attest the unity and universality of the Church. It is fitting that you, who represent this great Commonwealth and this noble city, should bid a warm welcome to these delegates, who have come together in the city of William Penn, which was dedicated to liberty of conscience and founded as a refuge for the oppressed of all creeds. You would blot out one of the brightest pages in this Commonwealth's history were the noble deeds of the Presbyterians hidden from light. The city and State would be bereft of at least one-third of her population were Presbyterians and their children removed. It is my pleasure to present them as a body to you; afterwards they will receive an individual introduction.

REV. D. LACY, D. D.—We know that in his sore affliction, he has the sympathy of his brethren in the Synod. May he find comfort in those precious truths which he has often presented to the distressed. May the blessed Saviour, who breaks not the bruised reed and quenches not the smoking flax, to whom he no doubt has often pointed the bereaved and the afflicted, now pour into his own bleeding heart the oil of consolation.

We have received from Mr. Wm. Alderman, the Secretary, a complimentary ticket to the annual fair of the Cumberland County Agricultural Association, to be held at Fayetteville, November 16-19. The editor being absent we (the editor pro tem.) cannot say that he will be sure to attend, but we know that he will appreciate the compliment.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

ASHPOLE CHURCH, FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

This church has enjoyed a very pleasant meeting. Jno. R. Law, of Darlington, preached for six days with much earnestness and power. Congregations were large and very attentive. There were five additions by examination. The members of the church were deeply interested. Ashpole church has passed through a long season of darkness and doom; but thanks to the Master, its prospects are brightening. The church is more united now than it has been for several years.

H. M. BREARLY.

Correspondents will please notice the change in the address of Rev. H. B. Garris, from Whiteville, N. C., to Rosendale, N. C.

Also notice that the address of Rev. B. W. Mebane is changed from Madison, N. C., to Hampden-Sidney, Va.

Also, the address of Rev. D. Lacy D. D., is changed from Raleigh, N. C., to Charlotte, N. C.

SHADY GROVE CHURCH, OZAN, ARK.

A church was organized under the above name by the Rev. W. B. Crawford, just before his death last year, with a membership of eleven. On Thursday before the fifth Sunday in August, Rev. Geo. F. Robertson began a meeting alone, preaching seven times receiving two members on profession of faith. He did not have the help he expected, and so had to labor alone. The field is encouraging, there being plenty of good material. They have had preaching only once or twice since they were organized. Washington, Sept. 22, 1880.

ENCOURAGING NEWS.

Dear Brother: I wish to acknowledge through your paper the receipt of $1 (one dollar) for Coal Valley church from Miss M. E. Coble, Gilmer's Store. I hope that there are others in the old North State who feel interested it this good work and will soon respond. Yours truly, L. A. McLEAN.

Quinnimont, W. VA., Sept. 25, 1880.

C. B. Denson, secretary of N. C. Agricultural Society, in sending us a complimentary to the State Fair, October 18-23, writes:

"It is gratifying to report to you that our prospects for a fair, valuable to the interests of North Carolina and successful in every point of view, were never so bright as at present. With abundant crops and increased prosperity, and in good spirits, the people manifest by their prompt entries and our large correspondence, that our next fair will surpass anything in the history of the society. The displays of fine stock and variety of machinery will be unusually fine. The trades procession will be a great feature on Wednesday, and the trials of speed throughout the week are on an extensive scale.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERY OF LAFAYETTE.

The Presbytery of Lafayette met in Liberty, Mo., September 16th: moderator, Rev. P. D. Stepenson; temporary clerks, H. Cordell and Dr. P. H. Chambers.

The attendance of ministers was good, but many churches were not represented. Besides the members, there were present: Rev. E. Wright, Rev. R. Morrison and Rev. J. Greer.

Rev. E. McNair was received from Presbytery of Holston.

Rev. E. Wright presented the cause of the American Bible Society, and resolutions were adopted commending the society to our churches.

Revs. W. G. F. Wallace and J. A. D. Hughes, evangelists, gave encouraging reports of their work.

Rev. J. W. Wallace was appointed to revise standing committees of Presbytery, in view of the union of Upper Missouri with us.

A committee was appointed to organize a church in Nevada City, if the way be clear.

The committee to organize a church in St. Joseph reported that the building was not yet completed. Committee continued.

The stated clerk was instructed to notify the churches in this Presbytery, each year in time, that they observe the last Thursday of February as a concert of prayer for young men in institutions of lerning, as recommended by our General Assembly.

Rev. Robert Morrison reported one-half of the debt of Westminster College paid.

A letter was received from Rev. L. P. Bowen asking permission to labor within our bounds till next meeting of Presbytery. Permission granted.

The Committee on Supplies reported as follows: Hardin, Quarles, Richmond, Campbell, Elkhorn, Foreman, Westport, Madeira, Six Miles, Wheeler, Saline, Barbee, Dover, Leyburn, Brush Creek, Hughes.

The Liberty church asked permission to employ Rev. E. McNair one-half his time—Lawson and Bethel each one-fourth.

Lexington was chosen as the place of the next meeting of Presbytery—time: Thursday before full moon in April.

The thanks of Presbytery were voted to the people of Liberty for their hospitality.

Adjourned to meet in Fulton during the session of Synod at call of moderator.

JAS. M. CHANEY, Stated Clerk.

West Lexington: Presbytery met at Troy church, in Woodford county, Ky., the 14th inst. After a sermon by Rev. E. E. Ervin, eight ministers and eleven ruling elders were enrolled. Rev. R. Cecil was elected moderator, ruling elder S. D. Young, temporary clerk. Special duties: Rev. M. Van Lear to hold a sacramental meeting at Boyer's church; Rev. W. J. Lapsley to perform a similar duty at Owenton; and Rev. R. Douglass and Rev. J. G. Hunter to visit Salem church. Vacant churches. It was resolved that Rev. E. Forman be and hereby is authorized by Presbytery to minister to the Boyer's, Owenton, Williamstown and Owingsvill churches as he may have opportunity; and that these churches are earnestly exhorted to renumerate him for his services to the extent of their ability. Next meeting. Cynthiana, Friday, at 7:30 p. m., before full moon of April. Ministers and ruling elders are specially enjoined to arrange to remain over the following Sabbath to co-operate with the pastor. The Auditing Committee reported a careful examination of the books of the treasurer of Presbytery, and as they have been correctly kept, the semi-annual report of the treasurer is hereby received and adopted. After a busy and harmonious session, the pleasure of which was enchanced by the generous hospitality of Troy church and its friends, Presbytery adjourned to meet at Georgetown during the meeting of the Synod, at the call of the moderator. J. G. HUNTER, S. C.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

RAPID ADVANCE.

A missionary in Japan writes:—"Japan is advancing with unequalled speed. Think of it! The other day the Mikado accepted an invitation to an entertainment given in his honor by a number of native merchants. Until the late revolution merchants stood at the foot of the social ladder. The clothes they wore, the baskets in which they rode, the saddle-horses upon which they were not allowed to ride, every thing that surrounded them, had to conform to law, and to bear outward semblance of their lowly position. And now his Imperial Majesty and Mikado, the descendant of the gods, accepts their hospitality and dines in their presence. Wonder of wonders! Two hundred years of English domain in India have modified but slightly the social polity of that land. Here in Japan making wonderful leaps socially as well as politically and morally. Under God, it is the rank and file of the nation that compel such changes. Are they not worth helping? Don't think the work is done yet. It is simply well begun. I am living in the midst of Pagan shrines. I hear devout Shintooists clap and see Buddhists rub their hands every day before gods of stone. The city is alive with religious festivals. Last week workmen cleaning my well begged earnestly for permission to throw rice, salt and sake into the water, and burn incense over the well, that the god of the well might clean it and save them the trouble. I replied, 'Very well, if the god does the work I shall pay him and not you.' It was my sermon in Japanese, and may all succeeding ones be as effective in carrying their point! The golden days are passing. The people are bound to be enlightened, and they will be. The only question is, how? On a Christian or antichristian basis? Some countries will wait for an answer. Japan will not."—Presbyterian.

Dr. Stuart Robinson, of Second church, Louisville, has returned to the city in greatly improved health. He preached a strong sermon to a large congregation in his church last Sunday morning. He spoke with power and energy, and his hearers were exceedingly grateful at the evidence of his physical improvement. At night the congregation had a rare and unexpected treat in a sermon by Rev. Robert Howie of Glasgow, Scotland, on his way to the Alliance at Philadelphia.—Christian Observer.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

ADDRESS OF G. A. WILSON, M. D.,

Delivered Before the Presbyterian Union, Shiloh Church, August 28th.

OBSTACLES TO GROWTH OF PRESBYTERIANISM.

Yours, Mr. President, is a voluntary association of the elders, teaching and ruling, and the deacons of our church, and your only object is to consider and advance its interests. You wish to bring these officers, and, as far as is practicable, the membership, face to face and heart to heart, that Christian communion and fellowship may be revived and rekindled—the strong reinforcing the feeble, and the feeble awakening the sympathies of the strong—and all learning and profiting by the worldly-wise maxim that in union and co-operation there is strength. But, sir, you would fail of the most important function of your union if you labor only to render it enjoyable and profitable in these directions. You must consider all questions intrinsic as well as extrinsic which affect the interest of your church.

Elders, ruling and teaching, by virtue of your eldership you are invested with the duty and function of legislating for the interests of our Church, under the primitive order and constitution adopted from the ancient Church, adapted to the new dispensation, and handed down to us by inspired apostles, and preserved for us through all the succeeding centuries. This is your high warrant, and function, and true succession in the house of God.

In carrying forward the costly plan for the redemption of our race, it pleases God to use the agency of man, the instrumentality of His Church, but it is only, and exclusively, as the herald of the great salvation. The great mission, the only scriptural mission of any Church, is to gather the lost sheep of the house of Israel to the fold of Christ after divinely appointed methods, and to feed those sheep on the divinely appointed food.

It behooves us then, Mr. President, to look well to our methods of heralding the great salvation. Are all the capabilities of our church organization in full and successful operation, and utilized to the needs of the Church? or are they, in important respects, administered to the usages, and in deference to the traditions of the past? These inquiries may well be addressed to such organizations as yours—these primary assemblies of the people of the Church. Prosperous communities are composed of prosperous individuals. An intelligent, zealous, spiritually minded membership makes an efficient church; efficient churches an efficient presbytery. The question is, whether our polity is as productive of good fruits, as it ought to be. And it must be admitted that there is a widespread conviction that there is a defect in the working of our system. Our church paper for months has been discussing the interrogatories, "What is the matter?" "What is the trouble?" "What is the remedy?"—questions and answers evidently propounded by the best minds and most consecrated hearts of our communion. To the speaker's mind and habit of thought they are put in such shape as to convey the idea of disease in our body ecclesiastic, requiring the care of the skilful diagnostician and the resources of the fertile therapentist. Our form of government is eminently republican. We have no one-man power or arbitrary law to prevent the adaptation of the best means to the best ends, and this feature should secure us good results as well as popular sympathy. But the best system may fail from faulty administration of its powers. Our standards of belief rests on the granite foundations of the sacred Scriptures. Our doctrines are as inevitably the deductions from an intelligent review of the whole history of our race, sacred and profane, as if they had never been indited by the pen of inspiration, or formulated by the great Apostle to the Gentiles; but the clearest and purest doctrines may be misrepresented and misunderstood.

It is the firm conviction of the speaker that the chief hindrance and obstacle to the growth of Presbyterianism at the present era consists, 1st, in failure on our part to utilize our system to its best capacity; and, 2nd, to persistent misrepresentations of our doctrines. I earnestly invoke your attention to these points. You are the constituent elements of Presbytery, and any remedy of supposed defects must come from you. The ruling elder contributing to the removal of these obstacles would better serve his church and generation than by encroachments upon the sphere of the teaching elder. The only officers "who labor in the Word and doctrine" known to our system are pastors and evangelists. The pastor is "bishop, minister, elder, presbyter, the angel of the church, ambassador for Christ, steward of the mysteries of God." In the language of our Book, "the pastoral office is the first in the church, both for dignity and usefulness." It is a very important and suggestive fact that there is a growing disinclination on the part of the churches to entering this most useful relation. In my narrow acquaintance I can name churches that have lost the services of useful and acceptable ministers from this cause alone, and all over the land you find pulpits filled by the anomalous "stated supply." On inquiry I think it will be found that the true and only cause of this lies in the tenure of the pastoral office and the unpleasant difficulties which attend the dissolution of the relation. If the motion comes from the one side but little harm results, for few churches would be so ungenerous as to take serious offence because a beloved pastor yields to solicitations to enter a wider field of usefulness, with better worldly advantages; but if the motion starts on the other side the end is seldom reached short of divisions and dissensions and heart-burnings, the development of feelings, little different in kind or degree from what attends the divorce of the marriage tie with our more cultured brethren of the North. No matter which side is to blame, the church bleeds, and a legacy of discord is handed down by the incumbent to his successor. You know, Mr. President, this is no fancy sketch. A good man, sincerely desirous of being spent in his Master's service, may outlive his usefulness in his field from no serious fault of his own. It is often difficult for the church to deal frankly and candidly in so delicate a matter. An earnest worker may soon find himself misplaced but labors on, with the hope, like Mr. McCawber, that "something will turn up," and still labors on with the growing conviction of the mistake made in his settlement. Perhaps his restless eye casts furtive glances at other fields, and rumors come of invitations to other portions of the vineyard, but they prove to be rumors only, with no fruit except, perhaps, the discovery to his people that he is only holding on to them until he can get a better place, and this adds nothing to the appreciation in which his service is held. The poor man is environed by difficulties. His only support is the laborer's hire. He dare not overlook the claims, which would make him worse than an infidel, and he limps on to the crutch of engrossing secular pursuits. Languor, barrenness, inefficiency, in all church work are the inevitable results. Am I answered that this is all wrong—and constitutes no real objection to our present usage; that pastors are constantly, sometimes, even capriciously dissolving this relation and churches have the same right unchallenged. But the case being altered, alters the case. Let one of a bench of elders screw himself up to the rashness of moving for a dissolution and the discovery is soon made, that he is not as good as he ought to be, destitute of personal piety, actuated by "old grudges," &c.

Mr. President, I am a bit of a professional man myself, I know somewhat of the old Adam that is stirred up when one flatters himself that he is doing his duty faithfully even ably, and is told by his client that his services are no longer desired, and another is preferred. More grace and magnanimity is needed in such emergencies to sustain a true Christian manhood, than falls to the lot of all, even preachers. Has not the counterpart of this picture been often exhibited? But the indefinite and life long tenure of the pastoral office is productive of other evils. It fosters on the part of the churches. The idea of exclusive rights, in the life and service of the pastor, and makes a tremendous draft on his intellectual resources; which necessitates protracted vacations and expensive tours, to cater to the demands for novelty and æsthetic entertainment.

On the part of the pastor, it begets the idea of property rights in the Church and its perquisites. It smacks of the livings, and benefices of an establishment. If such a monster as the mercenary spirit can be found within the ranks of the holy calling, it furnishes a license and centre around which such a spirit can successfully forage and glean. Let the most careful provision be made for the comfortable maintainence of the pastor but let the idea be ever prominent that this is a contribution to the cause of Christ, and not to the individual. In the economy of grace these oblations yield a richer harvest to the contributor, than the recipient, and should not be subordinated. I had almost said degraded, to the level of offerings and tokens of friendship. And now Sir, I admit, that I have made what will be called an impudent assault upon the usages of our Church, an indictment against the long established practice of the Fathers. I can only plead honesty, and singleness of purpose. But what is the remedy for these supposed evils? I answer it is ready, and at hand, and would be effectual. Presbytery, alone can make and break the alliance. Let Presbytery only authorize it for specific periods, and on the arrival of these periods, let churches and pastors be required to show cause why the relation should continue. Thus only can Presbytery effectually oversee her churches and meet the duty improved by our book "to visit particular churches for the purposes of enquiring into their state. Presbytery cannot locate pastors of its own motion, but it can limit the pastorates, leaving churches and pastors to a fresh exercise of their elective affinities. Is it objected, that good men might be unsettled and thrown out of occupation? I answer there is a place for every such one somewhere in the Master's vineyard. Let him search for it. If he has aspired too high let him be content with an humbler sphere. The cultivation of the vineyard is not for the purpose of giving bread to workers. The ark of the Lord must move on, though men perish by the wayside. Private Christians, in every sphere of life find it frequently necessary to change their field of labor. The veteran soldier only invalided in the service, is entitled to a pension from the first-fruits of the treasuary.

But would the change proposed conflict with any law of the Church, or in any degree jeopard her characteristic conservatism?

Pastors are but men, and the most efficient and successful would hardly be less so, in view of a more searching account of their stewardships. The slothful might be stimulated to greater faithfulness. Does any one suggest, I would ape the itinerancy? I answer, it would be an itinerancy without an earthly hierarch and the tyranny of an arbitrary law; a itinerancy which would overcome stagnation by free, healthful circulation, and impart life and progress to our Church mechanism. If our Church desires to hold its own, if it aspires to aggressive work, it must get out of the ruts of usage and tradition. The time is past for a quasi chaplaincy.

But, sir, with his change in our methods, and securing the right men in the right places, I come at length in sight of the topic on which I am docketed to address you—"The Pastor's Work"—and what a theme is this for the handling of mere laymen. It involves all that is embraced in the great commission. How vast the field and delicate the trust. Volumes could not exhaust, and the tongue of eloquence would fail to do it justice. If the mind staggers in catching a glimpse of its boundaries, how must the heart falter which encounters its responsibilities!

The pastor is the under-shepherd. It is his province to gather the flock to the fold and protect from ravening wolves without and within. He must guard against the invasion of disease; and what a Pandora's box of distempers was entailed by the first disobedience? He must be on the alert when the storm gathers to reclaim the stray and wandering, repress the dangerous and impetuous gambols of the young, lead the infirm and decrepit by the hand—gently bearing the little lambs in his bosom.

"'Tis not a cause for small import
The pastor's care demands;
But what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled a Saviour's hands."

But the pastor's paramount duty is to feed the sheep good, health-giving, heart-strengthening food! To guard against fruit, rich in its fragrance, beautiful to the eye, luscious in taste, but which conceals the poison of death.

To lay aside the metaphor, it is the preacher's duty to preach the Gospel, herald the great salvation, declare the whole counsel of God. The same word which, by the energies of the Spirit, planted the germs of spiritual life in the human soul, constitutes its sole nutriment and source of growth. The Spirit, so to speak, is the digest, the stimulator, the power and life of rootlets, planted in a soil of noxious weeds. Through all the varied duties, in all the trying discipline, of its transitory state, this Word is the guiding star of the soul, until this mortal puts on immortality, and washed white in the blood of the Lamb, it basks in the favor of its God and feeds on the fruitage of the celestial city. Pastor, it is your supreme privilege and duty to preach, proclaim, herald, the Word of Life.

Aurelius Antoninus*, translated by George Long, and printed without abridgment; price 15 cents. The Salon of Madame Necker: vol. ii., containing parts 3 and 4; 15 cents. The Hermits, by Charles Kingsley; price 15 cents. John Ploughman's Pictures, by Charles H. Spurgeon; price 15 cents.

Christian Sociology, by J. H. W. Stuckenberg, D. D., Professor in Theological Department of Wittenberg College. I. K. Funk & Co., N. Y. $1 50. This book is neatly gotten up, clear type, tinted paper, cloth-bound, 300 pages. Not having time to review it we clip the following notice from the Southwestern Presbyterian: "It is probable that many who would be delighted with the contents of this volume would fail to be attracted by the title. This subject, which might be styled the philosophy of Christian society, is one suited to arrest the attention and enlist the interest of all thoughtful minds. It is comparatively a new subject, but the mere title is enough to suggest the great importance that attaches to it. The nature and relations of Christian society form the subject of the first part of the work. The second part discusses Christian social ethics in its various aspects. It is a profoundly interesting and an inspiring theme, and the manner of treatment leaves nothing to be desired. It is a broad and thorough discussion of fundamental principles, which hitherto have not been treated systematically, or have been overlooked. It may be too much to say that it opens a new department of theology, but certainly it brings into due prominence a most important and most charming field of Christian life and experience. This is done by a master hand, and the fervor of the author's piety is as much in keeping with the subject as the candor and simplicity of his style."

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine for September comes freighted with many good articles. The Leonard Scott Publishing Co., New York. $4 a year, single number 35c.

The Catholic Presbyterian: This prince among church periodicals, for September, has been received. Though a little late its freshness and originality are not marred. The present number contains several interesting papers. Anson D. F. Randolph, New York. $3 a year, single number 30 cents.

The Popular Science Monthly for October is before us. Its contents are fresh, crisp and well adapted to lovers of science. D. Appleton & Co., New York, publishers. Single number 50 cents.

North American Review for October. D. Appleton & Co., New York. $5 a year, single number 50 cents.

Scribner's Monthly is at hand. Scribner's is always good, and the present number is no exception. Scribner & Co., New York. $4 a year, single number 35 cents.

Eclectic Magazine for October: E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, New York. $5 a year. The illustration in this number is a marine view entitled "Robbins' Reef Light, New York Harbor," engraved on steel. Among the usual instructive and attractive articles are the following: Hours in a Library, Sterne; Pleasant Life in Bengal; Letters to and from Hans Christian Anderson; The Carver and the Caliph; Jelly Fishes; Central Asia; Bitter-Sweet, a poem, besides literary notices, foreign literary notes, science and art, &c.

Gleanings from a Literary Life, 1838-1880, by Francis Bowen, LL. D., Alford Professor of Philosophy in Harvard College. Post-paid, $3. Chas. Scribler's Sons, New York, 1880.

Those acquainted with the distinguished author of "Modern Philosophy, from Descartes Schopenhauer" and Hartman," will welcome this volume of his matured essays on Education, Political Economy, and Philosophy, in various departments. He has written professedly, not to set forth novel opinions, but to guard and inculcate the transmitted heritage of old and familiar truths, involved in the burning questions of to-day. The paper on "Classical and Utilitarian Studies." "The Latest Form of the Development Theory;" "Dualism, Materialism, and Idealism;" Malthusianism, Darwinism, and Pessimism;" Buckle's History of Civilization," and "Blaise Pascal," will attract attention and study, among many others. It is delightful to have such gleanings from forty years work, in a volume of 513 pages, with table of contents and an index, all in clear and beautiful type, and the fine taste of the noble house of Scribner.

Barnes' Educational Monthly. $1 50. 1880. New York.

This excellent magazine has been a stranger to our table for some time. Its illustrations add to its text.

Introductory Lecture by Hon. Robert P. Dick, U. S. District Judge, before the Law School, Greensboro, N. C., at second session 1880.

The subject is "The Laws of the Ancient Hebrews." We are glad to see Christian lawyers of the distinction and ability of Judge Dick, unfolding to his classes the influence of the laws and instruction of Moses on the world's civilization, and showing that classic Greece was not the craddle of human liberty; but that Moses first announced and established, in a Hebrew commonwealth, the fundamental principles of a free state.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Items from the Central Presbyterian:

The Rev. W. L. Kennedy, of San Marcos, Texas, writes us that nine communicants have recently been added to the church at that place on profession of their faith.

Eight communicants have been added to the Teoc church, Miss., which is under the care of the Rev. A. W. Wilson.

Rev. A. S. Moffett, whose pastoral relation to the church of Loch Willow was dissolved at the late meeting of Lexington Presbytery, has received a call to take charge of Round Hill church, near Winchester, which has been hitherto connected with Loudoun church.

Rev. R. R. Howison has accepted the invitation to this interesting field (Samuel Davies church, Hanover county, Va.,) and entered upon the discharge of pastoral duty, preaching in Salem church the first and third Sundays, and in Bethlehem and Beulah the second and fourth. The congregations have been full and increasing, especially in the two churches last named. One very cheering religious element in this region is the good feeling among the various denominations of Christians. They attend each others churches, and in many ways work together for the cause of Christ. On the fifth Sunday in August (29th), by authority of the vestry, Rev. Mr. Howison preached in St. Paul's Episcopal church to a large congregation, including people of all the churches. This is according to an established usage in St. Paul's church. Altogether, there is much to encourage our church in Hanover.

At the recent meeting of the Presbytery of East Hanover a committee was appointed to consider the report of the Assembly's Committee on the Directory of Worship and report to the next meeting of Presbytery—Drs. Brown, Armstrong, Hoge, Read, Witherspoon, Rev. J. P. Smith, Hon. W. W. Henry, J. L. Marye and B. R. Wellford. A complaint of the Rev. N. M. Woods to the Synod of Virginia, against the action of Presbytery in licensing Mr. R. R. Howison to preach the Gospel, was made known by the last moderator, and Rev. Drs. Brown and Preston and W. W. Henry, Esq., were appointed to defend this action before the Synod. A call from Berkeley Springs church, Winchester Presbytery, for the pastoral services of Mr. Charles Ghiselin, a licentiate of this Presbytery, was made, and the call was retained by Presbytery until a meeting during the sessions of Synod.

The Rev. Alexander Cowan, Chairman of the Home Mission Committee in the Presbytery of Nashville, writes: "We have several vacant churches in our Presbytery desiring pastors. As Chairman of Home Mission, I should like to be put in communication with ministers who need work and would like to cast their lot with us. I will take great pleasure in putting any of the brethren who are so desire, in communication with these churches, if they will write to me, care Adams, Thorne and Co., Nashville, Tenn." —South Western Pesbyterian.

Rev. Wm George, D. D., pastor of Mount Horeb church, Kentucky, has been unanimously called to become the pastor of the church at Fort Worth, Texas.—Texas Presbyterian.

By order of Presbytery, the following notice is ordered to be sent to the Southern Presbyterian immediately for publication:

Resolved, That our churches be instructed to send all of their collections for Sustentation and Evangelistic funds to the treasurer of Presbytery, T. P. Quarles, Abbeville, S. C., to be paid out at the order of Executive Committee of Domestic Missions, one-fifth of the whole amount being forwarded by the treasurer of the Baltimore Committee of Home Missions. S. L. MORRIS, S. C.

The Rev. H. T. Darnell, pastor of the Presbyterian church of this town, having accepted the call to Durham, preached his last pastoral sermon here Sunday night. Several ministers are spoken of to be called here, but one wants this man and another wants that one, and thus we go.—Milton Chronicle.

There has been an excellent meeting at Bert's Station, in which Rev. J. K. Hitner was assisted by Elder Joseph H. Hopper, and the people were greatly edified.—Christian Observer.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

The new Presbyterian church at Carroll, Iowa, was dedicated on Sunday, September 5. The former church building had been destroyed by fire, and the loss was very keenly felt. But the congregation renewed its efforts, rebuilt the church by the assistance of friends, and dedicated it entirely paid for, so that on the Sabbath of dedication, instead of an appeal to pay an indebtedness, a thank offering was made in the shape of a missionary collection.—Presbyterian.

Rev. F. L. Patton, D. D., of Chicago was elected to the new chair of apologetics in Princeton Theological Seminary, September and it is understood that he will accept the appointment, though a strong effort is made to retain him in the position he now holds.—Banner.

Rev. E. P. Lewis, of Rochester Pa., has been called to the Presbyterian church of Freeburg, Ill.

Rev. Lyman Marshall, brother of Rev. Thomas Marshall, of St; Louis, has received and accepted a call to the church of Greenfield, Ill.

The Presbyterian church of Collinsville, Ill., has given a unanimous call to Rev. J. R. Reasoner, of Elmwood, Ill., with a salary of $1,000 and a house. The church sold the old property and is now building a new and better one.

On the 29th day of August, 1880, the First Presbyterian church of St. Charles, Mo., celebrated its sixty-second anniversary. Rev. J. B. Morton, the present pastor, preached an excellent and carefully prepared historical discourse.—The Interior.

On the evening of September 15th, in the First Presbyterian church at Auburn, N. Y., Rev. Anson J. Upson, D. D., was inaugurated as Professor of Sacred Rhetoric and Pastoral Theology in Auburn Theological Seminary.—Presbyterian.

The First Presbyterian church, Chicago, Ill., was organized in June, 1833, and held its first communion in a log house. Since that time it has admitted 3,000 members, and at present has 877 on its rolls.—Exchange.

On Sabbath, September 12, seven persons united with the First Presbyterian church, Sedalia, Mo., Rev. Geo. A. Beattie, pastor.

It is reported that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have been asked to make Washington city the scene of their labors next winter and have replied favorably.—Presbyterian.

BAPTIST.

Rev. W. W. Willis has recently closed a meeting at Pates' Station, which resulted in the addition to the church of ten persons by baptism. He was aided for a part of the time by brethren S. Ivey, Joseph Ward and E. D. Johnson. Bro. Willis is a missionary for the Cedar Creek Association.

This body convenes with Bethel church, in Sampson county, October 5th.—Bibical Recorder.

A HAPPY RESTORATION.

I can truly say that I owe my present existence and happy restoration to the hopes and joys of life, to the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and I say to every one suffering from any manner of kidney, liver or urinary trouble, "Use this remedy and recover." W. E. SANFORD.
Holley, N. Y., Feb. 25, 1880.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

The iron horse has but one ear—the engineer.

Mr. Thomas A. Edison contributes an article to the October number of the North American Review, in which he states that he has succeeded in making the electric light entirely practicable for all illuminating purposes. He shows the advantages of electricity over gas, and explains how his system is to be introduced. He comments upon the unfavorable opinions that have been passed upon his work and says that similar judgments were pronounced upon telegraphy, steam navigation and other great discoveries. —News & Observer.

A Baltimore court has held that a person who gets his or her ear injured while listening at a key-hole, has a legal right to damages, if not damaged enough already.

An entirely novel sight will be presented at our State Fair, October 18 to 23, next, in the exhibition, for the benefit of all interested in fine poultry, of the Novelty Incubator. In this curious apparatus chickens are hatched by steam, the full process of hatching, from the first pip of the egg, until the chickens emerges from the shell, being exposed to full view. After the chickens are hatched they are cared for by an artificial mother, which is a sight of much interest.—Raleigh News.

Col. David Johnson, formerly of Richmond, Va., but for some years identified with the Cuban rebellion was killed by Spanish guerrillas in Cuba in July last while on a fishing excursion near El Datil on the Mabay river. Crigadier Medina, who was of the fishing party, was also killed. Col. Johnson before dying fired five pistol shots at the Spanish officer commanding the attacking party and killed him.

General Anderson (ex-Confedrrate) recently returned to General Walker (Union), Superintendent of the Census, the sword captured from the latter at Ream's Station during the war. General Walker suitably acknowledges the courtesy and says he will prize the weapon all the more for this generous thoughtfulness.—Exchange.

A London dispatch from Rome says: "The three South American Powers at war on the Pacific Coast have accepted the offer of the United States to meditate."

The Swiss Government has offered, and the American Government has accepted, a stone from Tell's chapel, to be suitably inscribed and placed in the Washington Monument.

A company of scapegraces meeting a pious old man named Samson, one of them exclaimed, "Ah, now we're sae! We'll take Sampson along with us; and, then should we be set upon by a thousand Philistines, he'll slay them all!" "My young friend," quietly responded the old man, "to do that, I should have to borrow your jawbone!"

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy has lately instituted a reform that should be copied by other railroads. A watchman has been appointed for every section of its road, who will have to walk back and forward on his section, during the entire night, with a powerful lantern, and see that the line is undisturbed. There can be no doubt that this arrangement should be made by all other roads in the country.

The Executive Committee of the United States International Commission, at New York, desire a list of those persons in our State and locality, including every prominent manufacturer and producer, who there may be reason to believe would participate and make creditable exhibitions of their own particular productions in the World's Fair in 1883.—Ex.

There are now forty-five more persons at the Institution for the Deaf, Dumb and Blind than there were last term. The Legislature will have to increase the present "skimpy" appropriation, to provide for the added numbers.—News & Observer.

An Englishman upon hearing the cackling in a poultry-yard exclaimed, "Oh, this is really henchanting!"

A novel kind of liquid fuel which, under certain circumstances, will supersede coal for use in steamships and locomotives, has been tried with great success in the Russian steamer Czarewitch, the swiftest mail-boat on the Caspian Sea. This magazine of dormant energy, as we may term raw fuel, is simply the fluid refuse of petroleum oil, and after being blown into a spray by means of a jet of steam from the boiler of the engine, it is ignited inside the furnace, and burns with a roaring sheet of flame. Such a mode of combustion has several prominent advantages over the usual coal fire. It requires no stoking, and the flame can be manipulated like a jet of gas, and the steam pressure easily kept to a required degree. The last is a valuable property for fast cruisers in time of war or for blockade runners. Moreover, there are no ashes, and the smoke is free from sulphur. In default, therefore, of compressed air as a motive power on the Underground Railway, perhaps petroleum waste may get a trial. At any rate, we understand that the new system will be adopted in the heating of the locomotives on the Tiflis-Baku Railway when it is completed, and probably also on other Central Asian lines.

The drunkard is a burden to himself as well as his friends, and both he and his friends will give much to be able to see reform and sobriety induced. But since intoxication becomes a disease it requires a remedy of no unusual activity to reach the difficulty. Those who have taken Simmons Liver Regulator declare that it sets the liver in action and invigorates the system in such a way as to destroy the craving for strong drink, and soon the desire for liquor is entirely dissipated. While shaky, nervous and distressed, resort to Simmons Liver Regulator as a tonic, to arouse the liver to action, to regulate the bowels and remove the feeling of general depression and with it the craving for liquor.

Charlotte Female Institute

OPENED ITS SESSION SEPTEMBER 8TH with a greater number of pupils than ever before. This great increase of its patronage, both in numbers and area, is a testimonial to its continued excellence.

No other institute in the South offers greater advantages in any of these respects:

1. Well-furnished, comfortable rooms, and good fare.
2. Healthiness of locality and provision for the sick by an infirmary.
3. High grade and thoroughness of instruction by the same accomplished and experienced teachers who have given the School an unprecedented reputation in this respect.
4. No other institute south of the Potomac can show such testimonials as this from the first professors and teachers in the South.
5. The departments of Art and Music are equal to those of any other institute in the South.
6. No other School can show such rapid and substantial increase of patronage.
7. An elaborate Chemical and Philosophical Apparatus in constant use in the class-room of Natural Sciences.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Can You?

Can you make a rose or a lily- just one?
Or catch a beam of the golden sun?
Can you count the raindrops as they fall?
Or the leaves that flutter from tree-tops tall?
Can you run like the brook and never tire?
Can you climb like the vine beyond the spire?
Can you fly like a bird, or weave a nest,
Or make but one feather on robin's breast?

Can you build a cell like the bee, or spin,
Like the spider, a web so fine and thin?
Can you lift a shadow from off the ground?
Can you see the wind, or measure a sound?
Can you blow a bubble that will not burst?
Can you talk with echo and not speak first?

O, my dear little boy! you are clever and strong,
And you are so busy the whole day long,
Trying as hard as a little boy can
To do big things like a "grown up" man!
Look at me, darling! I tell you true,
There are some things you can never do.

—St. Nicholas.

Teddy's Pocket.

BY MARION A. BROWNE.

Teddy was having a new dress made, and his mamma was making it very nicely, because it was to be his last. He had been growing very fast lately, and everybody said that such a tall boy ought to have pants, and that it was a shame to make him another dress.

"He is getting rather tall," mamma had said, "but if I put pants on him it will only be a little while until I must send him to school, and then, before I know it, he will be a man, and mine no longer. I guess I'll make him this one dress, and keep him a baby a little longer."

So she made it very nicely, as I said before, trimming it with bands of bright plaid and rows of shining buttons, and that it might be complete throughout, she put a pocket in it. A great, deep pocket it was, reaching almost to the bottom of his skirt, and with room enough for the top and marbles and other things which a boy usually carries around with him. When it was finished mamma washed his face and curled his hair, put it on him, and then sent him to grandma to be inspected. Grandma adjusted her glasses and looked him carefully over.

"Well, now, that's what I call a nice dress. Good cloth, too,"—rubbing a fold of it in her fingers—"and, as I live a pocket!"

Teddy's face grew red with gratified pride. "I should say there was! Just look here!" and he plunged a little fat arm into its depths, that she might see how large it was.

"Now, grandma, I want you to let me know when you need anything, and I'll bring it to you in my pocket. I can carry everything but coal, and I could do that if mamma would let me, and it wasn't so dirty."

Grandma smiled lovingly at him. "We'll manage the coal some other way, I guess; but you shall have all the rest of my work, and I don't doubt but that the pocket will be as useful to me as to you."

And so it proved. Almost every day grandma's work-basket received an addition to its contents. Sometimes it was an apple, or a cake; sometimes thread or buttons; oftener some toy of which he had grown tired and deposited in that safest of all safe places, until he should want it again.

"That pocket is almost as useful as the market-basket," grandma had said one day, and Teddy's pride waxed stronger and stronger.

One day when grandma was finishing off a stocking her yarn gave out.

"Oh, dear," she sighed, looking at the toe-less stocking, "if it had only held out for a few more rounds! But I can't do anything but wait until your mamma comes to get me some more."

"Why can't I go?" said Teddy, "Mamma often sends me. She always sends a note, but if you tell me real plain, I think I'll not forget."

Grandma thought a moment; then folded a bit of the yarn and some money up in a piece of paper and gave it to Teddy, saying:

"You give that to Mr. Smith, and tell him to give you one cut of yarn. There will be some change coming, and you must put it carefully in your pocket and not take it out until you get home."

"All right, ma'am," and Teddy ran off feeling that he must be getting to be a man real fast, when he could be sent to the store without a note. He stated his errand distinctly, got his little paper parcel, and watched with sharp eyes while Mr. Smith counted out the change.

"Ten—twenty—one! There it is, my son!" and Mr. Smith smiled down on him very pleasantly, as he held the door open for him to pass ont. Teddy put the money—two silver pieces and a bright new cent,—carefully in his pocket and started homeward. Presently he put his hand in his pocket, and gave the money a rattle, to be sure that he had not lost any of it.

"It's all there yet! And how pretty it sounds! It must be the cent that makes so much noise. I wish grandma would give it to me. May be she will. She always gives me something, when I do anything for her, but it is cakes or apples or something to play with. I would rather have this cent than any thing else."

And with his heart full of covetous thoughts, he went on, nearly passing his own gate without knowing it, much to the surprise of his grandma, who chanced to be looking out of the window.

"You got back all right?" she said anxiously as soon as he came in.

"Yes ma'am! Here's your yarn, and here's your money," drawing out a silver piece and laying it on the table, then another.

"Ten—twenty—that's right. I was afraid you had lost it, but I suppose you ran so fast going there, that you were tired out coming back. Now, I think, if you go to the kitchen you will find that mamma has something nice for you."

Not a word about the cent! Then of course she meant him to have it. And with a lighter heart, Teddy ran off to the kitchen to get one of the cakes, full of plump raisins, which his mamma always made, because he liked them better than any other kind. But by the time the cake had been eaten, disturbing thoughts began to arise in Teddy's mind. He knew that he had no right to the cent, and that he ought to give it to grandma and tell her all about it. But he didn't like to do it, for he knew how shocked she would be, and his mamma too. And so, very quietly and miserable, he sat down in his little chair at one side of the fire until it was time to go to bed.

"I don't believe that boy is well," said grandma after he had gone up stairs.

"It's the cake, I think. I made it rather richer than usual," said his mother.

Meantime, Teddy had gone to bed without saying his prayers, something he had never done before. When he was undressing he put his hand in his pocket to see if the cent was still there. Yes, there it was, down in the farthest corner, as though it meant to stay there. He couldn't pray after that, so dropping his dress in a little heap on the floor, he jumped into bed, drew the covers over his head, and tried to sleep. But sleep does not come readily when conscience is not clear, so poor Teddy tossed, and turned, and was more wide awake than ever. To make it worse, he imagined he heard a voice say:

"Teddy, where is grandma's cent? Take it back to her, and tell her all about it."

Then Teddy remembered with a shiver of terror, that God who was everywhere, must be in the room with him and—the cent. That thought was too much for him. Trembling all over, he sprang out of bed, seized his dress, and almost flew down stairs and into the sitting-room where mamma and grandma were having a quiet little talk before going to bed.

"There, grandma," he said, turning his pocket inside out in her lap, "there's your cent! I made myself believe that you wanted me to keep it, 'cause I went for the yarn. But you didn't, for you didn't know I had it. I stole it, grandma, and I don't believe you ever can forgive me;" and then, folded in grandma's loving arms, he told the whole story, and they all cried together.

When Teddy went back to bed. He felt so much better that he soon went to sleep. Grandma had forgiven him, and he asked God to forgive him and believed that he had. Then his mamma had talked a long time to him, showing him what he had done, and what it would lead to if persisted in. Grandma gave him back the cent next day and told him to keep it in his pocket, so that he might never forget how he had yielded to temptation.

But Teddy's love for his dress and his pride in his pocket were all gone, and no one, not even his mamma, knew how glad he was when, grown to short and tight, it was folded up and laid away, with that dreadful cent still in the depths of its pocket, and he stood arrayed in coat and pants, whose pockets had never held anything that was not really and truly his own.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Professor's Chair.

THE FLOWERS AND THE INSECTS.

The blossom of a plant is not merely an ornament. It has really a great work to do; and if you can patiently wait while we take a flower to pieces you will be rewarded by an ability to understand the curious and beautiful things we shall find in this most delightful study.

A perfect flower (some of our most beautiful flowers are imperfect) consists of calyx, corolla, stamens and pistils. The calyx, which means "flower cup," is generally green and leaf-like, and is the very outer covering. Sometimes it is quite prominent, and is very noticeable, as on a wild rose-bud; but on many flowers it is very small. The divisions or leaves of the calyx are called sepals.

The corolla is the inner cup, or set of leaves; it is more delicate than the calyx, and is usually of some bright color—the most showy part of the blossom. Its leaves are called petals, and in double flowers they are multiplied many times the original or natural number. It is rather sad to think that our beautiful roses by becoming double lose all their useful qualities, and, however fine and magnificent the blossom may be to the eye of the florist, it is an imperfect and useless flower to the botanist. For these outer coverings, the calyx and the corolla, are intended only for the protection of the essential parts, which are the stamens and pistils. The stamens, each of which consists of two parts, a filament and an anther, are just inside this covering. They are often many in number, sometimes even a hundred, though one is sometimes enough, and the commonest number is five. The filament is simply the stalk which supports the anther. The anther is the little but very important body which holds the small, yellow, dust-like pollen. Be careful to remember this.

In the very centre of the flower, often in a very conspicuous manner, stands the pistil. Here the seeds are formed. Down at the bottom, though it may be too small for you to see it, is the ovary, which after awhile grows to be the seed vessel. From the ovary rises a slender little body called the style, on the end of which is a moist rough surface, sometimes a little enlarged, called the stigma. The formation of the seed depends in some mysterious manner upon the simple sticking fast to this stigma of some of the pollen from the stamen. Thus you see the pistil is the most important part of the flower.

These are all the organs which any flower has; many flowers have not all. As you proceed in the study of botany you will find how very curious this variation is. In order to prepare you for the thorough enjoyment of the flowers we shall look at together, please impress on your mind the names and the uses of these four things: the calyx, the corolla, the stamens and the pistils, and then, having finished this rather long and perhaps a little tedious lesson, we will make a little use of it.

Studying the flowers is like shooting a wild bird on the wing. They change so rapidly and follow each other in such quick succession that Mr. Thoreau used to say he needed no other calendar to tell the day of the month than the flowers. Though this was not literally true, it was not so far from the truth as careless observers would suppose. It is already much too late in the summer to find some of the flowers I would like to show you. But those in bloom in the late summer and till frost comes are as many and as interesting as the flowers of spring.

One of the most curious things in plant life is the part which bees and other insects play in helping flowers perfect the seed. No seed can grow, remember, until pollen from the stamens of the flowers has been carried to the pistil. It is pretty certain, too, that the seeds grow better when the pollen comes from the blossom of another plant of the same species. Bees that suck honey from flower after flower are made useful in carrying pollen from one to another. And a multitude of other insects do the same thing.

If it were earlier in the season we should find the little Houstonia covering whole hillsides with its delicate blueish blossoms. In a very simple way it secures the carrying of pollen from one plant to another. On part of the plants the stamens are higher than the pistil, while on the rest they are lower than the pistil. An insect entering the first kind after honey gets pollen grains on his back. Entering the second kind he gets the pollen on his head. As he goes to other blossoms this pollen from the first kind will touch the pistils of the second kind and no other, while the pollen of the second kind will touch only the pistils of the first kind. There is a much similar arrangement for "cross-fertilization" in some of the primrose family, the phlox family, and others.

The flowers of the orchid family are among the most attractive to be found in July and August. They are inclined to hide away in shady and wet places, but their peculiar forms and brilliant colors repay one for much searching. Still more interesting are their elaborate provisions for compelling insects that come after honey to pay their score by carrying pollen from one plant to another. The orchid will not be cheated by moth or bee. They produce but little pollen, and have this little packed in two pouches with slender handles. Those reach to the entrance of the honey-bag and each ends in a sticking plaster. When Sir Moth is done with the honey, and backs out of the flower, the two pouches of pollen are fastened above his eyes like horns. In a minute or two they wilt and hang down before his face in the right position to touch the pistil of the next flower he visits. By inserting a small stick into an orchie blossom, as a moth would put in his head, you may draw out the pollen pouches on the end of the stick, unless some insect has been in before you and already removed them.

Many more such devices are to be found in studying the flowers and new ones are discovered every year. Each example of the kind is one more illustration of how the Lord lets nothing live for itself alone. The insect eats the flower's honey but it carries the flower's pollen. So everything is made in some way to serve the good of others.—Christian Union.

What Thomas Carlyle Thinks of Darwinism.

Carlyle is now very feeble through age, but his memory is still marvelous, and the flow of his talk—doubtless the most eloquent of the age—is unabated. Take this as a sample:

"I have known three generations of the Darwins, grandfather, father and son; atheists all. The brother of the present famous naturalist, a quiet man who lives not far from here, told me that among his grandfather's effects he found a seal engraved with this legend: 'Omnia ex conchis;' everything from a clam shell! I saw the naturalist not many months ago; told him I had read his 'Origin of Species,' and other books; that he had by no means satisfied me that men were descended from monkeys, but had gone far toward persuading me that he and his so-called scientific brethren had brought the present generation of Englishmen very near to monkeys.

"A good sort of a man was this Darwin, and well-meaning, but with very little intellect. Ah, it's a sad and terrible thing to see nigh a whole generation of men and women professing to be cultivated, looking around in purblind fashion, and finding no God in the universe. I suppose it is a reaction from the reign of cant and hollow pretence, professing to believe what in fact they do not believe. And this is what we have got to. All things from frog spawn: the gospel of dirt the order of the day. The older I grow—and now I stand upon the brink of eternity—the more come back to me the sentences in the catechism, which I learned when a child, and the fuller and deeper the meaning becomes. 'What is the chief end of man?' 'To glorify God and enjoy Him forever.' No gospel of dirt, teaching that men have descended from frogs through monkeys, can ever set that aside."—Exchange.

The Verb "To Break."

An educational journal thus describes the trouble a Frenchman had with the verb "break":

"I begin to understand your language better," said my French friend, Mr. Dubois, to me, "but your verbe trouble me still; you mix them up so with prepositions.'

"I am sorry you find them so troublesome," was all I could say.

"I saw your friend, Mrs. Murkeson, just now," he continued. 'She says she intends to break down housekeeping; am I right there?"

"Break up housekeeping, she must have said."

"Oh, yes, I remember; break up housekeeping."

"Why does she do that?" I asked.

"Because her health is broken into."

"Broken down."

"Broken down? Oh, yes. And, indeed, since the smallpox has broken up in our city"—

"Broken out."

"She thinks she will leave it for a few weeks."

"Will she leave her house alone?"

"No, she is afraid it will be broken—broken—how do I say that?"

"Broken into."

"Certainly, it is what I meant to say."

"Is her son to be married soon?"

"No, that engagement is broken—broken"—

"Broken off?"

"Yes, broken off."

"Ah, I had not heard that."

"She is very sorry about it. Her son only broke the news down to her last week. Am I right? I am anxious to speak English well."

"He merely broke the news; no preposition this time."

"It is hard to understand. That young man, her son, is a fine young fellow—a breaker, I think."

"A broker, and a very fine young fellow. Good day."

Bismarck's Home Life.

Bismarck is noted for his love for his wife and children. Only four women, it is said, have ever had any influence with him—his mother, his sister, his wife, and his daughter. Toward his wife his behavior is that of chivalrous tenderness. One instance of this delicate consideration is told. It occurred a few minutes after Julius Blind tried to shoot him.

It was in 1866. Bismarck (then Count Bismarck) was returning from the palace, where he had been to see the king. While passing through the large street of Berlin called Unter den Linden, and quite near the place where Hoedel and Nobiling have since attempted the life of Emperor William, he suddenly heard a shot fired behind him. He turned sharply round and saw a young man who, with smoking revolver, was aiming at him. He strode at once up to the man and seized the arm that held the revolver, while with his other hand he grasped the throat of the would-be murderer.

Blind, however, had time to pass his weapon on to his left hand, and now fired three shots in quick succession. Bismarck felt himself hurt in his shoulder and in one of his ribs; but he held his furious assailant fast till some soldiers came up and took hold of him.

Then Bismarck walked home at a brisk pace, and reached his own house long before anybody there could know what had happened. The countess had some friends with her when her husband entered the drawing-room.

He greeted all in a friendly manner, and begged to be excused for a few minutes, as he had some urgent business to attend to.

He then walked into the next room, where his desk stood, and wrote to inform the king of the accident.

Having attended to this duty, he returned to drawing-room and made one of his little standing, jokes ignoring his own unpunctuality, and saying to his wife:

"Well, are we to have no dinner to-day? You always keep me waiting."

He sat down and partook heartily of the dishes set before him; and it was only when the dinner was over that he walked up to the countess, kissed her on the forehead, wished her in the old German way, "Gesegnete Mahlzeit!" (May your meal be blessed!) and then added:

"You see I am quite well."

She looked up at him.

"Well," he continued, "you must not be anxious, my Child—somebody has fired at me; but it is nothing, as you see."—Southwestern Presbyterian.

STATE NEWS.

Diphtheria is again spreading in certain sections of the State.

Napoleon Bonoparte Taylor, charged with the murder of — Sewel, in Moore county, escaped from prison Friday night, 10th inst.

A negro by the name of Joe Davis, who stole the lamp from the Presbyterian church at Rocky Mount, was convicted at Nash court and sentenced to three years in the penitentiary.—Toisnot Home.

Cotton is opening unusually rapidly this season. Mr. W. M. Parker has already housed six bales of 500 pounds each from a field of twelve acres. We think a parallel case has never before been seen in Lenoir. A half bale per acre gathered by September 11th.—Kinston Journal.

We learn that our townsman, Mr. Samuel A. Hilton, has just returned from the North with the necessary machinery and fixtures for the erection of a broom factory, which he proposes to put in operation as soon as a suitable structure can be erected.—Newbernian.

Mr. Jesse P. Goodwin, residing on Cedar Island, Carteret county, died recently, in the 70th year of his age.

The outlook was never brighter than now for prosperity among our people. Every branch of business will share it. The increase of currency and abundant promise of the crops betoken a bright future. It behooves all active enterprising men to place themselves and their business prominently before the people. The sight of various departments of commercial labor in active operation will be an admirable method of display before the thousands assembled at our State fair. Let all our men of enterprise see that they are represented in the procession.—News & Observer.

The act of unveiling the statue commemorative of the King's mountain centuary, Oct. 7, will be performed by four young ladies, one from each of the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee, to be selected and supported by the respective Governors of those States.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE PLEASURES OF HOPE.

When the body is bowed with pain an intense longing for relief brings hope. This may brighten the sufferer, but it does not cure. At a time like this how welcome is such a friend as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, bringing hope, health and happiness and the joys of a renewed life.

LETTER FROM SIAM.

FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

RAKANG, NORTH SIAM, June, 1880.

My Dear Friends: It is not always in our mission towns or new station that we find literally a waiting people. Such seems really to have been the case here. I mentioned in my last letter that we had one applicant for admission at our last communion. His name is Saan Ootawa, an ex-officer of low rank, about sixty-four years old, now released from government work. He had been almost overcome by trouble. On the death of his first wife his grief was so intense that he settled down into a state of mental depression that threatened to dethrone his reason. From this he recovered, and a second marriage was unhappy. For sterling integrity he stands among the highest citizens. He has been one of the most devoted of Buddhist worshipers. He had been in the priesthood when a young man, and two or three years ago, at one time, he had all his yellow robes dyed to enter the sacred cloister again. He was forbidden to do so by the Governor, for which he is now very grateful. See how God has a tender care over his people, leading them to his service by hedging up their way with thorns and preparing them for it. Gamaliel, you know, was one of Paul's theological professors who prepared him in part for his great life work. Saan Ootawa's life of trouble and unsatisfied search for peace and comfort elsewhere, had been his preparation for the one great joy, the glad tidings to all people. Rest for the weary, peace for the wounded conscience, pardon for the guilty! It was reserved to the Gospel to bring the greatest boon to him, as it has to millions before him. It was the one feature of the Gospel which struck his mind from the first day we met him. The joyful sound of pardon! I have never seen a convert from heathenism, and seldom one in a Christian land, on whose mind the one word had more effect. It is now oftener than any other on his lips. "In all my teaching from all my teachers, I had never heard of the idea or the word gratuitous pardon." From the first week he was the only one who came in regularly to daily morning and evening prayer, as well as to all our Sabbath services. He is one of our nearest neighbors, and has been at our service to aid us in any way he could. He invites his friends to attend worship, and accompanies me in my visits, which is a great advantage. His only daughter is a girl of sixteen or seventeen years old, for the loss of whose mother he grieved so much. He has pleaded with her to consent to go to the female school at Chingmai, but she has been wooed and won by a lover, and has other plans and thoughts. On her mother's death she was in part taken by near relatives, spending the day with her father and the nights at her other home. So the father has had reluctantly to consent to plans formed by others. We expect, Providence permitting, to admit him to communion the first Sabbath in July.

There is another believer, at the other extreme of life—32 years of age—the son-in-law of the one who has been the chief business officer of the place. The position of a son-in-law among the Loos is often at best precarious, particularly where the wife is of higher rank than the husband. His course is not so clear, as he thinks a public profession might endanger his family relations and cause his separation from his wife and children But his seeking for the truth has been so evidently without guile and with so much honesty, that I believe he will overcome all opposition.

We ask for both these cases special prayer.

Besides these, others are known to be more or less interested in our doctrine, though it would be premature to refer to them. The fact is becoming more and more evident that Buddhism is like a leaning wall and a tottering fence. Dagon is literally falling before the ark of the Lord. The confession is more and more feelingly made by all, that with all their rigid routine of merit-making they are left without a single ray of light or hope of pardon—"Tan boon tan pain" (according to your merit or demerit). Or a more favorite expression of the Loos—"Boon paw boon, bap paw bap" (your merit for itself and demerit for itself). There can be no conceding the one by the other, much less the demerit by the merit of another. That is such a violent assuption that it could never enter into a Buddhist mind from his own teachings. Do my young readers rejoice that the very A B C of Christianity is better than the highest degrees of all false religions? What think you of Christ? Does it never occur to any of you that it is your duty and would become your highest pleasure to preach the Gospel to the heathen? I can testify that alone here in a heathen city I have been very happy, and rejoice that I was led to stop here. I have with me one faithful brother, who is pursuing his studies preparatory for the ministry under my care. He is one of the newly ordained elders in the Chingmai church, and though a young man is as thoroughly reliable as Naw Intas, which is as high a commendation as we can pronounce on him. Besides him, my cook is a church member. So we have a regular church here, though not regularly organized. We hope the day is not distant when the "Church of Rakang" will take its place on our roll, and when the little one shall become a thousand. May the Lord hasten it in his day.

Did I mention to you the ordination of four elders and two deacons, the last Sabbath before leaving Chingmai? There are now five elders and three deacons. Good men they are and true, and others might have been selected of like stamp. Our last news from the church there is very encouraging. Between December 24th and our latest dates thirty-two adult members and about twenty children had been baptized, making a membership of eighty adults. Mr. Wilson had been invited to hold a communion in a village near to Nan Inta's, where twelve adults and eight children were baptized, almost if not entirely the result of native effort.

I have forgotten, too, whether I have mentioned the man who had just turned up after ten or eleven years of wandering to escape death at the time of the martyrdom. Even if I did, it is worthy of repetition. He was the very first who had manifested any interest in our teachings the first year we arrived in Chingmai. He had been a believer but had not been baptized. The day the order was given to arrest the Christians, a friend had given him the hint and advised him to flee for his life, or as it was inigmatically expressed, from his house, that would be burned over him. Stepping to bid us good-bye, we were not in, and he had as he thought no time to loose. Without taking time to bid farewell to his young wife, as his house was in the country, he made his way up to the North of Laos, thence to North Bumaha, thence down in the Loos States to the east. Passing by Chingmai, and still afraid to stop, he went to Mewhneim, and thence down to Rakang. Here he learned that I had gone to the United States in 1873. He made his living from one city to another till about the time of the proclamation of religious toleration, when he returned to find that he need fear no more. His young wife had not been married again, and his daughter that he had never seen was nine or ten years old. He had kept with him in all his wanderings his copy of the Gospel of Matthew, in Siamese, translated by Dr. Mattoon, which he had begun to study. He had wellnigh forgotten all he knew of it, but it was still his precious treasure, and he never forgot his daily prayer for deliverance. Though he was an exile for conscience sake, he never regretted his sufferings nor blamed his teachers as the cause of them. He has since been baptized, and his baptism has been the means of leading many of the others to take their stand for Christ. How many, better instructed than he had been, would under similar circumstances have cast away their Matthew as the cause of all their trouble, and with it their confession of faith. Truly truth is often stronger than fiction. Besides the thirty-two admitted to the communion others were interested who have probably joined before this time, giving it, I trust, the largest membership of any church connected with our presbytery. But the news of this awakening and ingathering only strengthens my conviction that the time has come for lengthening our cords as well as strengthening our stakes. It would be pleasant to be there. I love its members almost as I love my own life. Few pastors have known more of the religious experience of a charge from its organization till it had grown to fifty. One of the last mails brought about twenty letters from its members one-half in Lianere and one half in Laos. The assurance of their interest in me and my family's welfare was most pleasant. But they need to be taught that they are to make self-denials for their people. Some of the missionaries and members think it was premature to move again so soon. I do not so see it. On the contrary I believe it is the best way to interest them in themselves to get them to feel an interest in others. There is that withholdeth more than is meet yet teudest to poverty. That is the lesson that the old and the young at home and abroad have to learn. Our work here has been progressing as we have prayed it might, mainly through native agency. In all mission fields this should be the one great object, to raise up a native ministry, particularly in distant fields of difficult access like ours. A native ministry and a working church should be our motto.

Just as I am writing I have received the news of a terrible accident in Bangkok. You may have heard that the young king had decided on a grand European tour, visiting all the capitols of Europe and thence to the United States, to be absent several months. While in Bangkok I had an audience with his majesty in company with the United States Consul and two or three other American citizens when that tour was the one subject of conversation, giving us the whole details of his plan. From other sources we learn that one object of the tour was to take his favorite princess wife and have her crowned or at least recognized as queen in England by Queen Victoria. I mention these as introductory to the sad news that I am about to relate. The king was going on an excursion down to the bar with three or four strangers. The princess and her daughter were in a small boat in tow by one of the steamers. It is sad the steamers began to race when one of them ran against the princess's boat and capsized it, drowning her and her daughter and two others. The bodies were soon recovered but too late to restore life. What a commentary on human greatness and the uncertainty of life and the brightest earthly hopes. The young king is completely crushed by the stroke. I should have stated before, that the European tour had been abandoned this year and the minister of Foreign Affairs, our old and true friend while at Petchaburi has been sent as a special embassador to London. The object of that embassy is said to be, to confer on Queen Victoria the order of the white elephant and to ratify a new treaty with England. I wish his plan included a trip to the United States. He is the one Siamese officer above all others that we would love to show as a speciman of a gentleman and a statesman. But the young king is a man to be proud of. And it would have been nice if they had carried out their original plan and both had gone. How much both the minister with his cares and the young king in his afflictions need the prayers of the church while for the former I would ask for them as the very best friend I have ever had among the Siamese. I think the young queen as she was to be called was a half sister of the young king as well.

Another item of news that will interest some of your readers is that the new English Consul to Chingmai. The incumbent will be either Mr. Gould or Mr. French from the English consulate in Bangkok. And probably no one subject connected with the mission work there, needs more prayer than that appointment, that it may aid and not hinder the mission work. You will see that from my central position I have taken a wider range than usual, but many good wishes to my young readers as well as the old and my prayer that you may all take the deepest interest in the mission as well as every other good cause. I am yours, &c., D. McG.

ADDRESS OF G. A. WILSON, M. D.,

Delivered Before the Presbyterian Union, Shiloh Church, August 28th.

OBSTACLES TO GROWTH OF PRESBYTERIANISM.

It is the duty of the Presbyterian preacher to preach the summary of doctrine contained in the confession he has espoused; and this brings us to the consideration of the second cause, viz: that our doctrines are egregiously misrepresented and misunderstood.

We believe "that all that is evil in man is of himself, and to him belongs the blame of it, and all that is good in him is of God, and to Him belongs the praise of it." We teach that man is a free moral agent, and on this hinges his responsibility. It is the doctrine of the Bible and the commonest self-consciousness. Any man pretending to be driven on by an occult, imperious necessity beyond the power of his will is universally regarded either as dishonest or as a fit subject for the bars and bolts of an asylum for the insane. Freedom of the will is the doctrine of our standards. The burden of our pulpits, the refrain of our sacred songs unite in the sentiment, "Ye will not come unto Me, that ye might have life." And right by the side of this we place the doctrines of God's eternal decrees and purposes, and the effectual calling and final perseverance of his saints. We place them there because we find them in the Bible. We adopt them and transcribe them in the very language of the sacred texts, verbis ipsissimis.

We place a personal God on the throne of sovereignty in all the domain of His creation, material and spiritual. He is in the atom that floats in the sunbeam, and the revolutions of systems of worlds in their orbits, giving potency to the laws He has impressed upon them. He is the Maker and Father of our spirits and directs all the events of our lives: "He worketh all things after the counsel of His own will," "He ordains whatsoever comes to pass, yet so that thereby He is neither the author of sin, nor is violence offered to the will of the creatures nor the liberty or contingency of second causes taken away but rather established." He is the same sovereign God in the joys of the redeemed and the wails of the lost. "Nor is violence offered to the will of the creature." But we mortals cannot span the infinite with our hand's breadth, or measure infinitude with finite minds. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine and instruction in righteousness." The doctrine of the Trinity is not more comprehensible: Three are one, one is three, are propositions not less foreign to our modes of thoughts, yet we receive the doctrine of the Blessed Trinity. We do not pretend to be able to adapt and reconcile the doctrine of God's sovereignty and man's free agency to the digestion of finite minds. But this we believe: that God, being almighty because He is almighty, can and does overrule all events, and executes His decrees and purposes with the children of men without touching man's free agency. We teach this in our confession, nothing more, nothing less.

Because we cannot see the hows and wherefores, shall we reject these deep things of the mysteries of God? Can man, with his three cubits of stature, fathom the ocean of divine truth? When, as children, we loiter on its beach, shall we reject the precious pearls cast up at our feet because we cannot dive its depth to trace their origin and relation? Wait, oh! wait, presumptuous man until these mortal films are removed from the eye of faith, and then when you see Him as He is you shall see the harmony and symmetry and beauty of His truth.

Not only are these doctrines of our Church taught directly or by implication by each of the inspired authors of the New Testament, but all through the Old Testament history, in the leading characters and events of both Testaments. We see the doctrine taught and illustrated that God has and does work out His delights and purposes without constraining the will of His creatures. Profane history teaches the same truth, and honest intelligence must inevitably arrive at the confession that there is a ruling power above us, "a divinity within us which shapes our ends, rough hew them as we may."

But there are objections to the doctrines of our Confession of Faith. It is claimed that these doctrines lead by logical necessity to a stern fatalism. We disavow these so-called logical deductions, but they are iterated and reiterated. In vain we exhibit proof and evidence of the falsity of these logical deductions. In vain we cry out, "Mr. Objecter, we are not responsible for your logical deductions; they are no part of our creed; you make a hideous caricature of our faith, and write our names under it." And still these logical deductions are persistently adhered to and exhibited in all their shades and colors from the pulpit and the press, and along the wayside, until the outside world and ninety-nine hundredths, ninety-nine and three-quarter hundredths of all the good people of the American Churches really believe that we Presbyterians preach the doctrines of a stark, stern, benumbing, inevitable fatality: If you are going to be saved you will be saved, and if you are going to be lost you will be lost. To all practical purposes, as far as the world is concerned, these logical deductions are interpolated into our Confession (our protests to the contrary notwithstanding) and we are held responsible for them. Mothers are warned not to let their children come in contact with the dangerous doctrine of the Presbyterian Confession and Catechism. The young convert is armed with these logical deductions as the best armor with which to fight the Christian warfare. In vain we plead that a man's faith is one thing and the inferences which cavilers may draw from it is quite another thing. In vain we point to the facts that our people are as diligent in the use of the appointed means of grace as others; that our Church is working with energy in all Christian enterprizes; that the bones of our missionaries are bleaching in the sands of every fetid jungle of heathendom, thus proving that our faith does not cut the nerves of spiritual exertion. Still we are held to the logical deductions, and are teachers of fatalism!

It is easy to see, Mr. President, how a bias is made against us by such misrepresentations as these. In this manner I believe thousands are annually turned away from our Church. If one of our ministers in his own pulpit discuss these topics and labor to throw off these damaging imputations, offense is taken: he is endangering the bonds of Christian brotherhood, and interrupting the flow of Christian sympathy. He has submitted to misrepresentation so long and so good humoredly that the statutes of limitation are plead upon him.

Perhaps, sir, I have not the charity I ought to have, but when I see the unwillingness which is manifested by some to see these errors in regard to us removed I can't help believing that their opposition to our doctrines is not prompted by a pure love for the truth of God, but standing, themselves, on a meagre and shallow body of divinity, they are constrained to these resorts by the necessities of denominational thrift. Sir, if I were a Presbyterian preacher, as I am a man, I would make the welkin ring in efforts to dissipate these misrepresentations, these logical deductions, the mere figments of partisan brains.

But, sir, let us turn for a moment to the theology of these objectors to our doctrines. Press it in one direction and the logical deduction leads through an invasion of God's essential attributes to the dreary regions of atheism (Clarke, on the omniscience of God). Press again, and the logical deduction squints as decidedly to the heresy that man is the author of his own salvation, can convert himself at his pleasure, as ours squints to the standpoint of the fatalist. Satan, alas! has inveigled many a soul in both of these snares. Fatalism is the philosophy of the Stoic, and many a richly freighted bark has stranded on this rock. But man's ability, with its procrastinations, presents its million of wrecks. But suppose our church were to inaugurate a crusade and teach through its pulpit and press that all the American churches taught the soul destroying inferences and deductions from their theology. What a commotion we would stir up! With the oft repeated disavowels, and the evidence adduced; if the objections to our doctrines, were really influenced by pure zeal for the truth of God and love for the souls of men, they would rejoice in turning away the slanders from us, rather than bolster up the impenitent in his stronghold of unbelief, by teaching him that he stands on the same ground with the great body of good and learned men, who from the dawn of Christianity have been thoroughly assimilated to our faith. To an ingenuous, not to say a pious mind, it looks so. I hold sir, that it is the duty of our pastors to preach the doctrines of our faith in all their length and breadth and depth, as our only antidote for these misrepresentations of our doctrines. I feel constrained to say that they have come short of their duty in this respect. Many even of our membership are not as conversant as they ought to be with the sure foundations of our faith. There has been so much noise and confusion—so much clatter, and dust, from the objectors—and so little, in reply from us that some are as tenderfooted about our tenets, as if there was a real skeleton in our closet.

If the mind intelligently—I say intelligently—admits the proposition that God overrules in all things, it admits all we teach. Let the objector controvert as he may—when he bows in prayer—if he "acknowledges his weakness and depravity, disclaims all merit, confesses his multiplied sins, adores the sovereign unmerited mercy of God, ascribes to His grace every good desire and hope, glorifies His universal government over all His creatures and all their actions; and ascribes the plan, the execution and consumation, of that deliverance, for which he hopes to the sovereign, undeserved grace of God abounding through the redemption, that is in Jesus Christ?" if he prays this prayer, (I dare him to offer any other) he prays the whole essence of our doctrines.

But, sir, if your historic old church were a mere human institution, conserving only the temporal interests of man, it has done enough to kindle the pride and enlist the loyal devotion of all her son's. Wherever her doctrines have prevailed law, order, industry, thrift, official faithfulness, purety of private life, domestic peace has been the rule. Look to Scotland and then across the channel. In all the struggles of civil freedom she has made a noble record, and transmitted a rich heritage of renown. She has imparted purity to patriotism and integrity to statesmanship, dignity to sound learning and true science, and garnished the walks of polite literature with many of its rarest and most beautiful flowers. She has elevated the aims of true heroism, and bound additional laurels to the brow of the soldier—said an irreligious subordinate of Stonewall Jackson, "the great achievements of Jackson cannot be ascribed to his military genius. It was his strong religious faith and convictions, he thought he was predestined to do what he did, he thought his God was not ten feet from him, and was all the time talking to him, he worked with prodigious energy, and imparted his energy to others around him."

But it is in the spiritual and eternal that our church has conferred the greatest and most precious boons upon our race. All the great Reformers, and "witnesses for the truth were thoroughly saturated with her doctrines. Her sons have been ever foremost in the struggles for religious liberty, and for the purity of the faith, delivered principalities and powers and braved the faggot and the stake, men of whom the world was not worthy and who passed from the scenes of their earthly conflicts to a heavenly inheritage, having fought the good fight, and kept the faith.

But what myriads, in the private and humbler sphere of life have reposed upon her nurturing bosom. Earth-worms, they have been fed on spiritual food, the pure milk of the word, and thus having been made new creature have walked in "newness of life" and "the beauty of holiness." Sin-stricken, and covered with the wounds, and sores and scars of earth's conflicts, they have been healed and cleansed and purified, bowed with the sorrows and bereavements of earth's pilgrimage they have been raised by a loving hand, and all, all on our good old ship, have passed through the straits and quicksands of treacherous seas, until on the flood-tides of faith they were borne to their heavenly homes. And our good old ship, sir, is still ploughing the sea of time, whose impotant waves beat harmlessly against her sides—her timbers are staunch, her bulwarks strong, her compartments ample and she will bear myriads, more through storm and tempest, safe to the haven of eternal rest, because the great captain of our salvation is at the helm. Elders and deacons, this captain summons you as a trusty crew to your posts of duty.

PRAY FOR OUR PASTOR.

BY CARLEN.

"I only wish our minister were a more wide-awake Christian. He is good—so good that it seems as though he could never have had a doubt or a conflict in regard to his religion. One can sit passively under his preaching and say, 'yes, I believe.' He never stirs one's soul to its depths with a sense of sin or a need of battle."

Thus wrote a young friend to me recently in regard to her pastor in her new home in the far-west. And we hear daily, on every side, similar complaints about our spiritual guides to whom the right-minded desire to yield affectionate reverence.

"He lacks sociability; in fact, he never visits," complains one lively disciple. "Ours has no tact whatever, and certainly often fails in judgment," proclaims another; while a third asserts: "Our minister is proud, and cares only for the influential people in the congregation."

We may continue indefinitely our criticisms and lamentations, but, after all, there is but one grand remedy in the matter; pray for the pastor! Ask the Lord to "furnish him" for his work. The Lord is rich; He loves to give, and to none more than to the laborious ministers of His holy Word. All these prayers, dear friends, will return in blessings upon our own heads. Love will come into our carping hearts; it will kill our wide-eyed uncharitableness, and will soon enfold our poor derelict minister, that he too will gradually became warmer, more genial, and better furnished with needful gifts.

Besides, our pastor needs our prayers and our sympathies. Does he not often ask for them? It is no easy thing to be a faithful spiritual guide amidst the abounding worldliness of the nineteenth century. It benumbs sometimes, even the man of God; so that he too, like Paul, finds that when he would do good, evil is present with him.

Yes, our pastors are but human, born in sin as are their hearers; subject to trials of personal temperament, and sadly influenced by untoward surroundings.

Then, let us pray for them daily—let them be among the dear and cherished objects of prayer that come so frequently before the Throne of Grace; let us ask for them spiritual riches, and every gift that will fit them for their respective spheres of labor among us—their parishioners.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

FOUND OUT.

On the top of a hill was an orchard, and in one of the trees was a boy stealing apples; another boy was at the foot of the tree on the watch to see that nobody found them out. Nobody was near that they could see; but that did not prove that no one saw them, for seven miles off Professor Mitchell, the astronomer, was examining the setting sun with his telescope, and the hill happened to come within its range; the actions of the boys, the very tell-tale look on their faces attracted his notice. He saw what they were up to. He found them out. There was no escaping the great eye of his telescope looking full upon them. They little thought of such a thing.

But there was another eye upon them, a greater and a sharper eye, and the eye followed them. It was God's eye, and His eye is on us. It sees near, it sees afar off. It sees in the day, it sees in the night. It sees out of doors, it sees in doors. It sees our actions, it sees our hearts. It sees us, too, by name. Professor Mitchell did not know the boys. God knows.—Presbyterian.

WORKING WOMEN.

BY LUCY E. GREGG.

My friends, I've been thinking, and thinking again,
Of Jesus' commandment to women and men;
How plainly He bade us His Gospel proclaim,
To work in His vineyard and honor His name.

It came not from mortal, this binding command,
By infinite wisdom the great work was planned;
Then let us each try this command to fulfill,
By aiding the work with a hearty good will.

Both Lois and Eunice were workers I see;
Phebe was a servant, and so should we be;
Priscilla did her work, so should you and I—
The heathen send us Macedonia's cry.

Dorcas was commended for work in her day,
Frank Lydia oft met her companions to pray;
And Persis, who labored so much in the Lord,
With Paul is now reaping eternal reward.

God loveth the workers that in giving delight,
The widow was lauded for giving her mite;
And oft he requires us on others to wait,
Like vigilant Rhoda who stood at the gate.

Mary knew Jesus, though a Thomas could doubt,
Damaris was constant, if scoffers did scout;
And of the chief women, there were not a few
Who set good example for me and for you.

Christ said one meek woman had done what she could,
And this was accounted to her for good,
So, however humble our duty may be,
That is the right pathway for you and for me.

Oh, let us be women of consciences clear,
Let us pray for the love that casteth out fear,
Then working for Jesus will prove a delight,
The yoke is so easy, the burden so light.

—Herald and Presbyter.

THINGS SWEET AND PLEASANT.

Those things that are pleasant to us are generally good for us. We were taught somewhat differently when we were boys and girls, perhaps to save the contents of the sugar basin. We we were solemnly informed of dangers to teeth and stomach in the consumption of sweets. But negroes in the cane fields who eat large quantities of sugar do not spoil their teeth or stomachs in doing so. The things that are sweet and pleasant to the unsophisticated palate, and that our natural appetites desire, instead of being bad for us, are commonly good for us. You may take that as a safe general rule. Animals follow it, and we are animals in our material structure, and we do well to follow our instincts in this direction even as they do. Of course we are reasoning animals, and I must add that these instincts are consequently to be followed within rational limits.—The Human Body and its Functions.

WORDS TO THINK OF.

Work is no dishonor, and laziness is no credit to any one. It is good to have good wages; but half pay is better than nothing, and working for nothing is better than idleness and vice. There is no true manhood without independence. He whose individuality is swallowed up by fashion, folly, or society, has lost that which he may never regain, and without which his life must be a vain one. He who restrains himself from luxury may help others in necessity. He who helps others may look to God to help him. Difficulties are placed in our way that we may overcome them, and pass through conflicts to victories, and through victories to triumphs. Pride goes before destruction, but honor and nobleness and independence of soul, are approved of God, and are profitable to man.—Exchange.

CLIMB OR FALL?

What are you going to do, climb or fall? Tom Smith has made up his mind. He went down the street the other night with two ugly things in his mouth—an oath and a piece of tobacco. Tom is lazy and disorderly, out of bed late at night, and in bed late in the morning, loafing about the corners and shunning the house of God.

Charlie Smith is Tom's cousin; and he says he will climb. Charlie is studious at school, obedient at home, correct in his habits, loves the Sunday-school, and daily kneels at the feet of his Master. That boy is bound to climb. He will advance steadily from round to round in the ladder.—Morning Star.

INCONSISTENT CHRISTIANS.

The inconsistent lives of Christians, that is the trouble. Infidelity is holding high carnival all over the land, and the chief weapons which it wields in its remorseless assaults on our cherished hopes and beliefs is the contrast between the preaching and the practice of Christians, it is you, who profess to love the Lord, that by your un-Christlike manners give the sceptic and the scoffer occasion to point the finger of scorn at your Master. He is wounded in the house of his friends.—Central Presbyterian.

GOLD DUST.

Account him thy friend who desires thy good rather than thy good will.

Sorrow seems sent for our instruction, as we darken the cages of birds, when we would teach them to sing.—Richter.

He who is only just is cruel: Who
Upon the earth would live were all judged justly?
—Byron.

We are hanging up pictures every day about the chamber wall of our hearts that we shall have to look at when we sit in the shadows.

I very often think with sweetness, and longings and pantings of soul, of being a little child, taking hold of Christ, to be led by Him through the wilderness of this world.—Jonathan Edwards.

Surely one thing shall abide—
Midst the wreck of ages one—
Heaven's eternal Word alone!

The tree will not only lie as it falls, but it will fall as it leans. And the great question every one should bring home to him is, "What is the inclination of my soul? Does it, with all its affections and power, lean toward God, or away from him?"

Go and tell Jesus. In His wisdom He
All stores of solace. When rude gales increase,
Ask, and His love shall pour on passions high
The oil of peace.

Good resolutions are often like a loosely-tied cord—on the first strain of temptation they slip. They should be tied in a hard knot of prayer. And then they should be kept tight and firm by constant stretching Godward. If they slip or break, tie them again.—Evangelical Messenger.

A wise heathen said: "Every man carries two wallets with him, holding the one before and the other behind him. Into that before, he puts the faults of others; into that behind, he puts his own. By this means he never sees his own failings, while he has those of others always before him."

Labor is rest—from the sorrows that greet us,
Rest from all petty vexations that meet us,
Rest from sin-promptings that ever entreat us,
Rest from world-syrens that lure us to ill.
—Mrs Osgood.

Some well-meaning christians tremble for their salvation, because they have never gone through that valley of tears and of sorrow, which they have been taught to consider as an ordeal that must be passed through, before they can arrive at regeneration; to satisfy such minds, it may be observed that the slightest sorrow for sin is sufficient, if it produce amendment, and that the greatest is insufficient, if if it does not.—Colton.

Virtue, the strength and beauty of the soul,
Is the best gift of heaven: a happiness
That even above the smiles and frowns of fate
Exalts great nature's favorites; a wealth
That ne'er encumbers nor can be transferred.
—Armstrong.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

One hundred and forty-eight million copies of the Bible, translated into 226 different languages and dialects, constitute one of the achievements of foreign missions, within the last hundred years.

A Roman Catholic missionary at Canton has compiled a new Chinese alphabet, consisting of thirty-three letters, by means of which all the words which are now expressed by many thousands of symbols can be written.

Another native of New Zealand has been ordained by the Bishop of Auckland, which makes the thirty-seventh Maori addmitted to the ministry under the Church Missionary Society. All the thirty-seven are still laboring.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts has given a second donation of £100 to the funds of the Open Air Mission. A friend has promised £50 on condition that £500 is raised by special contributions to put the Mission on a better financial basis.

The Rev. A. H. Mackonochie, vicar of St. Alban's, Holborn, arrived in Toronto on August 18, and took part in the service at Holy Trinity, in that city, on the following Sunday. He is going to visit the United States, and it is thought may be present at the opening of the General Convention in October.

The village of Tarwin, near Chester, has been much excited of late by the vicar, the Rev. William Bryans, seizing and distraining upon the goods of an incoming tenant for arrears of tithes due from the outgoing tenant. The sheriff's officer distrained on a rick of hay, the property of Mr. Ellwood.

The French government repudiate the note recommended by the Vatican for the signature of the religious congregations, and declare in the official journal that no engagement has been made with the Vatican or any person with regard to the execution of the decrees against the congregations.

While the Salvation Army were on Sabbath night marching through the streets of Leeds to their place of worship they were attacked by a crowd of roughs and severely illtreated. Many were struck with stones, knocked down and kicked. At the police court on Monday three of the assailants were brought before the magistrates and fined.

The latest excitement in the Anglican Church is the discovery of certain schools called the "Woodard schools," in which the children are educated in the practices of Ritualism, brought so near to Rome that sharp eyes cannot detect the difference. One of the inscriptions in these schools reads thus: "To the Holy and Undivided Trinity and the Blessed Virgin, mother of God."

Messrs. Moody and Sankey have received a pressing invitation from England, amongst other places, urging them to return to that country for a winter campaign. The evangelists, according to the American journals, were undecided which invitation to take, but it was hardly expected that they would be induced to leave America at the present time.

Preaching at Benmore Castle, on the banks of the Clyde, whither he had gone for his holiday, the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon, in discoursing from Psalm lxxxix., 1—2, said, among other things—"That the psalmist's singing. Some people like to praise God by machinery. If they thought it was acceptable, let them go a-head; but he would praise God with his mouth, and make known His faithfulness to all generations. There was no doubt great sweetness obtained by heaving bellows, chords and strains; but it was the heart which made the music God accepted. Praise was recreation, not hard work. It was profitable; it lifted the heart up. Singing was a grand thing, though not to break the drums of people's ears. Deliverance was for them a stimulant to sing."

PRESBYTERIAN ALLIANCE.

Our readers will, perhaps deprive more pleasure from some general notes about the Alliance, than minute analysis of the able papers offered. We will give them a taste of the intelligent repast in another place in our columns, in extracts from the published reports. These papers are not authoritative expositions of the faith of the associated churches, in all the points discussed. But being prepared by men of great eminence, in positions of trust and honor in their several churches in various countries, they may be regarded as correct exhibitions of the beliefs of those churches, and—in the main—of the united faith of the whole body throughout the world. Especially is this true of such grand essays as those of Principal, Cairns of Edinburgh, and Professor A. A. Hodge of Princeton, on the Vicarious Sacrifice of Christ,

FREE DISCUSSIONS.

One of the most important features of the Council is the arrangement for free discussion of the topics presented by the selected essayists. Only five minutes are allowed to each speaker; thus a large number can express, dissent or assent, though the time is insufficient to elaborate any views. But as papers are discussed on the day after their delivery, and are then partially in print,' opportunity for arranging thoughts is secured for each speaker. Some of the finest and most valuable expositions of truth have been thus presented in condensed form, and with freedom of delivery by reason of the absence of manuscript. Pleasant and desirable acquaintances is thus obtained—for eye and ear—with the appearance, manner, voice and magnetic power of the most distinguished men in the Presbyterian world. Collision of views arouses. Any singular or unusual statement in any paper may be challenged or emphasized; and the Council may avoid the misfortune of being even apparently committed to any erroneous doctrines, or extravagant opinions, that may emerge.

SCIENCE AND THEOLOGY.

As might be anticipated, the relations of Revealed Religion and Science and Philosophy occupied an important position in the deliberations of the Council. Able papers were presented by Prof. Calderwood, of Edinburgh, Scotland; and by President McCosh of Princeton; and these were discussed by some of the foremost theologians and scientists of the age. Among these five minute speakers was Prof. S. Alexander, the astronomer and physicist of Princeton. It was made manifest that the lines of separation between these great domains of thought are distinct; that no antagonism exists between science and theology; but their testimony to eternal truth must emerge coincident at least. Distinguished scientists and most eminent psychologists and theologians concur in emphasizing the folly of fearing science in its legitimate work, and denouncing the affirmations of science and speculations of Spencer, Huxley and Darwin in the ignorant diatribes by those who neither have read the one nor have any fair conception of the other. All extremes should be avoided. Mistrust of creation and its secrets is mistrust of God, all whose works praise Him. Theology mistrusts the region of scientific inference. Science is founded on observed facts and bounded by facts, and has not tests beyond; no special revelation; neither have scientists any pre-emption of accuracy in logical speculation. Christianity does not forestate facts, and has no revealed system of science. So theology and science can and should maintain the closest and most friendly relations. This has been done by such men as Faraday, Henry, Agassiz and Brewster. We need to train Christian men for scientific investigations.

Earnest and valuable discussions have arisen about other subjects, to which we must refer next week; e. g.: the Eldership, Sabbath Schools, the Sabbath; Bible Revision, and especially on Prof. Flints paper on Agnosticism.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

We have been specially gratified at the stand the representatives of our church have maintained in this Council, and in the pulpits of the city. Dr. Witherspoon, of Petersburg, Va., read a noble paper on "Future Retribution;" and Dr. Jos. R. Wilson of Wilmington, N. C., on "Evangelists and Evangelistic Work." In the discussions a prominent and honorable stand has been taken by Dr. Geo. D. Armstrong of Norfolk, Va., Dr. Wm. M. Murkland of Baltimore, Md., and Dr. Wm. E. Boggs of Atlanta, Ga., Rev. M. H. Houston of Ky., and by Hon. Isaac D. Jones of Md., and Wm. P. Webb, Esq., of Ala., who is one of the presidents of the Council. Among those who filled the city pulpits on Sabbath were Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D., of Greensboro; Rev. L. C. Vass, of Newberu; Rev. Jos. R. Wilson, D. D., of Wilmington, all of the Synod of North Carolina, besides Dr. Wm. Brown of Va., Dr. Stillman of Md., and perhaps others of the Southern Church.

THOUGHTS SUGGESTED BY THE ADDRESS OF DR. WILSON.

This address, concluded in this week's paper, was sent to us for publication by elders E. W. Bullock, S. Watkins, Rev. J. W. Primrose, Mr. J. S. Amis and others, who solicited and obtained it from the author.

Some of our ministers may be guilty of criminal negligence in promiuently and intelligently presenting to their hearers, the distinguishing doctrines of the Presbyterian church but only against a few, we think, can this charge be justly prefered. A minister is sometimes at a loss, to determine what proportion of his preaching should be devoted to the setting forth of the doctrines of his church. As a general rule the proportion given to each doctrine in the word of God, will be a safe guide. We hold that nearly every, if not every, true gospel sermon will contain more or less Calvinism; for without it, the great system of salvation, cannot be presented in its fullness and completeness. Of course the wants of the congregation, to a great extent must guide the minister as to the doctrine which he will preach. Where error abounds, there error must be met. A congregation in which ignorance in regard to the doctrines of our Church prevails undoubtedly require that those doctrines be presented more frequently than a congregation better educated and enlightened.

A great deal has of late been said and written and published in regard to the obstacles to the growth of Presbyterianism, with some of which we have had no sympathy and did not endorse it. But after all the Presbyterian church continues to grow. It is still, as in the days of yore, a power in the land exercising a potent influence, for both the spiritual and material good of our people.

We believe that the greatest obstacle to the growth of Presbyterianism, is an obstacle that is not peculiar to the Presbyterian Church, but it is an obstacle in the way of the growth of all other churches. It is the want of godliness in our church members, too many of them have not that regard for truth and honesty which should characterize the Christian. To say nothing of the many clap-trap methods, now becoming so popular in many of our churches for raising money for religious purposes, and which must necessarily sink the church in the estimation of the world. How many churches in their organized capacity pay almost no regard to their most solemn obligations? They fail to keep their promises with a recklessness that would ruin the standing of any worldly corporation as a high-minded and honest body. How can such churches expect to prosper? How can they expect God, to whom justice, truth and honesty are more acceptable sacrifices than the lip services of those who have defrauded His servants, to bless and prosper them? If church members as individuals in their every day dealings, and in their organized capacities, would set an example to the world of truthfulness and honesty, such an example as the world has a right to expect of those professing the religion of Christ, the greatest obstacle to the progress of the Church would be removed. The powers of darkness would flee before it, and the gates of hell could not prevail against it.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We have just received from John T. Patrick, secretary, a complimentary ticket to the Dixie Agricultural Fair, to be held at Wadesboro October 26th to 29th. Wadesboro is situated in the midst of a large area of fine farming country, and surrounded by many intelligent and enterprising farmers. We can see no reason why this fair will not be a grand success. From what we hear, the preparations which are being made promise as much. Senator Wade Hampton has been invited to deliver the address. We have not been advised that he has accepted the invitation.

The notice of the sixty-seventh annual session of the Synod of North Carolina appears in this issue. Application has been duly made for the usual reduction of fare for those in attendance, of which notice will be given next week. There is every promise for a full and interesting meeting of Synod. It has been ten years since the Synod has met in Raleigh, and many anticipate with pleasure a return to the city and to the church in which there has been such growth.

This week we publish another letter from Rev. D. McGilvary, missionary to Siam. Also one from Rev. J. W. Davis, missionary to China. Both of these communications will be read with interest by their many friends in North Carolina.

The press of our Methodist brethren is making a strong appeal to the members of that church to raise the amounts the different conferences have assumed for the Wesley Monumental church in Savannah, Ga.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

From a note on business we clip this item: Two young men were received into the communion of the Littleton church on the 3rd. inst., one of whom was baptized. This Sabbath closed, Mr. Primrose's pastorate.

FRANKLIN, N. C., Sept. 28.

Brother McLaurin: Our hearts have been refreshed by the visits of five brethren of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg. On the first Sabbath in August Brother McIlwaine was with us in Franklin, preaching from Friday night previous to first Sabbath to Tuesday night following. On Saturday before the second Sabbath Brother Davis and Rev. Mr. Martin, of Henderson, were with us at Hiwassee church, in Clay county, preaching twice each day until Tuesday following. On the third Sabbath these two brethren preached for us in Franklin. On Friday following Brother McIlwaine and Brother Williams, licentiate of Mecklenburg Presbytery, were with us at Morrison church, six miles from Franklin. These brethren had spent a few weeks at DeHeart springs, in Swain county. The services continued until Tuesday night after the fourth Sabbath.

During all these precious seasons, from first to last, God's word and spirit, were honored by his servants. The sinner was warned as God warns him in His word. The plan of salvation was exhibited in its simplicity and freshness. The bleeding sacrifice of Christ, the sinners substitute, was set forth as the only hope for salvation.

God's people were greatly edified. One sign of a revival was seen in the cheerfullness with which each of these churches increased the salary of their minister. Some already groaning under the burdens of pecuniary want doubled their subscriptions. Another evidence we have in the churches undertaking to build a manse. This much needed comfort has been not only seen to be a necessity, but with willing hands these three little flocks manifest a determination to furnish it.

No accessions to these churches as yet, but the increased activities of God's people give evidence of an increase of faith which will insure fruit at some future day.

Dr. Miller, passing through Franklin, visited Swain and Graham counties, spending a Sabbath in each. In Charleston, Swain county, he received five members, and in Graham county one, all of whom were received into the Franklin church.

NEWS FROM SOOCHOW.

POO DOO ISLAND, August 18, 1880.

Dear Mr. Editor: In my last letter to you I intimated that your readers might soon hear some good news from Soochow. I now have the pleasure of informing them that I have bought a lot for the mission. When I last wrote to you the bargain had already been made and the purchase money paid in full. I had in my possession the title deed by which the seller held the property. That was what I received when I parted with the purchase money. But at that time the new title deed had not yet been stamped, and as we never know what the mandarins will do I was unwilling to publish any account of the matter. The land cannot be considered the property of the purchaser until a new title deed is obtained bearing the seal of the Treasurer of the Province and also that of the proper District Governor. I have just received a letter from my agent in Soochow, in which he says that he has obtained the newly issued title deed, and that it is in all respects as it should be. He is a man of tried ability, has purchased land for foreigners before he undertook my business. He says he is ready to put the paper into my hands as soon as I return to Soochow from Poo Doo Island, where I am spending the hot weeks of midsummer.

Let me again thank the friends of missions for their aid, without which the mission lot could not have been bought. For three or four years I have been trying to buy a lot for the mission, and various remittances have been sent me for this purpose through O. D. Davis of Salisbury. But altogether it was not enough to buy a lot. This money, however, increased by a little over a hundred dollars, taken out of the thousand dollars, which are to be sent me soon, paid for the lot. This leaves the main bulk of the thousand dollars to be used in putting a wall around the lot, clearing off the old bricks and tiles, and in building a church.

After a sojourn of just one month on this island Mrs. Davis and I expect to return to Soochow, where we hope to be on the 25th of August. I propose to build the church as soon thereafter as possible. I shall not be able to finish the church, for the wall around the lot and the clearing away of the old rubbish will cost about three hundred dollars, but I can now build the walls of the church and put on the roof and make a brick floor, and then use the building in this incomplete state for a time. It will be finished as soon as I receive the necessary funds. Three hundred dollars will finish it, making a substantial brick church, 35x45 feet in size, that would comfortably seat two hundred people.

Yours, truly, JOHN W. DAVIS.

SHANGHAI, China, August 23, 1880.

Dear Mr. Editor: I wrote you a letter from Poo Doo. I now add a line to inform you that I have reached this place, and expect to leave to-day for Soochow. We have been watching the quarrel between Russia and China with much interest. We have not deemed it necessary to think about removing to Shanghai, because Russia has not declared war. At present it seems very probable that there will be no war. The truth is, China is afraid to fight, and Russia is glad of it.

Yours, truly, JOHN W. DAVIS.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERY OF POTOSI.

The Presbytery of Potosi met in South Bellevue church Sept. 16th 1880, and was opened with a sermon by the moderator Rev. John B. Rabey from ii. Cor. v 14. "For the love of Christ constraineth us."

All the ministers except two are present. Five churches represented. Rev. Jas. V. Worsham elected moderator and elder J. T. Johnston temporary clerk.

Presbytery resolved to devote the first day of the next stated meeting to the consideration of topics relating to the office and duties of ruling elder.

An overture to Synod, urging to the transfer of the office of Home Missions St. Louis was adopted.

The recommendation of the Assembly: "That the last Wednesday of October be observed as a day of prayer for our missions," was adopted.

In conformity with the recommendation of the Assembly; Presbytery appointed among its churches its full share of the minimun named by the Executive Committee, of Home Mission for Evangilism and Sustentation, viz.: $150 for Evangelistic work and $300 for Sustentation.

Rev. A. W. Milster was appointed to preach the Presbyterisl sermon at next meeting on Covetonsuess.

Reports from the majority of the churches not encouraging. Since January last nine accessions to the church in Potosi.

All the churches supplied except Cape Girardeau, Jackson, Brazeau and Charleston. The next stated meeting at Clark's Creek church, Wednesday April 6th, 1881, 7:30 p. m.

PRESBYTERY OF KNOXVILLE

Met at Sweetwater, Tenn., Sept. 16th 7:30 p. m. Opening sermon by Rev. J. W. Bachman, last moderator from Neh. 13;1. All the ministers were present and eleven ruling elderr.

Bros. Cowverse of Louisville Presbytery and Miller of Enoree were present as corresponding members.

Rev. D. Munroe was elected moderator and elder C. C. Nelson temporary clerk.

Mr. J. G. Praigg candidate of West Lexington Presbytery was received and after satisfactory examination on his literary and theoligical course was licensed to preach. Bro. Praigg's examination on personal piety and motives in seeking the ministry was very interesting as he had a rather peculiar experience and no doubt many hard struggles before he finally concluded to present himself as a candidate to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Not many accessions to the churches within our bounds during the last six months. But some of our brethren thought they had accomplished much good by preaching to large congregations of Methodists, Baptists, Cumberland Presbyterians &c. It does good for the brethren to meet and consult concerning the welfare of Zion in our own and other lands. Report on Foreign Missions was very encouraging. There were two good addresses on this subject.

THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The sixty-seventh annual meeting of the Synod of North Carolina will be held in the First Presbyterian church in the city of Raleigh on Wednesday evening, Nov. 10, 1880, at 7 o'clock. WM. S. LACY, Stated Clerk.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The Presbytery of Central Texas is to meet at Bolton at 11 a. m., on Thursday, October 14.

L. TENNEY, S. C.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville will hold its 135th session at Shoe Heel (Quahele), Robeson county, N. C., commencing Thursday, October 14th, 1880, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Churches in arrears to the Presbyterial Fund will please forward the amounts due to the treasurer. J. P. MCPHERSON, S. C.

Bethel Presbytery holds its next regular session at Winnsboro, S. C., beginning Wednesday, Oct. 13th, 1880, at 7:30 p. m.

STEPPING IN FATHER'S FOOTSTEPS.

One bright winter's morning, after a snow storm, a father took his hat for a walk to attend to some farm affairs requiring his attention. As he started his little boy of five summers also snatched his hat, and followed the father with mock dignity, and an assumed business-like air. When they reached the door, the gentleman noticed that no track or pathway had been made in the snow, and he hesitated about letting his boy follow him. But the soft, fleecy snow looked so tempting, so pearly white, that he concluded to allow the child to walk after him. He took long ad rapid strides through the untrodden snow, when, suddenly remembering his "little boy," he paused, looked back for him, and exclaimed:

"Well, my son, don't you find it hard work to walk in this deep snow?"

"Oh! no," said the boy, "I'm coming; for father, I step in your tracks."

True enough, the dear child was planting his tiny feet just where the parent's had trodden. The child's reply startled the father, as he reflected that thus would his child keep pace with him, and follow in his tracks through life. He was not a friend to Jesus, not a man of prayer, and not a Christian; and well might he pause and tremble as he thought of his child ever striving "to step in all of his tracks," onward, onward, through life's mysterious mazes and mythe, towards eternity! The little boy's reply brought that strong, stubborn-hearted man to think, when even the preached word of God had made no impression upon him. Finally he repented, and sought and found peace in believing in Christ. We believe he is now making such tracks through life that at some day that son may be proud to say: "Father, I am stepping in all of your tracks."—British Workman.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE RIGHT KIND OF RELIGION.

Covenant:

"Well, have you got any religion to-day?" asked a Christian friend of a Vermont shoemaker, somewhat noted for the simple and joyous earnestness of his religion.

"Just enough to make good shoes, glory to God!" he said in reply, as with an extra pull he drew his thread firmly to its place.

That's the kind of religion we want, a religion that makes each one faithful to his work, that rules behind the counter as well as in the church, that guides the cobbler as he patches the old shoe of his poor customer, as truly as the visitor of the "sick and in prison," and that never puts the big potatoes only on the top!

BOTH.

The National Baptist:

The inquiry often made, "Which is the most important, pulpit labor or pastoral labor?" is like the query, "Which of the two blades of a pair of scissors is the more important?" We should answer, "Both."

The man who visits and does not prepare for the pulpit by diligent study; the man who preaches and does not visit, either of them will find his usefulness, we will not say paralyzed, but very greatly abridged. If a man studies with the condition of his people in view he will study to ten-fold advantage; if he visits with his pulpit in view, he will visit to ten-fold advantage. We may add that no minister can afford to lose the benefit of his own mind and heart. Many of the best sermons are born of a visit to the bedside of some aged saint, to the kitchen of some plain, toiling woman, or to the workshop of the mechanic.

An Address to the Presbyterian Church in the United States on Christian Work among the Negroes of the South.

BY RICHARD M'ILWAINE, D. D.

The writer's apology for calling prominent attention to this subject is, that besides being a Southerner by birth and life-long residence, and being personally and officially deeply interested in it, he has been deputed to this service by the Executive Committee of Home Missions, to whose care it is entrusted by our General Assembly.

Our Church has always been much concerned in regard to this matter, and our ecclesiastical courts have repeatedly urged its supreme importance. So lately as last May, our highest judicatory earnestly considered it and invoked the renewed attention of Presbyteries to it.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

That there is need of effort, none, acquainted with the circumstances and religious condition of the race, will question. There may be, and doubtless is, room for difference of opinion in regard to what is best; but that much needs to be done will scarcely be denied. It is true that they not only live in a Christian land, but that many of them, perhaps the majority of the adults, are members of some church; that they generally have the opportunity of attending Divine service with our own congregations if so disposed, and that among them there are individuals of intelligent piety and excellence of character. It may also be said that in some sections there are churches and communities, especially in towns and cities, whose members have attained a good degree of spiritual knowledge and practice. It may also be stated that there are found among them intelligent, godly and active ministers of the Gospel, who are doing what they can for the elevation and proper guidance of their people. This much is cheerfully granted, and the fact is a valuable testimony to the Christian fidelity of the masters and mistresses, who in former days conscientiously labored for their enlightenment and salvation. A great work has been done in raising them from savagism and in inoculating Christian knowledge and truth, so that it is perhaps true that no people in the history of the world has been raised from so low to so high a level in the same length of time. But when this has been conceded, candor also compels the acknowledgement that to a lamentable extent, they are still ignorant, immoral and superstitious. Their religious services are oftentimes adapted to excite rather than edify. In their belief and worship they retain some strongly marked features of their original religion. Their ministers and spiritual guides are not infrequently "blind leaders of the blind." Multitudes of them are in great weakness and error and sin, and sadly need the sympathy, guidance and help of their more highly favored brethren.

WE MUST DO MORE FOR THEM.

A call to work among them comes to the church of Christ everywhere, but is imperative on Southern churches and Christians and those who sympathize with and have means to aid them.

It must not be lost sight of, however, that there has heretofore been no backwardness among us in the discharge of this duty. While it is freely admitted that our people never fully met their responsibilities, it is doubtless true that they discharged this part of their moral obligation as thoroughly as they did any other, and as well as Christians elsewhere usually come up to the measure of their duty. A great work was done before and during the late civil war for their Christianization and civilization, and while circumstances since that time have been unpropitious and have contributed to deteriorate and in some measure to obliterate the good already accomplished, not a few of us during all these dark days have longed and labored for their welfare. Every protestant church in the South has had this matter under repeated and prayerful consideration, and much has been accomplished. There is reason, too, to believe that the times are coming more favorable, and that hindrances are being removed. Certain it is, that a larger number of our people seem to be interested in it now than a few years since. At some points it has been blessed, and some are entering upon it who a little time ago were in dispair of good results. There is, however, pressing need of largely increased effort on the part of us all until the whole church shall realize its responsibility and come up to its full duty.

METHODS TO BE USED.

The means to be employed are, for the most part, simple, inexpensive and easily within the reach of earnest Christians. Hardly one who wishes to do good among them will lack opportunity. This is a field in which many may work, and blessed are those humble and self-denying ones who are willing to undertake it. Among a multitude of suggestions which arise, as the memory of the past reveals again scenes which were daily experiences in the olden times, the following must suffice:

1. Let Christian householders, invite, and as far as practicable influence, their domestics to unite with them in family worship. This was a general custom in godly households in former days; and in some families it still exists, and is a potent means of imparting Christian knowledge, of awakening Christian aspiration, and of securing Christian love, fidelity and good doing. It cannot be doubted that much of the mutual regard which formerly existed between some masters and servants was kindled as they bowed together at the throne of grace. Is it too much to hope that this sanctifying element may in some measure be restored to our Christian society in the South, even under its changed aspect?

2. Let pains be taken to do little deeds of kindness and benevolence to those within our reach. We may visit the sick and pray with them; we may speak words of consolation to those in sorrow; we may lend a helping hand to the needy; we may tell them as we have occasion, of Jesus, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. Such unpretending ministries are commended in the word of God, and among no people will they like be more effective than among them.

3. Let Sabbath schools and classes be established for them in towns and country places. Many may be induced to become learners, and under God's blessing receive seed which shall produce good fruit in time and eternity.

4. Let them be induced to attend, when convenient, upon the ministry of our sanctuaries. In most of our Southern churches provision has always been made for their accommodation, and not infrequently they attended with pleasure and profit. In some places they are beginning to come again, and it is believed that if kind and persistent efforts are made they may be induced to resume attendance.

5. Let our ministers interest themselves, as far as may be practicable, in their spiritual welfare, ministering to them in public and private, and giving them what advice, counsel and assistance they can in their efforts towards a higher religious culture.

These are a few practical hints, which to many are not needed, but which to some, and especially to those who have entered upon the duties of life since the great change in our Southern society, may be useful. They seem almost trivial in themselves, and yet if generally adopted, the knotty question, "what can be done for the religious welfare of the negroes?" will not be far from solution.

A SEPARATE ECCLESIASTICAL ORGANIZATION NECESSARY.

But if our Christian people can be induced to do all that has been indicated, and the Divine blessing shall accompany, much more will be needed; for we cannot overlook the fact that they are a distinct race from ourselves, and that as such they have strongly marked peculiarities, proclivities, antipathies and preferences, and that these must exert a strong influence in their ecclesiastical as well as their social development. When they become Christians they do not lose their race characteristics, and hence it is for their best interests, as soon as practicable, that they be organized into churches officered by themselves, and be encouraged and aided until they have a complete ecclesiastical system, with presbyteries, synods and a general assembly, in which under God they shall be self-governing and responsible alone to our adorable King and Head, Jesus Christ, for their fidelity in establishing and extending His kingdom. Experience seems to teach that this is the normal method of development for the church, and unless we are misinformed it is the preference of the negroes themselves. They regard a separate ecclesiastical organization necessary to the symmetrical growth of religion among them; and reason as well as experience seems to be on their side. As soon as practicable they ought to be put in a position in which they can develop an independent Presbyterian church life, adapted to their race idiosyncracies, and untrammeled as far as possible by merely Anglo-Saxon ideas. They will then be able to adapt themselves to the peculiar wants of their own people as they never can, while closely allied to the whites, and become a power in working out their own religious destiny.

THE THING NOW NEEDED.

But a large work remains to be done for them ere they will be ready to assume and maintain this position. They are poor, ignorant and inexperienced. Many of them have to be instructed in the elements of the Gospel; to be gathered into congregations, and to be nurtured and built up in the knowledge and faith of the scriptures; men of their own race must be sought out and trained as ministers. A great work of ingathering and upbuilding has to be done among them, and the church of the future to be erected little by little, obtaining strength here and there, until finally the goodly structure shall be ready for independent action, and the colored General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States be the recognized representative of this whole department of work.

This is the view adopted by our highest ecclesiastical judicatory several years since, after protracted, thorough and exhaustive discussion. This is the view, as remarked above, which is consonant with the feelings and judgment of the negroes themselves, the wisest and most far-seeing of whom regard their ecclesiastical relation with their white brethren as temporary and transitional, and not to be continued longer than their present weak and dependent condition renders it necessary.

To this end our Southern Presbyterian Church has been looking for a number of years. In 1874 the colored evangelistic work as a separate and co-ordinate branch of labor was organized, and the presbyteries instructed and urged to give renewed and more earnest attention to this interesting field. These exhortations have been reiterated from time to time, and a number of the presbyteries have inaugurated and are prosecuting work with some vigor and success. The hitherto insuperable difficulty which has met them is the want of means to support the laborers in the field and to undertake new enterprises. Not one has found itself able to raise within its bounds funds sufficient for the maintenance of the work; and amid the already frequent calls upon the churches for collections in behalf of our established benevolent agencies, it has not appeared wise to ask for another. The General Assembly has, indeed, with unexampled liberality and earnestness, authorized its executive committee of home missions to appropriate without limit from the sustentation fund for this object. But when the committee has come to the practical consideration of the question, they have found that this fund has not for several years been sufficient by one-half to support the work it was designed to sustain. While, therefore, they have endeavored, as best they could, to respond to the demands made upon them, they have never been able to encourage presbyteries to enter vigorously upon organized effort, with the assurance that needed aid would be forthcoming when called for. This most needy and important branch of Christian work is, therefore, in danger of paralysis from the want of means to foster it. If the committee had at its disposal so small an annual sum as from $5,000 to $10,000, it is believed that a movement might be speedily inaugurated whose far reaching effects cannot be estimated. It is this profound conviction which has led the executive committee to authorize this appeal to the people of our own church, and to our brethren and friends who sympathize in these efforts and wish to become laborers with us. There are, perhaps, in our own bounds warm hearted Christians who feel the importance of this movement, and are able and willing without diminishing their contributions to other objects to spare something for this. It is probable, too, that among our brethren in other parts of the country, there are not a few who will esteem it both a duty and privilege to aid in this benevolent service, which, as a church, we are at present unable to carry forward in the measure required by the exigencies in the case.

REASON FOR ACTION IN THIS MATTER.

There are many and obvious. Only two or three of the most prominent can be touched.

(1.) The most affecting is the move which lies at the bais of all missionary effort, viz: the consideration of the Redeemer's glory in the salvation of sinners; the honor of our Lord and Saviour, and pity for the lost, conspire to urge us to do what we can for this needy race.

(2.) The fact that they are within our borders and are increasing in numbers, and will in all human probability remain here, for weal or woe, enforces this duty. They are not only here, but are members of this body politic, (whether wisely or unwisely it is not germane to the present issue to inquire) and as "revolutions never go backwards" they must continue to occupy this status. It is therefore, the interest of the enlightened patriot, no less than of the devout Christian, to see that they are instructed and Christianized and morally elevated. The system of "public school instruction" prevalent in the country cannot do this work. Without the religion of the Bible, education will only make them more dangerous members of society The humanising and regulative influence of the gospel alone can furnish the force requisite to accomplish this great regeneration; and while it is appalling to think of the future of our land if this race be left to ignorance, superstition and vice, it cannot be doubted that if they are brought under the power of a pure gospel, the complicated question of their destiny will be wrought out in some way, which will be for their own good, for the blessing of the land and for the glory of our King and Redeemer.

(3.) The probable Christianization of Africa through their instrumentality is another factor in the great problem which must be kept in view as a powerful motive for effort in their behalf. It is believed by thoughtful men that this is the ultimate design of the all-wise God in permitting African slavery to be introduced and to continue so long in this country. If this should be the final outcome of this ill-fated institution, which, while it lasted, was fruitful of so much good to both races, and in the manner of its termination has brought so much suffering to both, the wisdom and goodness of God will be amply vindicated, and fresh proof be given that He knows how to bring good ont of evil, and to confer blessing by adversity. The present state of the continent of Africa; the gigantic discoveries which have lately been made, and the world-wide attention awakened to its resources and the pitiable condition of the inhabitants, together with the munificent efforts put forth for its amelioration, go to show that the tendency of things is towards a mighty movement in behalf of this benighted land. It may be well, therefore, that the children of those sent to us a little while ago, ignorant and degraded savages, and who have received from us "the knowledge of the glory of God" shall become the chief instruments in God's providential scheme for the moral and spiritual renovation of this grand division of the earth's population. Christians, at least, should hope and labor and pray for this result.

Much more might be said in advocacy of this cause, but my plea is already too extended. It is sent forth with the earnest prayer that God graciously incline us all to do what we can for the promotion of His glory and the prevalence of His truth among this dependent and needy portion of our people, and that means may be speedily furnished for the effective prosecution of the work.

THE DUTY OF S. S. TEACHERS.

A teacher has a duty not only to be at Sunday school himself, but to see that his scholars are there. It is a comparatively easy matter to take care of scholars who want to be taken care of. The real trouble is in attending to those who don't want any attention. A young man applied to a Boston merchant for a situation as salesman. "Can you sell goods to a customer?" asked the merchant. "I think I could sell to any man who wanted to buy," was the young man's reply. "Oh, that's nothing to the purpose!" said the merchant. "Any fool can sell to a man who does want to buy. I want clerks who can sell to the man who don't want to buy." It is still true that "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." There is a thought worthy of attention in that Boston merchant's idea of a good salesman. The angels had to "lay hold" on Lot, to induce him to leave Sodom, when he was inclined to stay there at the risk of the city's doom. And many a teacher has to do a similar work for scholars who would sooner be in Sodom than in Sunday school. A young lady teacher in central New York wants light as to her duty in this direction. She asks:

"What would be the best way to secure a regular attendance from one's scholars? And is it best to visit them every time they are absent? I am a young teacher, but I love my class dearly."

That last sentence lays a good foundation for the answer to the first question. If a teacher would have his scholars always in attendance at Sunday school he must "love them dearly." As to the methods of securing regularity in a class, we wrote some time ago as follows, in answer to a correspondent: "Let the scholars feel, to begin with, that you count punctuality and regularity important. Always be on hand yourself at the school. Let no slight cause keep you away, or behind time, for a single Sunday. Give prominence to regularity in your work with the scholars. Note their attendance. Commend those who are regular. Ascertain the cause of every absence, and express regret that anything should have kept a scholar away. If possible, see each absent scholar during the week following his absence. If you cannot see him send him word, by letter or by a classmate. Call attention to the attendance of the class month by month, showing who was most regular and who was least so. In such ways emphasize the importance of regularity and stimulate to its attainment. Talk earnestly and lovingly on the subject with those who are irregular. In some schools there are proper rewards for regular attendance. Only those who are reasonably regular have a part in the Christmas exercises, or on anniversary occasions. It requires a constant and steady pressure, with tact and wisdom on the teacher's part, to secure the regular attendance of restless and wayward scholars; but the thing can be done and it ought to be." It is, as we have here intimated, not essential that every scholar should be visited personally on every absence from the class. But a teacher should always take pains to learn in some way why a scholar is away, and to let the scholar know he is missed, and is wanted in the school.—S. S. Times.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Items from the Southern Presbyterian:

The church at Hot Springs, Ark., has extended a call to Rev. W. G. Woodbridge, of Enterprise, Miss., which he has expressed his willingness to accept. He expects to enter upon his new field of labor about the first of November. He has been preaching in Hot Springs, by invitation, for the past three weeks.

The Rev. Dr. Girardeau has accepted the invitation of the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary to visit church-courts and churches in behalf of the endowment of the institution.

Rev. W. T. Ratchford writes us: "At a recent meeting twelve members were added on profession of faith to Bullock's Creek church; and twelve to Ramah church. At the last communion at Harmony church, six members united with the church on profession of faith. During these meetings there were twenty-one baptisms—infants and adults. These churches belong to Bethel Presbytery."

Rev. F. L. Leeper writes to us on the 13th ult.: "I went by appointment of Presbytery to hold a communion meeting at Zion church, (Bethel Presbytery) recently left vacant by removal of Mr. Brantly. The meeting began Aug. 27th, and closed Sept. 1st. The Lord blessed us, and added fifteen souls to this church. Our meeting here at Fort Mill has just closed. The Lord hath blessed His church and added three to her numbers."

Last Sabbath the Presbyterian church at Carrollton extended a unanimous call to Rev. Ben. Helm to become its pastor. The church has been supplied for a few months by Rev. J. Walton Graybill, who gives it up to go on with his studies preparatory to engaging in the work of Foreign Missions in Mexico. Mr. Graybill's labors here have been very fruitful. The church has now a membership more than twice as large as it had two or three years ago; the congregations have been increased in a much larger ratio; its Sabbath-school is large, and its prospects are more encouraging than they have been for years.—Christian Observer.

Rev. W. H. Vernor, who has been the efficient evangelist of the Presbytery of Brazos, has accepted the appointment of District Superintendent of the American Bible Society for the State of Arkansas.—St. Louis Presbytery.

A most delightful meeting was held in the Clinton church, S. C., beginning on Thursday before the fourth Sunday in July and lasted to the first Sabbath in August. The pastor was alone most of this time, save two days of earnest, thoughtful, and gratefully appreciated preaching by Rev. J. Y. Fair, the beloved pastor of the Laurensville Presbyterian church. During the meeting sixteen were added to the church, making a total of twenty-two additions on profession of faith during the month. Our people thank God and take courage.—Our Monthly.

Items from the Christian Observer :

Rev. R. C. Ligon, pastor of Providence church has accepted a call to the Roberts church, subject to the approval of his Presbytery.

The Presbytery of South Carolina at its late meeting, agreed to undertake to raise in its bounds $2,500 for endowing a professorship in the Seminary to be called the Howe Memorial. Rev. J. L. Martin was appointed agent of Presbytery to raise the amount.

A very interesting meeting has recently been held at the Geneva and the Laurel churches, in South Alabama Presbytery, which are supplied with preaching a part of the time by Rev. J. Mentor Crane and Rev. H. M. Jones. Five or six united with the Laurel church—all young men. The meeting at Geneva had not closed when our informant wrote.

Rev. W. M. McPheters has accepted calls from Piedmont and Rocky Mount churches in Virginia.—Central Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

Rev. D. J. Strain, after a successful as well as faithful ministry of fourteen years at Virginia, Ill., has received and accepted a call to the North Sangamon Presbyterian church in Menard county.

Rev. W. R. Henderson, formerly pastor of the Second church, Danville, Ky., has received a call to the church in Harrodsburg, and Rev. Wm. Torrence, once pastor of the Harrodsburg church, has been called to the one in Danville.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Presbyterian church of Princeton, Ill., has extended a call for the services of Rev. M. C. Williams of Williamsport, Md. This is their second effort to secure his pastoral services, and they will probably be successful.—Ibid.

Rev. W. R. Smith of Abilene, Kan., has received and accepted a call to the Presbyterian church of Belleville, Kan., and has entered upon the work there.—Ibid.

Rev. W. C. Alexander has received and accepted a call from the church at Middletown, Del., as the successor of Rev. John Patton, D. D.—Ibid.

The exercises of the inauguration of the Rev. T. D. Ewing, lately from Kittanning, Pa., as president of Parsons College took place in the Presbyterian church, Fairfield, Iowa, at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday, Sept. 14th. The auditorium was well filled with friends of the college, and after music and prayer the president of the board of trustees, Rev. Dr. Craig of Keokuk, made an address in behalf of the Synod and board. Rev. Mr. Ewing then took the oath of office, administered by Judge Blanchard, after which Dr. Craig, with a few brief and appropriate remarks, delivered to the president the keys of the institution.—Presbyterian.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Rev. Joseph Wild, whose resignation as pastor of the Union Congregational church in Brooklyn, we announced last week, will enter upon his work as pastor of the Bond street Congregational church in Toronto, Canada, with the beginning of October. It was from this church that the Rev. Dr. Marling came to the Fourteenth street Presbyterian church, this city. Mr. Wild is not only a popular pulpit orator, but also the author of several works which have acquired a large circulation both in this country and in Europe. At one time he was professor of ancient languages in the University at Belleville. He came to Brooklyn in 1872, and settled as pastor of the Seventh avenue Methodist church. Two years later he passed from Methodism to Congregationalism, just previous to his installation as pastor of the Union church.—Christian at Work.

METHODIST.

Dr. L. M. Vernon, the Methodist missionary to Italy, who is now in this country, will return to his field in October.

Ten years ago the M. E. Church South had in the whole foreign field but two missionaries and their wives. Now they have thirty.

EPISCOPALIAN.

Thirty-eight natives of New Zealand have been introduced to the ministry of the Episcopal missions in that country.

Throw off that despondent spirit—crush that feeling of despair—be cheerful, happy and well. Take Simmons Liver Regulator when mind and body are depressed, with cold extremities, fever flushes, costiveness, dull headache, bad taste in the mouth, and an indisposition to stir about. For over forty years Simmons Liver Regulator has proved its great value in all diseases of the Liver Bowels and Kidneys—giving life and health to thousands who would otherwise have sunk into untimely graves or endured the torture of a living death.

"I was a sufferer from Dyspepsia for several years, and was at last confined to my bed, and should no doubt have remained there until death should have come to my relief, but for a friend of mine at Weldon, N. C., recommending Simmons Liver Regulator to me, and at the same time with a request that I would use it, which I did with the most happy result. I am now well, and eat anything I wish without any bad effect. W. A. PEARSON, South Gaston P. O., N. C.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

An American who lately visited Mr. Carlyle in Scotland, conveys the important intelligence that he found the aged philosopher chasing a rat with a poker. Mr. Carlyle has probably been bothered by inquisitive tourists more than any other British author save Tennyson.

A South Carolina Baptist church contains in its old records the mention of a woman being excluded from the church for the offense of "doing too much talking in the neighborhood." As no such case is recorded of late years it is supposed that the race of such women is extinct.

In a recent issue of a New York paper we find the following in reference to the exhibition of Mr. C. C. Clawson's novel and ingenious machine for packing tobacco: "The most noticeable feature of the machinery department is a machine from C. C. Clawson of Raleigh, N. C., which receives tobacco in a hopper, weighs, fills and presses it in bags, turning out the latter finished for the market. Two persons attend it, one to feed the bags and the other to tie them. Thirty bags a minute are thus prepared."

Dr. Worth, Governor Jarvis and Senator Vance, commissioners to examine the Western N. C. railroad, report that satisfactory progress has been made. They further report that $109,000 had been paid by Mr. Best on account of the road, of which $30,000 was paid on account of the floating debt.

Ireland is a country full of strange contradictions. Notwithstanding the privation of last year—that period of so much want and suffering—the total addition to the Irish savings banks deposits in 1879 amounted to $7,086,945. This is the largest increase in any year on record. Only two counties show a decrease, and they are not in the distressed districts. But where the distress was said to be the greatest there the deposits in the banks were the largest. During the period of greatest privation the former half of last year the deposits were of larger amount than when the suffering was less. One-third of the addition came from districts said to have been in the greatest need. There is an evident conclusion to be drawn from these facts. Famine must have been a source of profit to very many, who, during its most oppressive torments, have thus been enabled to save up treasures in the Postoffice Savings Bank. Now that better times are looming we fear that privation and hunger will not prove so remunerative to those who have heretofore thrived on organized benevolence.—Scottish-American Journal.

According to the latest compilation there are 9723 newspapers published in the United States. Of these 1835 are Democratic, 1747 Republican and 122 are Greenback. This represents a total of 3704, or about one-third of the entire press of the country. There is something very suggestive in these figures. To us it appears that the bias of the political organs do not represent the feelings of the country as a whole, because to exert the influence they credit themselves with doing, they would require to have a much larger circulation. The independent tone of the remaining two-thirds of the press must necessarily have a wider influence upon the general public for the reason that they do not depend upon political readers exclusively for their existence. A purely disinterested view of public affairs, deliberately and thoughtfully expressed, must of necessity go farther and sink deeper in the minds of those who are accustomed to estimate party strife and virulence at its proper value. In this respect the independent press is the real lever of popular opinion.—Scottish American Journal.

Yun Kwai, the Chinese student in this country who has been ordered home because of his father's displeasure at his acceptance of the Christian religion, will not have to obey. The Chinese government has abandoned all efforts to carry out the decree concerning him. He has been admitted to Harvard College. His friends employed a distinguished Boston lawyer to confer with Secretary Evarts to ascertain the exact status of Chinese students as relates to their home government. The reply of Mr. Evarts, giving extracts of the treaty between our government and China, sets at rest all fears of the friends of these young men concerning their liability to be forced back to China.—Herald and Presbyter.

A sickness supposed to be mild yellow fever has prevailed for some time near the quarantine station on the Mississippi river, seventy-five miles from New Orleans. There have been seventy-five cases and several deaths since the latter part of August. The physicians of the State Board of Health call the disease malarial fever, caused by exposure in the rice fields, while the doctors attached to the National Board of Health declare that it is genuine yellow fever.

The project of securing the mammoth steamship Great Eastern to run between London, New Orleans and Galveston, to take out cotton and other products and bring back emigrants, is in a fair way of being fully established.

There is fear that another famine is to visit Northern India. A great drought has prevailed, imperilling the rice crop on which the lives of millions depended. Should this calamity occur, the British troops may be in more danger than from the Afghans with whom they have been warring. The government have in recent years planned extensive works for the artificial irrigation of these districts. Had the money wasted in Beaconsfield's campaign for advancing the "scientific frontier" of India been devoted to completing these works, it would have been more to the glory of Britain and the welfare of her colony. The Times tersely says, "The victors of Candahar would be better employed in canal-cutting within their borders than in throat-cutting beyond them."—Canada Presbyterian.

The business at the New York postoffice has increased so much during the last month that forty clerks have been added to the force. The receipts have increased $1,000 per day since the month of August.

Thousands of people in Norton, Phillips, Sheridan, Decatur, Rawlins, and other counties in Kansas, are in absolute want of food. The wheat crop in all the above named counties failed, and in June was plowed up and planted in corn, which has been destroyed by worms.

The Supreme Court of Indiana over-ruled the petition for a rehearing in the case involving the validity of the constitutional amendments, the vote standing the same as it did in the original case.

In the United States Court at Trenton, N. J., Judge Nixon charged the grand jury that there had come to his knowledge many violations of the law concerning the management of the national banks, and he called upon the grand jury to investigate all charges without fear, favor, affection or reward.

In Robeson county, September 20th, IRENE HURSEY, daughter of Thomas L. and Jane A. Hursey, in the 10th year of her age.

Her pain and suffering lasted but a few hours. She is now no longer with us. How we miss her! It requires a great amount of Christian resignation and a strong and abiding faith in God's providence to be enabled to say, "Not my will but Thine be done." The afflicted parents have another treasure laid up in heaven, another thread added to that chord which binds them to Him who said "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

We did not see the angel, as he gently bore her to the Paradise of God, nor the gates of the eternal city as her pure spirit passed triumphantly through.

A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT AND AFFECTION.

In connection with the death of our brother NEILL SINCLAIR, which took place on the 17th of August, 1880, the session of St. Paul's church, Robeson county, N. C., desire hereby to express:

1. Their humble submission to the will of God in this dispensation of His providence, assured that in this, as in all His dealings with His people, He doeth all things well; and to his departure they are more cordially reconciled be reflecting how much our loss is his gain.

2. Their thankfulness to God for having given our church the benefit of his influence and example from early youth to a ripe old age.

3. Their appreciation of the value of his services as a ruler in the church for above fifty years, characterized throughout by intelligence and thoughtfulness rarely equaled, by firmness and faithfulness combined with Christian charity, and by a willingness to labor and sacrifice for the advancement of Christ's cause.

4. Their sympathy with his partner and children in their bereavement, and their trust and hope that He who has promised to be a present help in time of need may be their all sufficing support.

Resolved, That this tribute be duly engrossed on our record, a copy of it sent to the widow, and another copy forwarded to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

JOSEPH EVANS,
Moderator of Session.

A HAPPY RESTORATION.

I can truly say that I owe my present existence and happy restoration to the hopes and joys of life, to the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and I say to every one suffering from any manner of kidney, liver or urinary trouble, "Use this remedy and recover." W. E. SANFORD.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The World as I Find It.

BY FREDERICK LANGBRIDGE.

They say the world's a weary place,
Where tears are never dried,
Where pleasuree pass like breath on glass,
And only woes betide.
It may be so—I cannot know—
Yet this I dare to say,
My lot has had more glad than sad,
And so it has to-day.

They say that love's a cruel jest;
They tell of woman's wiles—
That poison dips in pouting lips,
And death in dimpled smiles.
It may be so—I cannot know—
Yet sure of this I am,
One heart is found above the ground
Whose love is not a sham.

They say that life's a bitter curse—
That hearts are made to ache,
That jest and song are gravely wrong,
And health a vast mistake.
It may be so—I cannot know—
But let them talk their fill;
I like my life, and love my wife,
And mean to do so still. —Good Words.

Being a Little Woman.

BY IRENE W. HARTT.

Mrs. Ackert was going to spend the day and night with her sick mother. Charlie, who was only five, and could not get through a day without his mamma, had promised to be very quiet, and was to accompany her; but Ellen, who was beginning to think herself a little woman, was to stay at home with Bridget, and take care of two-year-old Robbie. She saw them depart without a misgiving. She had never been in full charge of Robbie before, but she had great confidence in herself.

"I shall be very busy all the morning," she said with great dignity to Bridget, standing in the kitchen door. "I presume you know what to get for dinner."

"Yes, miss," Bridget replied, with her face turned from Ellen, that she should not see her laugh.

Ellen, leading Robbie by the hand, went slowly and dignifiedly up the stairs to the nursery. She gave him his blocks, then put her toys away; she was a woman to-day, and it would not do to be playing. Then there was really nothing to do but watch Robbie, and before she quite realized what she was doing, she was on the floor by him, as much interested as he was in building houses and knocking them down again. It came to her like a shot after a while that her mamma never conducted herself in that way, and that it was not being a woman at all.

"I have shown you how to play, Robbie," she said, with a return of dignity, as she got up. "You must play by yourself now.

But Robbie did not want to play by himself, and he told her so decidedly in his baby language.

"No, Robbie, no longer," she repeated.

Then Robbie, who was fond of having his own way, began to cry, and Ellen determined to punish him. Mamma did not believe in whipping children, and never allowed it to be done to her's, and Ellen must find some other mode of punishment.

"Robbie," she said, sternly, "if you cry I will take you' blocks away."

"Oo tan't," Robbie screamed, and began to throw them around the room in his anger.

"Robert, stop," calmly, but severely. "Pick up those b'ocks, like a good boy, and play alone."

Robbie replied by throwing the blocks in the little woman's face, and Ellen, quite angry, started forward to shake him, but remembered her womanliness in time, although she forgot how naughty it would be.

"I shall punish you," she said. "You are naughty."

"I punish oo; oo's naughty."

"Robert!" severely, as he threw the blocks again.

"I tell mamma," he lisped.

Usually Ellen would have threatened, too, to tell mamma, but she was not under mamma to-day; she had charge of herself and Robbie, too.

She lifted him up, although he kicked and screamed, and was far more naughty than he had been in weeks before. Mamma would have been very much grieved if she had seen her children then.

"I shall lock you up in mamma's big, dark closet," Ellen said.

Robbie howled. It terrified him to see the inside of the big, dark closet, and Ellen knew that well, but she did not know that terror would have any injurious effect upon him. She dragged him into mamma's room to the closet, notwithstanding his screams and kicks. She thrust him in, and shut and locked the door. He screamed louder than ever. She had never heard him cry like that before; but then he had never been punished so severely before, and it would be a good thing for him.

She went back to the nursery, shutting all the doors between, so that she would not hear his cries. She tried to read her Sunday school book, but she could not get interested. Then she tried to play with the blocks, with no better success. It was hard for one so young to have to be a disciplinarian. She went softly back to mamma's room in a little while. There was not a sound from the closet.

"Robbie," she called, "are you going to be a good boy?"

No answer.

"Robbie, Robbie! answer me, or I can't let you out."

Still silence.

"Robbie," very loud, "if you answer me I'll let you out."

She opened the door quickly, with a sudden fear that he might be dead. He lay on the floor with a very red face, gasping for breath. Very much frightened, she lifted him up and got him on mamma's bed. He did not open his eyes or answer when she called. She was so much alarmed then that she forgot she was a woman and could take care of him herself, but ran after Bridget, telling her the whole story. Bridget ran up in great haste. It was a wonder the poor dear did not have a fit, she said; he had been frightened almost to death! She bathed his face and talked to him soothingly, until he was breathing regularly again. Ellen stood by in silent awe. A long while after, when he was able to play again, she took charge of him, much humbled and very kind and gentle.

But he did not care very much about playing, and his hands and head were hot. Neither did he care for any dinner. They had no papa to come home to them, and there was only Bridget to ask what to do, and she was not over-wise. She brought out some cake and preserves, which mamma never let him have, to coax him to eat. He ate all she brought him, and was very sick afterward. All the afternoon they took care of him, but he only grew worse. By supper-time his fever was very high.

"Your ma ought to be here," Bridget said.

"But who can go for her? Grandma's is a mile away, and it's getting dark and is raining."

"The doctor must see him," Bridget went on. "I can go for them."

"I can't stay alone with him," Ellen cried. "What shall we do?" She was quiet a moment, then she cried, "I will go, Bridget."

She went to her room, and locking the door after her, knelt down by the bed, and prayed that all her naughtiness that morning would be forgiven, and that the Lord would take care of her.

Her mamma had taught her that the Lord hears every prayer made in Jesus' name, so she arose much comforted and very brave. She wrapped herself up as she knew her mother would like. She stopped in the nursery to kiss Robbie, and she heard Bridget say something about a "brave little woman" as she come out.

It was raining quite fast, and O! it was getting so dark. The doctor's office was not on the direct way to grandma's, and as Robbie needed him as soon as possible, she ran there first praying at every step.

"Well, you are a little woman," the physician said. "I wonder if my Kitty would be so brave?"

A little woman! Just what she wanted to be that morning. She ran on quite happy for this praise. But it was a long, dark way to grandma's, and her little heart beat in terror very often. If she had not prayed all the time she never could have gone. It was so far off to-night, and there were so many vacant lots to pass. It was reached at last, and Ellen was sitting, very damp, on mamma's knee, sobbing out her story.

"How did the child ever do it?" grandma said from her bed.

"O, grandma, I just took hold of the Lord's hand, and kept talking to Him all the way."

"Bless the little woman," grandma said fervently. "That's what we must do all our lives."

John, the hired man, harnessed up the horse and drove them back very quickly. The doctor, who was waiting to see Mrs. Ackert, said Robbie would soon be well again; and the little woman was put to bed very much as if she were a child, with her troubles all over, and very thankful to the Lord for His care of her, and his making Robbie better, and she determined to care for Robbie after this, as He had cared for her, very kindly.—Christian at Work.

Cups of Bliss.

BY MRS. ANNIE A. PRESTON.

I heard this pleasant story the other day of an excentric but very popular and pleasant old Dutch Reformed Doctor of Divinity.

In a village he was preaching as supply, while the settled pastor was absent in Europe, he was invited to attend the weekly receptions at a fashionable boarding school, where two or three of his grand-daughters were among the pupils.

At the first of these brilliant and select gatherings which he dignified with his presence, Miss Bliss, the assistant preceptress, a lovely little lady, presided at the tea urn. The guests went to her to have their shell-like china cups filled or replenished, and sit or stood about the handsome rooms, sipping their tea, nipping the sandwich, a tart or a bit of cake, and laughing and chatting in the delightfully informal way that made the 'Locust Hill Seminary" tees the most popular social events in the village.

When tea was announced the fine old gentleman, who as usual had been making himself generally agreeable, stationed himself beside Miss Bliss, and as each cup was filled, took it from her hand and passed it with a pleasant word to the waiting guest. After a while, having turned all eyes in his direction by a witty repartee, and while every one waited with attentive ears to catch his next words, he said:

"At first thought it would seem to be quite an exhibition of generosity on my part, for me, before I am served myself, to take these cups of Bliss and pass them until this whole large company is supplied; and it would be a generous act, were I not sure that a sufficient quantity for the needs of all present was back of the fair dispe sing h nd."

His listeners all laughed at the pretty and apt play upon the lovely young lady behind the tea-urn, but the aged minister continued gravely:

"It is just the same with the message of salvation which I am holding out to you all, week by week. Was there only enough for the saving of one soul in this township, human nature is so weak that I might be tempted to retain that portion for myself instead of offering it for your acceptance; but I know there is an inexhaustible supply, so I have no temptation to be selfish in the premises, and am only influenced in my desire for your highest good. The message reads, 'Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters'—all you have to do is to come, without money and without price, and partake that your souls may live.'

Then, in a deep voice, he continued:—"What strange ideas of politeness govern society? What one of you is there who would come here and offend your hostess by refusing the delicate and delicious refreshments provided for your entertainment? Yet day by day, for years, you do not hesitate to grieve your Maker by refusing the cup of eternal life, which is being continually held out to you by the hands of his servants."

A gentleman who was present said the effect of these unexpected words as expressed upon the faces of the gay company, was startling. It was putting an old thought in a new light, and when one sweet young girl, standing near the speaker, said in a trembling voice: "I believe, sir, that we would all gladly accept of that cup, if we had you to offer it to us and to tell us about it"—others clustered eagerly about him; and the result was, the tea ended by the offering of a fervent prayer followed in the days to come by a general awakening of religous life among both teachers and pupils in the gay fashionable, worldly young ladies' seminary, and a permanent and most happy change in the tone of the school.—Presbyterian.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Oldest Monument in the World.

The Ashmolean Museum, at Oxford, contains one of the oldest monuments of civilization in the world, if, indeed, it is not the very oldest. This is the tintel stone of a tomb which formed the last resting place of an officer who had lived in the time of King Sent, of the second dynasty, whose date is placed by M. Mariette more than six thousand years ago. The stone is covered with that delicate and finished sculpture which distinguished the early periods of Egyptian history, and was immeasurably superior to the stiff and conventional art of the latter ages of Egypt which we are accustomed to see in our European museums. But it is also covered with something more precious still than sculpture—hieroglyphics which show that even at that remote time Egyptian writing was a complete and finished art, with long ages of previous development lying behind it. The hieroglyphic characters are already used, not only pictorially and ideographically, but also to express syllables and alphabetic letters, the name of the King, for instance, being spelled alphabetically. In the hands of the Egyptian scribes, however, Egyptian writing never made any further progress. With the fall of what is called the Old Empire (about B. C. 3,500) the freshness and expansive force of the people passed away. Egyptian life and thought became fossilized, and through the long series of centuries that followed Egypt resembled one of its own mummies, faithfully preserving the form and features of a past age, and of a life which had ceased to beat in its veins. Until the introduction of Christianity the only change undergone by Egyptian writing was the invention of a running hand, which in its earlier and simple form is called hieratic, and in its latter form, demotic.—Salem Press.

Macaroni and Vermicelli.

Macaroni, vermicelli, sea-biscuit, pilot bread, plain crackers and common bread are about alike in composition and nutriment. Macaroni and vermicelli differ only in size of the tubes, both being made alike, and both are simply dried dough made of flour and water only, the same as pilot or sea bread and plain crackers. The wheat grown in Southern Europe contains more gluten and less starch than any other, and, therefore, makes better macaroni. This gluten is nitrogenous, like lean meat, casein, or curd of milk (cheese), etc., and strengthens one's muscles more than the more starchy Northern flour. Starch is carbonaceous, supplying material for producing fat and promoting warmth in the system. Millions of people in Italy use macaroni as their chief, if not sole, food for the year round—the gluten answering for the lean meat consumed by other people to produce muscular strength, or working power. Sea-biscuit, pilot bread and plain crackers, those without the "shortening" of butter or lard, are simply flour and water, worked into tough dough, and baked, instead of being air or sun dried as macaroni and vermicelli are. They are usually made of northern grown wheat, containing more starch and less gluten than macaroni.—American Agriculturist.

The Use of Lemons.

The lemon is a native of Asia, although it is cultivated in Italy, Portugal and the south of France. In Europe, however, it seldom exceeds the dimensions of the smallest tree, while in its native state it grows over ninety feet in height. Every part of this tree is valuable in medicine, though we rarely employ any of it but its fruit, and that is the lemon itself. And every one knows how to employ this, as in lemonade: Squeeze the juice into cold water, this is the shortest way, or to cut in slices and then boil it. Either way is good. Lemonade is one of the best and safest drinks for any person, whether in health or not. It is suitable to all stomach diseases, is excellent in sickness—in cases of jaundice, gravel, liver complaint, inflammation of the bowels and fevers. It is a specific against worms and skin complaints. The pippins crushed may also be used with water and sugar and be used as a drink. Lemon juice is the best anti-scorbutic remedy known. It not only cures the disease but prevents it. A physician suggests rubbing the gums daily with lemon juice to keep them in health. The hands and nails are also kept clean, white, soft and supple by the daily use of lemon instead of soap. It also prevents chilblains. Lemon is used in intermittent fevers mixed with strong, hot black tea or coffee, without sugar. Neuralgia may be cured by rubbing the part affected with a lemon. It is valuable also to cure warts, and to destroy dandruff on the head, by rubbing the roots of the hair with it. In fact its uses are manifold, and the more we employ it externally the better we shall find ourselves. Natural remedies are the best, and nature is our best doctor, if we would only listen to it. Decidedly, rub your hands, head and gums with it, and drink lemonade in preference to all other liquids.—Exchange.

Knock Falls to Cure a Cancer.

So much has been said of late anent the miraculous curing properties of the Church of the Apparitions at Knock, that (says a contemporary) an instance of the failure of the supernatural power which the place is reputed to possess may be recorded for the benefit of those who accept without question every story of wonder which emanates from the pilgrims' shrine. In a letter just received from the husband of a lady residing in Liverpool the instance already alluded to is given:

"Knock is a wonderful place. Throughout the whole day crowds of people traverse the roads, giving the idea that some monster fair was being held, and all the more remarkable from the fact that generally you might travel for miles without meeting a solitary individual. The hotel is, or was, a gentleman's house, which has been taken as a speculation at a rental of £200 per annum. The day I was there a lady had just died who had been brought from America to try if she could be cured of cancer. She and her husband had been there two or three weeks, and it was fancied that she was getting better, so her husband went to take the passage back to America. Whilst he was away she got worse, and died immediately before I got into the hotel. Of course there was great excitement and confusion. The husband arrived and I was really sorry for him when he got off the car and asked the manageress of the hotel how his wife was. On hearing that she was dead he fell into my arms just as though he had been shot, and it was some time before he recovered consciousness. I was speaking to several people, priests among the number, and I never found one who could really say that he know any one who had been ill and got better through a visit to Knock. I have met plenty who say they know somebody who knows somebody else who was cured; but every case is given on second-hand evidence."

Now or Never.

But as for all those theories which tell the sinner that if he dies in his sins he shall have another opportunity; which forget the grandeur and awfulness of God's moral government; which undertake to know more than Christ dared to teach about the Father's tenderness; which insist that the divine justice exhausts itself in merely reformatory discipline, and which tend to exclude from legislation as well as from theology, the very idea of punishment—I have no fellowship with them, and if I had a pulpit, no preacher of those theories should stand in it with my consent. Behold! now is the accepted time, and now or never is the deep undertone of the gospel in its call to repentance and its offer of salvation.—Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon.

STATE NEWS.

We learn that the sweet potato crop is almost a failure in some sections of the State.

Receipts of cotton for the week ending last night, 654 bales. Receipts for the month, 1,075 bales, being 603 bales more than up to this time last September.—Monroe Inquirer.

The Governor yesterday received a letter asking for a State flag for use at Kings Mountain. The State has not a single flag in its possession, strange to say. The only flags are held by companies or regiments of the State troops.—News and Observer.

Treasurer Worth informs us that Mr. W. J. Best has expended thus far, on account of the Western North Carolina Railroad, $109,000. Forty car-loads of iron are now being placed at the head of the road, and the track to Asheville will be laid at once.—Raleigh News and Observer.

The second annual exhibition of the North Carolina Industrial Association opened at their ground yesterday under the most flattering circumstances. The exhibition of machinery, stock, fowls and fancy work is very good. Col. L. L. Polk, Judge Reade and Mayor Manly made addresses.—Raleigh Visitor.

A friend who has been down the river on a fishing expedition for several days past says Mr. W. E. Davis, of this city, who has a fishery at Federal Point, caught at one haul on Tuesday last about sixteen thousand mullets, which when salted down would make in the neighborhood of eighty barrels. His seine was so loaded down with them that it burst, or he would have taken even more than he did.—Wilmington Star.

Prof. F. P. Motz, of the Department of Mathematics in the King's Mountain High School, writes that he has determined by formulæ of higher astronomy the day of the week on which the battle of King's Mountain was fought, and that it was Saturday, October 7th, 1870, having fallen on that day. There has been at different times considerable discussion on this point. October 7th, 1880 falls on Thursday.—Charlotte Observer.

The place of debarkation for those attending the King's Mountain Centennial is a way station called "Weaver's," five miles west of the village King's Mountain and four miles from the battle-field where the celebration is to be held. Hacks, omnibusses, wagons, etc., will be in waiting at Weaver's upon the arrival of every train to transport passengers to the battlefield. Rates, from 50 cents to $1, according to conveyance, for the round trip.—Charlotte Observer.

The King's Mountain monument to be unveiled on the 7th of October, which is anniversary day, is expected to cost, complete, about five thousand dollars. In addition to the cost of the monument the committee have purchased the ground on which the battle occurred, and have already spent some three hundred dollars in clearing it off, so that it will answer for the purposes of the celebration.—News and Observer.

We are to have a railroad through Stokes. Work has certainly been commenced on the Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railroad in this county—that is, hands commenced last Monday morning building barracks on Col. Benj. Basiley's plantation, between Walnut Cove and Germantown, to keep the convicts in, and we are informed that one hundred and fifty hands will be put to work.—Danbury Reporter.

THE PLEASURES OF HOPE.

When the body is bowed with pain an intense longing for relief brings hope. This may brighten the suffering, but it does not cure. At a time like this how welcome is such a friend as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, bringing hope, health and happiness and the joys of a renewed life.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

DISCUSSIONS IN THE ALLIANCE.

In the late Presbyterian Council a paper was read by Rev. Dr. C. H. Read, of Richmond, Va., on the subject of RULING ELDERS IN THE CHURCHES OF JESUS CHRIST.

The class of persons known as Ruling Elders, invested with the same kind of authority and exercising the same kind of power as pastors, is constantly recognized in the Holy Scriptures through all the ages since the organization of the Church of God in the family of Abraham. The precise mode of their appointment and the precise nature of their official power is not distinguished, of course, but the office itself is clearly recognized. Eldership comes itself eventually into view in the Divine Records. Ultimately we find elders associated with almost every important act of government and council until they are now an important part and factor of the Churches of Jesus Christ. Proofs on this point are not necessary in this immediate presence, but such proof may be of use when the sessions and doings of the Council come to be reported, published and thrown before world.

First, we will refer for authority to the Word of God, and we could have none better. Passing by the earlier parts of the Scriptures, we find in Leviticus xiii. 4, 5: "If the bright spot be white in the skin of his flesh, and in sight be not deeper than the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white, then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague seven days." "And the priest shall look on him the seventh day, and, behold, if the plague in his sight be at a stay, and the plague spread not in the skin, then the priest shall shut him up seven days more." The office of the elders, while it was in some respects similar to that of the priest, was in other respects entirely different. Their office was to place their hands upon the head of the beast about to be slain as if by way of representing sin washed away by the blood of the slain animal. It was done in behalf of the people, and implied the dignity and solemnity of the institution of the office. In Numbers xi., 16, 17, we find the following: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the Elders of Israel whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people and officers over them, and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation that they may stand there with thee.

"And I will come down and talk with thee there, and I will take of the Spirit which is upon thee and I will put upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee that thou bear it not thyself alone." The 24th and 25th verses of the record proceeds thus: "And Moses went out and told the people the words of the Lord, and gathered the seventy men of the elders of the people and set them around about the tabernacle, and the Lord came down in a cloud and spake unto him and took of the Spirit that was upon him and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass that when the Spirit rested upon them they prophesied and did not cease."

It is observed here that the Lord Himself speaks of the official character of the elders of the people of Israel. We thus see that the office of elders was approved of and recognized by God Himself. In Deuteronomy xxv., 7-9, we find: "And if the man like not to take his brother's wife then let his brother's wife go up to the gate unto the elders and say, My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel; he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother.

"Then the elders of his city shall call him and speak unto him; and if he stand to it and says, 'I like not to take her,' then shall his brother's wife loose his shoe from off his foot and spit in his face, and shall answer and say, 'So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house'" In Deuteronomy xxix. 10, we find the following: "Ye stand this day, all of you, before the Lord your God; your captains of your tribes, your elders and your officers, with all the men of Israel." Those are the words of Moses in regard to the duties of elders. Again Deuteronomy xxxi. 28: "Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes and your officers, that I may speak these words in their ears, and call heaven and earth to record against them,"

I have given you a few extracts from the Mosaic law in reference to the powers and duties of elders.

In I. Kings vii. and viii. we find that the elders occupied a very high and important position. In II. Kings xxxii. we find the Order of Elders mentioned. Book of Ezekiel viii. 1. "And it came to pass in the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord God fell there upon me." From this it is manifest that an order of men known as elders had existed from the organization of the Church of God. The manner of their appointment is not distinctly set forth, but that they did not assume this office themselves is obvious. The number of seventy elders shows that there must have been some rule exclusive and inclusive; that they were so appointed to fill the office, and that they were so delegated with public authority as to command universal respect. Their advisory counsel was sought by prophets, princes and kings, and had weight in matters of the highest importance to the Church and State in the form of Church and State government which prevailed.

Dr. Witherspoon, in a valuable tract, has contributed to the literature on this subject.

The Synagogue System: What we gather from the early writers in reference to this subject dispels any reasonable doubt as to the fact that elders were a prominent part of Church Government. As to the exact time when the synagogue system of our worship was established is not known, but that it existed at the time of our Lords's advent and had then in existence for a considerable period of time admits of little doubt. Dr. Miller has written a valuable and comprehensive essay on this subject. He says that the number of elders in each synagogue was not governed by any absolute rule, and that in large cities and populous places the number was very much greater than in smaller places, but that they never aggregated less than three—that they might never be equally divided. It would seem to be impossible for any one to doubt this statement when it is so strongly supported, and Bishop Burnett has added the weight of his opinion to the foregoing authorities whom I have mentioned.

In the New Testament, also, we find that the elders are a body of men mentioned in a manner to indicate that their position was a high one and that they constituted an important part of the Church government. To be eligible to the position they were required to possess qualities which would commend them to their fellow-laymen and command respect and veneration. They were not always, as the name might imply, the oldest members of the congregation, but, in the broader sense of the word, they were the wisest and best. Of course age, with its experience, would have its advantage. In the New Testament we find ample evidence of the truth of the point submitted—that the existence of an order of men called elders is a verity. The testimony bearing upon this point is so abundant and clear that it is quite unnecessary to cite it. Dr. Witherspoon shows that our Lord Jesus Christ visited the elders and took council with them, although He Himself was not recognized as one of their number. "He came to His own and His own received Him not." In I. Timothy, from the 4th to the 7th chapters we find great stress is laid on the duties of the Elders.

In the Epistle of Paul to Titus, from the 1st to the 4th verses, we find: "Paul, a servant of God and an Apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect and the acknowledging the truth, which is after Godliness."

"And hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began."

"But hath, in due times, manifested His Word through preaching, which is committed unto me according to the command of God our Saviour."

"To Titus, mine own son, after the common faith, grace, mercy and peace from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour."

"For this cause left I thee in Crete that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting and ordain elders in every city as I had appointed thee." And then follows the specifications of proper qualifications of these elders to be thus ordained.

In I. Peter v: 1: "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed." In Romans, xii: 6-8, inclusive, we have the following: "Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith."

"Or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth on teaching."

"Or he that exhorteth, on exhortation; he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness."

Again, in I. Corinthians xii: 28 we have: "And God hath set some in the Church, first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers. After that, miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." Here there is a reference of the various offices established by God in the Church, the most important of which are the Apostles, next the Prophets and last the teachers, which, of course, are the same and are understood as elders.

Now, it is shown in the seventh and eighth verses of the twelfth chapter of the First Corinthians that one may receive from God the manifestation of His Spirit sufficient to fit them to be teachers of their fellows, although they may not be ordained ministers of the Gospel, as follows: "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit."

I could quote numerous other authorities if I thought it were necessary. Enough has been shown to maintain as sound Scripture the assertion that elders are contemplated by God as a part of the Church government.

I have by no means got to the end of my argument; but the Moderator informs me that my time is about up, and I will detain you but a moment longer in conclusion.

A body of ruling elders, sympathizing with the pastor in his work and with the people in spiritual interest, would do a vast amount of good and be a help and comfort to all. The Lieutenant Governor of Virginia, himself an elder, has said that such a body of men may be of great influence in the world. Indeed, they may be and ought to be, and when the ruling elders of the great Presbyterian Church are everywhere awakened to their high powers and duties and shall receive the recognition and support of all the members of the churches in carrying out its duties, then may we expect to see our Church rise and shine in the law and power of God.

A paper was read by Professor Samuel J. Wilson, of Allegheny, on the

"DISTINCTIVE PRINCIPLES OF PRESBYTERIANISM."

The idea of the Church rests upon and rises out of the eternal purposes of Jehovah. In working out this divine thought, in working out this eternal purpose, He employs means that have form and visibility. The true people of God throughout all the ages—those who have been and those who will be redeemed—constitute the invisible Church; but as man can only judge as to who are the people of God by the credible purposes of those who profess the truth, hence the importance of the visible Church. Believers, together with their children, constitute it. The Church, therefore, in its idea, rests upon no mere sensual expedient, but upon God's own eternal purpose. If we must have Churchism, let it be that Churchism which has breadth and length and depth, and whose idea is commensurate with the love of Christ which passeth knowledge that the Visible Church may not be a mere form of government without spirituality. Man's nature is such that he can only judge of the internal by external objects of sense. God, in order to make His religion one understandable and appreciable by mankind, was compelled to connect with the Invisible Church, which is holy and divine, the Visible Church, which to a certain extent, inasmuch as it is the object of sense, is worldly. The Visible Church of Presbyterianism claims and endeavors to keep itself as close as possible to the Invisible Church. The noted feature of our form of service is its almost utter lack of pomp and circumstance, when taken in contrast with the Catholic or Episcopal form of worship. We claim that very fact shows that we more nearly approximate the Invisible Church. All that tends to please the eye and entrance the ear to the detriment of the soul, is, in our point of view, objectionable. Jesus Christ has given us a law and form of government, and to Him alone is the Church responsible for what is different from it in her legitimate and proper sphere. These laws, given by Christ to His Church, are contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament: which Scriptures Presbyterianism holds to be the only and sufficient rule of faith, and not only to the New Testament but also to the whole Bible, Presbyterianism has ever been loyal. The Old and New Testaments are not in antagonism. There is not any inconsistency shown by contrast. The one is a supplement to the other, and Presbyterianism is true to both the new and the old alike. In neither can be found an excuse or authority for prelacy. The primitive Church was without all the forms and signs that afterward were brought into it during Roman Catholic ascendancy, and the Reformation was directed against this very materialism which had become a part and parcel of the Church. There is no doubt that such a form of service as the Roman Catholic or Episcopal commends itself to the public taste, but it is not the religious and spiritual part of man which is affected.

There were Presbyterians ages before Papacy was born or Prelacy ever dreamed of. We date far beyond Apostolic time. The government of the synagogue was Presbyterian. The system is spiritual, and because spiritual it is legitimate and historic. It is drawn directly from the Word of God. There are no bishops—no members of the clergy elevated above others—but we all derive our inspirations and commands directly from the Godhead. The spirit of the Bible through and through is Presbyterian. That Apostolic Presbytery was in the third century superseded by Prelacy is only too obvious, but such a policy sprang not from true Christianity or from anything that was recommended or authorized by Holy Scriptures, but from the spirit of Paganism which had crept in, bringing with it its priests and sacrifices, forms and ceremonies. During the Middle Ages whenever a witness for this truth was found who desired to bring the Church back to its primitive simplicity, then and there was found a Presbyterian. That may be found in the history of the Reformation. Every reformer was a Presbyterian; every witness of the truth during the Middle Ages was a Presbyterian. Along the whole line of the ages Presbyterian blood has been sprinkled and the ashes of Presbyterian martyrs have been scattered. Christ is King alone. He has no vicar, and and one who usurps such a place usurps the place of God.

THE DISCUSSION.

When the subject came up for discussion in five minute speeches the following remarks were made:

Rev. J. T. Smith (Baltimore)—It seems to me the whole difficulty as to the whole theory of eldership springs from a misunderstanding of the term. In the minds of very many the term "representative" is taken as equivalent to "delegate," but the power is in the body of the people, and those officers are simply their delegates, executive officers—that, and nothing more. There is another theory, and, as I suppose, the true one, which recognizes this fact, that all power is primarily or inherently in the Lord Jesus; that that is intrusted by Him primarily to certain officers, and that those officers are directly the representatives of the Lord Jesus, receiving the law from His lips and executing His will, and not after the will of the people. The call of Christ is invisible—it does not ascertain persons to whom it is intended; that is ascertained first by the consciousness of the call upon the heart, by providential intimation as to his qualifications and circumstances, and then again and chiefly by the election of the people. As an officer of the Church he is not a mere executive of the will of the people; he is the representative of Christ direct and accomplishing His end. Now, the phrase, representative of the people implies just this: If he is chosen from among the people, and he understands the wants of the people, and in this regard he represents them more directly than the preaching elder can do. I intended simply to call attention to this fact: That the whole difficulty, it seems to me, hinges upon the use of this word "representative," and if we understand that as simply a delegate or an executive officer of the people, the difficulty will be removed.

Hon. James Dawson (Washington, Iowa)—I do not want to criticise anything that has been said on the eldership, the ruling elder, only something with regard to the importance of his position as fixed by the Presbyterian Church and as authorized by the divine institutions. All elders are ruling elders; all are not teaching elders. He stands, so far as ruling is concerned, on a perfect level with the minister in everything except his word and doctrine, and we do not as elders, I fear, feel this to be so important a matter placed upon us as it is—that the purity, the peace and the prosperity of the Church lie upon the eldership equally with that of the teaching elder. And it is said that the elder that rules well is worthy of double honor, and especially he that labors in word and doctrine. There is no higher duty that can be placed upon a man upon this earth than to be the teaching ambassador of Jesus Christ, and the next position he can be placed in is to rule in the house of God. If we felt the importance of this our Churches would be likely to prosper. Permit me to say that an elder has a great deal to do in the Church, and the young minister in the congregation never had a better instrumentality to help him up to honor and dignity than a faithful, prudent corps of elders as his assistants, and faithfulness is required on the part of the elder, as well as on the part of the minister, for the purity and prosperity of the Church of Jesus Christ. Let me say here that the Master places the faithful teacher of His Word at the head and the unfaithful at the tail of creation. Faithfulness is required, and so it is equally required of the eldership as it is of the ministry.

James Croil, Esq., (Montreal, Canada)—Professor Wilson, who made reference to the eldership yesterday, went a great deal farther than I think a great body of the elders want to be carried. I do not think we claim for ourselves equal power with the minister in any regard. If I understood Professor Wilson, he made that statement. The other gentleman who read a paper upon the subject did not go far enough for my fancy. He just exactly stopped where I think he ought to have begun. He did not tell anything about the modern elder, and that is what we are all very much concerned about. Now, I can only say a few disjointed sentences, because it is a very large and important subject. I hope to elicit from other members of this Council some very useful and valuable information on this point. I ask this question: Is an elder a Presbyter? If he is a Presbyter, then he is a bishop. If he is a bishop, then he is a teaching elder, surely. How many kinds of bishops are there in the New Testament? I want to get an answer to this question; If you ask me is an elder a Presbyter, I say yes, and I say no. I say theoretically he is a Presbyter, but I say practically, after an experience of thirty years in the eldership he is not. Mr. Chairman, I say, yes, he is a Presbyter, and to what extent does this entitle him to the privileges in Presbytery? Oh! you say, he may sit and vote and deliberate in the Presbytery. Perhaps he may to a certain extent. Take my own case. I am one of eighteen elders, and I am to be selected as a presbyter, but I am only one of eighteen, and only stand one-eighteenth of a chance to be selected. It takes nine tailors to make man, but in this case it takes nineteen elders to make a presbyter. [Laughter.] You say he may take part in the prayer-meeting; he may visit the sick. So may any other Christian man, I presume. Oh! you say, but he may assist the minister in dispensing the ordinance of the sacrament. I suppose if there was lack of elders any pious man in the congregation may be asked to do that. You say, "Oh! he may even be asked to take up the collection." [Laughter.] I submit Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly competent for the doorkeeper to do that. So I do not see that we gain so very much in our standing by these qualifications. I am speaking of the modern elder, not of the Scriptural elder. I want to be told to which class I belong. You say an elder is a Presbyter. I go to the Presbytery. Did any one ever conceive it to be a proper thing to ask an elder to take a Moderator's place in the Presbytery; it was never done in point of fact; at least, I never knew of a case of it in Canada. I am merely stating that as one of the disabilities of the eldership. Here is a point that no one will dispute. And who is it that ordains ministers? Is it the Presbytery? Yes; all the Presbyters? No; if an elder should come forward and attempt it it would be said, Hands off! You should not put your hands on the minister's head. You have nothing to do with the ordination of ministers, therefore, I am not a Presbyter to that extent. What is the church session? That is a meeting of the elders with the teaching elder in the chair. Now, it must be well known to members of this Council that no such meeting of a church session can possibly be held unless the minister is in the chair. Is not that a disability? I cannot occupy the chair even in the absence of the minister, if there should be no Church session held to doomsday. I only show that we are not Presbyters, as some of you will make us to be. It follows that the modern elder, in my estimation, is not the Scriptural elder. I do not see that there is any way of getting out of the difficulty, but I think if such be the case it is just as well to let us know what a modern elder ought to be. The remedy for this is either to reduce the pretensions to the eldership or to educate the elders to a more efficient discharge of their duties.

Mr. Houston (Kentucky)—It is true that the modern elders is not the Scriptural elder, but it is also true that the modern elder ought to be the Scriptural elder. Now why is not the modern elder the Scriptural elder? There are two reasons for it. The qualifications of the Scriptural elder are plainly laid down in the New Testament. He must be a man who is apt to teach; he must be a man who is possessed of administrative qualities; he must be a man who is of good report of them that are without; he must be a man not lately brought into the Church. Now, sir, wherever the man is selected with those qualifications he will be a Scriptural elder. But, sir, too often in our Churches the man is selected because of his high social standing, or because of his wealth, and not because of his Scriptural qualifications, and therefore he is not a Scriptural elder. Again, sir, there is another reason. Principal Grant told us yesterday when we quoted a man's language we ought to quote the whole of it. Now, sir, repeatedly in this matter of the eldership the words of the Apostle Paul have been quoted, and in not one instance have the whole of his words been quoted. What are the whole of these words? Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they that labor in the word and doctrine, for the Scriptures said: "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn, and the laborer is worthy of his heir." In the primitive Church, in the Scriptural Church, these Scriptural elders had a higher position; they had remuneration for their services, and because they had remuneration they became the drill masters of the sacramental host who, by their self-denial, their energy and their elevated consecration they brought the Roman world to the feet of Christ. Wherever you go the elder has the duty to perform and a duty that calls for a large amount of his time; the duties of the Scriptural elder do call for a large portion of his time—and if you do not give him compensation unless he is a very rich man he cannot afford to give the time, and it won't be done. Then you say, in our day we scarcely raise money enough in the churches to pay the preachers, and you talk about giving compensation to the ruling elder, when you do not give sufficient compensation to the preacher. There we strike again at the very core of the matter. I believe on this whole matter of church finances we have departed in our modern times from our Scriptural method, and when we return to the Scriptural method we will pay our teaching elder, and we will pay in the same proportion our ruling elders; and then you will find our elders all brought up on the Scriptural plan.

Henry Day, Esq., (New York)—Mr. Chairman, I think this is a contest between the lay elders, and I think the lay elders ought to settle it. Now, the difficulty with our Canadian brother (Mr. Croil) was, I imagine, that his experience was not exactly like the experience of some other countries. The difficulty seemed to be that he did not assert his rights like a freeman. It may be because he lives in the Dominion of Canada. [Laughter.] Now I tell that brother if he lived in the United States he would feel that he could be Moderator and he would feel that he could be teaching elder, because it is certain that even a lay elder can be Moderator in our General Assembly, and some day that will happen. I would not be surprised if Judge Strong would be chosen as Moderator if he would attend the next General Assembly. It strikes me that this system of lay elders is one of the grandest things in the policy of the Presbyterian Church. It is natural law and the natural method of government—the very government you would all resort to if you were thrown upon a desert island and were obliged to make a government for yourselves. The civil government would be made in this way, and the ecclesiastical government would be made exactly in this way by a representation from among the people and by some one man to represent the authority in the highest sphere. Presbyterianism and that is ecclesiastical government. It is the grandest government and it is one of the proofs that it is a divine government; that it is natural; that it can be everywhere enforced; that it secures every man's rights. I want to say one word about what I think is the advantage of having the lay eldership. There are, as a general rule, certainly one hundred lay members of the Church where there is one Christian minister. Nothing is so important as that the Christian minister shall understand what are the wants of his people, and what are the feelings of his people, how they think and how they act; and have him to bring himself down among them so as to know what they are. Now, how beautifully this is all secured, if you have a representation of eighteen members of a church representing all the members, all the intellectual qualities, all the social status of the church, bring them there, all represented in session. Now, our brother, if he had remembered that he represents a certain class of society, and that he is to do his duty there, he would have found that that is the whole of his duty. We are all equals as I understand. Our Canadian brother says we are not. We do not do the same thing, but we are all equal in authority, and when we come to vote we have just as much power one as the other. I would like to advise my brethren the Bishops, teaching Bishops. I think they would sometimes learn from the eldership. I think you are apt to be too intellectual, I think you are apt to be too philosophical; you are apt not to know how the more common mind that is not all the time reasoning and all the time thinking—how that common mind is affected. Many of us move among all classes of men; we see all sorts of minds brought out, evil and good, and we can educate you in some respects, at least give you our advice. I would like to say a word about something that was said yesterday by our friend Dr. De Witt. I do not believe that we run any risk in these days of giving too much money to cultivate the beautiful. I do not believe when you come here any of you do not rejoice in all the beautiful ornaments of this room. What was it all done for? Why did the instinct go out at once among all Presbyterians to make the room as beautiful as it can be to a certain extent? Why, it is human nature coming out; it is progression in society in all the love of the beautiful. Do not put your foot down and give the world to understand that Presbyterians are going to worship in the bare walls. Do not drive the people away by the bareness of everything surrounding Presbyterianism. Keep up with the times. I do not mean the depraved times. I do not mean mean anything that is wrong.

Rev. Principal D. McVicar (Montreal)—I wish to dissent from some of the views expressed by Mr. Croil. I think he has understated the privileges he enjoys in Canada. I should not like my fair country to be under any cloud, although it is somewhat to the north of you. At the same time, his views are substantially correct. It appears to me quite evident that, as Presbyterians, we are inconsistent in this position which we hold in relation to what are called ruling elders. First of all, in arguments we are accustomed to establish triumphantly, as we think, the Presbyters and Bishops are identical, we say to our friends of the Episcopal Church that in the new Church the Episcopoi and the Presbuteroi are identical and then turn around with amusing facility and inconsistency and strip certain of these Presbuteroi of the power of the Episcopoi, and refuse to allow them to exercise the functions of the Bishop. We permit them to rule in sessions and in the Presbytery and in the General Assembly they exercise all the powers of the teaching Bishops or elders, but when they return home they are caused to sit on a lower plane; they are not allowed to exercise the full functions which in argument we accord to them. Either cease pressing these arguments or invest ruling elders with full functions of their office. It may be said that there is not sufficient evidence in Scripture to do so. To my mind at least the evidence upon which we make the distinction between the two classes of elders is insufficient, and the evidence upon which we divide the elders into two classes—teaching and ruling elders—is insufficient. It appears to me it would conduce greatly to the advantage of the Church to give full status to these ruling elders and make them, in other words, teaching elders. It may be said that many of them are unfit to be such. The answer is very simple: Make them fit to be such. Let them be persons of proper standing in the Church in an unlimited measure. There can be no doubt at all that this method of pushing back the ruling elder and giving him a lower position than the Word of God gives him is a great weakness in the Presbyterian Church, and our power is to be derived very largely from increasing the efficiency of the session and having all the members of it qualified to preach and to do all the other work which their office includes.

Rev. James Nish (of Victoria)—Mr. Chairman: It is with considerable difficulty that I rise to address this venerable Council and especially to dissent from the deliverances now given forth by the learned Principal who has preceded me. I imagine if we will only correct our nomenclature it will be discovered that we do not detract from the dignity of our ruling elders. The fact is that we have two classes of Presbyteries. We have the Congregational Presbytery and the Ecclesiastical Presbytery. All our elders are members of the Congregational Presbytery, and there all elders stand upon the same footing, although in consequence of his experience the place of President is assigned to the teaching elder. This, however, is simply a matter of arrangement. Any member of the session may be Moderator of the Congregational Presbytery. All the members of the Presbytery, cannot become, or at least it would not be expedient they should become members of the Ecclesiastical Presbytery. The Ecclesiastical Presbytery is made up of representatives, and by arrangement the teaching elder is ex-officio member of this Ecclesiastical Presbytery, while one of the other members is elected as a representative. I maintain that every ruling elder is a teaching elder, or ought to be a teaching elder, and that every teaching elder is a ruling elder. That is our theory, we ought to carry it out more fully into practice. I am afraid at the same time that some of our ruling elders have entertained that view of the office which was certainly held by a member of a congregation who had expressed a desire to be made an elder. They began to question him: "If we were to appoint you an elder could you discharge the functions of the office?" "What are they?" was the reply. "Well, could you conduct prayer meeting?" "No, sir: I am not qualified for that." "Well, you could at least teach a Sabbath school?" "No, sir; I have no aptitude for giving instruction to the young." "But you could go and visit some of the sick; you could assist in a work of this sort." "No, that is just the very thing I am not fitted for." "What could you do, supposing we were to appoint you a member of the session?" "Well," he says, "look here, if you give me a place in the session, and any matter is brought forward at any time I think I could manage to raise an objection." [Laughter.] Now, sir, I apprehend we have neglected our duty in not letting ruling elders realize their obligations and responsibilities. I know the gifts are possessed by them and need to be developed. This is thoroughly religious development.

Hon. Peter S. Danforth (New York)—Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that if any one can speak upon this subject of the eldership, I ought to speak. For forty years in succession I have been an elder in the Reformed Church of North America, and I have had no difficulty in finding my status. I have had no desire to preside in our General Synod. I have had no difficulty in finding my own place. I had supposed, sir, that my duty as an elder in the Church was to be as an assistant to the pastor, to uphold his hands in every good work. I had supposed that was a part of my duty, at least I have tried to discharge the duty in that way, of aiding the minister of the church punctually. I had supposed that in the absence of the pastor the prayer-meeting was my field of duty so far as in me lie to take his place for the time being, and either myself conduct or some other elder of the church conduct the meeting and participate in the solemn and interesting exercises of that meeting. I have found no difficulty in finding what there was to be done by an elder. Taking the Bible as my standard and the rules of my Church, there is no difficulty. It seems to me that an elder can easily find his place, and if he will be faithful to his Master he will find enough to do to occupy all his time. A praying, active, consistent elder never finds his hands tied by the minister or by the congregation.

Rev. Dr. Robert Knox (Belfast, Ireland)—Mr. Chairman, I believe that if our elders do not take a part so much as we might hope they would take in spiritual work, the fault lies largely with the clergy. I have gone on the principle for many years of training my elders and cultivating their gifts and giving them opportunities of not visiting people merely, but addressing the people, and when I left Europe to come to this Council I handed over to a body of nine elders the entire work of conducting the prayer-meeting during my absence, and on the Sabbath before I left, I stated to my congregation that I could not find a preacher for the next Sabbath and I had spoken to two of the elders and one of them would conduct the service in the morning and the other in the evening, and that they might expect to sit at the feet of two ruling elders. Now I have often, in my own church, sat upon the platform and called upon one elder after another to rise and address the people. They were trained for that work, and I have found invariably where the minister invites and encourages an elder, if he is a man of the right stripe, that he will be prepared to take part in all spiritual work, and, if God has given him the gift, even to occupy the pulpit. We should take the blame on ourselves as ministers if elders do not help us as they ought to do in our spiritual services.

Rev. Professor Nicholas Hofmeyer (Cape Colony)—Mr. Chairman, I am not going to address you as a minister, but as an elder. I am an elder of our church, and a few years ago I sat in our Synod, while I am at the same time a theological professor. Allow me to call your attention to two points which I think have been omitted in this discussion. One or more of my co-Presbyters have argued that as Presbyters we have a right to all the functions as Presbyters. The glory of Presbyterianism is this. We have not only the principle of liberty, but the principle of order, and for the sake of order it won't do to say that every brother shall baptize, for instance. Now, for the sake of order and many other reasons, we separate, we may say, a certain class of elders from another class of elders, and call them teaching elders and ruling elders. Another thing we must not forget, there is a diversity of gifts, and one man may have the gift of governing and not the gift of teaching, and it would be a sad thing if a man could not be elected an elder because he is not able to teach.

THE YEARS PASS ON.

"When I'm a woman, you'll see what I'll do!
I'll be great, and good, and noble, and true;
I'll visit the sick and relieve the poor—
No one shall ever be turned from my door.
But I'm only a little girl now,"
And so the years pass on.

"When I'm older I'll have more time
To think of heaven and things sublime;
My time is now full of studies and play,
But I really mean to begin some day.
I'am only a little girl now."
And so the years pass on.

"When I'm a woman," a gay maiden said,
"I'll try to do right, and not be afraid;
I'll be a Christian, and give up the joys
Of the world with all its dazzling toys;
But I'm only a young girl now."
And so the years pass on.

"Ah me!" sighed a woman gray with years,
Her heart full of cares and doubts and fears.
"I've kept putting off the time to be good,
Instead of beginning to do as I should;
And I'm an old woman now."
And so the years pass on.

Now is the time to begin to do right;
To-day, whether skies are dark or bright;
Make others happy by good deeds of love,
Looking to Jesus for help from above,
And then you'll be happy now,
And as the years pass on.

AN ADDRESS.

To the Churches of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg:

DEAR BRETHREN :—The time has come to begin the collecting of funds for the work of Home Missions. The Presbytery at its late meeting, directed the committee having the work in charge, to make out an estimate of the amount of funds necessary to carry on the work in our bounds next year, and to apportion the same among all our churches.

The committee, consisting of W. W. Pharr, W. E. McIlwain, E. H. Harding, J. L. Brown, S. H. Chester, G. L. Cook, G. S. Robison and G. D. Parks, carefully considering the wants of our large missionary field, and carefully estimating the ability of each church, came to the conclusion that we could and ought to raise at least $1,500 for missionary and evangelistic work for 1881.

And we feel sure, Brethren, that if you could for awhile stand in the position in which our committee is placed, and see and know what we do, you would say that the estimate above named, is less than our large Presbytery ought to make. It will require only about thirty-eight cents per member for each of the causes. With the hope that it might enable all the churches to feel a deeper interest in this work which Christ is giving us to do, the committee directed a letter to be prepared and sent to you, setting before you its claims and encouragements. You have been called on from year to year to contribute your money to the cause, and you would doubtless want to know what good is being accomplished—what encouragements there are to continue giving.

Brethren, the greatest inducement is, that the Lord requires it, that His name may be glorified through the preaching of the Gospel, and that He has declared that it shall not return unto Him void. But it is well for us to know, that we may be thankful for, the evidences of His blessing on our efforts. And we are thankful to be able to say that we have good cause to thank God and take courage; for the efforts of past years are, through God's blessing, bearing precious fruit.

A few years ago we began the work in Union and Anson by sending an evangelist to these counties, and gave him from the funds of Presbytery, $500. Now we can support a man in each county by an appropriation of $250 or $300. That is double the work for half the money. The Presbytery has, therefore, determined to divide this field and directed the committee to look out a suitable man for Anson. Then, to our efficient worker, R. A. Miller, giving all his time to Union county, we may hope soon to see a self-sustaining field there also.

Within the last twelve months, our cause in Buncombe county has put on a bright and hopeful face. Mainly, through the effects of the war, our church in Asheville was greatly weakened, and for a time drew aid from the Presbytery; but it has lately become fully self-sustaining. Red Oak, Oak Forest, and Swannanoa have not, since the war, had the means of grace sufficiently often, or so continuously as their growth required. Notwithstanding the irregular and insufficient ministrations which they have had, two of them—Red Oak and Oak Forest—have secured good houses of worship.

During four or five months of this year, our candidate, Walter Moore, was employed in this field, and under God's blessing Swannanoa was greatly revived and strengthened. Divisions were healed, cold hearts were warmed, those who had been lamenting the sad state of things, were made glad through the work of God, and nearly fifty souls were added to that church. And so acceptable every way was his work in that field, that he is warmly urged to return to it so soon as his seminary course is finished which will be next April. This arrangement, so desirable, will require only $150 from our missionary fund. So the Buncombe field, which a few years ago required $100 for the support of one man, will have the full time of two good men next year, with only $150 from the funds of the Presbytery.

The churches in Henderson and Transylvania were, until about two years ago, grouped under one pastor, and paid $500 for his support. The field was divided, and Brother Davis sent to Transylvania and Brother Martin to Henderson county, and now the same churches are raising for the salary of two men, $900. Mills River, under the earnest efforts of Bro. Martin, has been blessed in various ways. The tone of piety has been greatly elevated, and the church is now in good working condition. This church expects to have a manse for their minister soon, if it has not already been secured. This, when done, will aid very materially towards reaching the self-sustaining point on the part of that field.

The committee, for years has earnestly desired to locate a minister in Haywood county, and has failed to do so just because we had not the money to do it. It is one of the most important and promising fields in all our territory. We have in that county two churches, Waynesville and Bethel. The former has determined to have a church building, and their earnestness in the matter is seen in a very liberal subscription. Waynesville promises to be a very important point at no distant day. It will not be long until it will have railroad advantages, and the soil and climate of this county are such as to secure an increase of population and prosperity. We feel that it is absolutely necessary that a minister be sent to that field, and this can be done by an appropriation of $200. So soon as the churches in that county shall name a man whom they would like to have permanently located as their minister, our committee will take steps towards permanently occupying that field.

In the churches of Franklin and Morrison, Macon county, and at Hiawasse, in Clay, we have Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick, one of the most faithful and judicious workers. And though this field has not yet shown such encouraging results as could have been desired, (there have been peculiar difficulties in the way,) yet the witness, of one of the committee who was sent by the Presbytery to assist Brother Kirkpatrick this past summer, is, that a good and lasting work is being done which must sooner or later bear rich fruit. And from all sources of information we get a clear conviction that the good of souls, the honor of Christ, through a pure gospel, and the prospective importance of our churches in that field all require that Bro. Kirkpatrick should be sustained by your funds, and supported by your prayers. This field will require $275 for at least another year.

There is another fact well deserving your consideration and grateful acknowledgment. In the missionary fields and feeble churches, God has raised up and called into the ministry of our church five or six young men, some of whom are now ordained and doing good work for the Master; the others in course of preparation. This of itself is a rich return for all the money and labor expended in our missionary fields.

You see then, that your contributions of earthly substance in the past, have been doing much good. And still the Lord is calling you to undertake greater things, and by encouragements from what you have done, is stimulating your faith and zeal to do more for Him who gave Himself for you. The committee would not ask your gifts only for the Lord, but also your continued prayers that God would so fill the hearts of all our members with the love of Christ, that they shall feel it to be a great privilege to work and to give to His blessed kingdom.

A card, giving the amount each church is asked to raise will be sent to every session in a few days. Ministers are requested to read this letter to their respective charges.

By order of Committee,
G. D. PARKS, Chairman.

THOUGHTS AND SAYINGS.

BY D. L.

Truth.—Speak what is true,—but let it be pleasant:—Speak no disagreeable truth, nor any agreeable falsehood. Truth is more excellent than silence. Think purely, speak purely, act purely, and the world will be the better for it.

Religion.—Man, without religion, is a being full of contradiction, and the most miserable of all creatures, and as the life and power of religion go out, forms and ceremonies come in, and piety is choked, if not gone.

Charity.—Much is said in the present day about charity between different denominations of Christians, which is all well enough in its proper place and at the proper time. But, if I am not mistaken, the Church of Christ needs just now to learn, not so much a larger breadth of charity, as a sterner and more consistent intolerance of errors and falsehood.

Man, as he is.—It is hard to find a man so rich, as to refuse a gift; and about as hard to find one so liberal, as to be glad to lend.

Fashion.—The height of taste in dress is adaptation. Fashion is often unnatural and artificial; but when fashion, feature and form are a unit, no attention is called to apparel, one simply feels pleased with unity and harmony.

Prejudice from ignorance.—The strongest antipathy in the world is that of fools to men of learning, for they are utterly unable to appreciate the worth of such men.

Virtue in classes.—There are some virtues which are naturally associated together, such as the love of truth, the sense of justice, courage, and personal independence. There is an opposition class of virtues naturally grouped together,—as sympathy, mutual helpfulness, and a tendency to social organization. The serious antagonism in the moral world is that of truth and love. Most cases of conscience which present a real difficulty, resolve themselves into a conflict of truth and love. It is hard to be true, without hurting the feelings of others; and it is hard to sympathize with others, and not yield a little of our inward truth. And yet, there are other cases in which the most perfect harmony exists between them, and they are the nearest and most intimate friends of all the virtues.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.
FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges :

The Rev. F. H. Bickersteth has given the Church Missionary Society £1000 to begin a mission among the Bhils, a hill tribe in Central India.

The 157th meeting of the cathedral choirs of Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester commenced in the cathedral of the latter city, on Tuesday.

Last week, the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon received another attack of his old malady, rheumatism, in one of his knees. Though not of an exceedingly severe nature it was sufficiently painful to prevent the reverend gentleman from leaving his home, and he was on Sabbath unable to take his usual place at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

An iron church, forty by twenty feet in size, was sent from London for the Eskimo on Little Whale River, Hudson Bay. After being two years on the way, it at length reached its destination, and was dedicated last October. A recent letter speaks of eight of the Eskimo being baptized, and thirty more candidates being under instructions.

At the Conference of the delegates from the branches of the Young Men's Christian Associations throughout the United Kingdom, in Manchester, it was agreed to form a National Committee who should have the general oversight and consolidation of the associations. This committee was also empowered to appoint a travelling secretary, and sums of money were promised towards the expenses.

The truth has already taken root in Brazil. Eighteen years ago the first Protestant church was organized in Rio Janeiro, and two persons received into its communion on profession of their faith. Since that time more than three hundred have been admitted into this one organization, mostly converts from Rome. In 1865 a second church was established at Sao Paulo of six persons, which has had a healthy growth, and which has sent out several preachers of the word.

The expulsion of the Jesuits being menaced in certain States of America, where it is thought that Order has obtained a too great preponderance, is a new source of anxiety to the Vatican, where it is feared whole districts might remain without religious instruction if the scheme were carried out. Instructions are being sent out that the Jesuits shall so comport themselves as not to give rise to this danger, and that if necessary the work of the parishes shall be undertaken by other priests. Meanwhile, measures are being taken at the "Propaganda-fide" to have other missionaries ready.

A white garment appears worse with slight soiling than do colored garments when much soiled; so a little fault in a good man attracts more notice than great offences in bad men.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

The second session of the Presbyterian Alliance has accomplished its work and passed into history. Many and various are the opinions expressed by the papers of the day as to its work, in regard to its direct usefulness and the prospective good which will flow from it. In general, criticisms have been highly favorable. The selection of Philadelphia for the sittings was most fortunate, and the direct effect upon the foreign delegates, those especially from the weaker churches of the European continent, and of the far-off lands of Australia, India and South Africa—the direct effect upon these can only have been to strengthen them in the present and to brace them up and to encourage them in their labors for years to come. In Philadelphia there are about one hundred and twenty churches, with over forty thousand communicants, and the adherents of Presbyterianism number certainly over one hundred thousand. Of about fifty-six different branches of the Presbyterian family, embracing about thirty-four millions of people, forty branches were represented by delegates. These delegates were certainly in the main representative men, noted for intellectual ability, profound scholarship and eminent piety. As was to have been expected, the papers read were logical, scholarly, compact yet clear, and brimming with powerful thought. It would not be difficult to except to some things that were done, or other things that were omitted, but on the whole the affair fully realized the most sanguine expectations.

We give to-day the article promised in our issue of 22d ult. as a concluding report from the Alliance. As the papers and discussions presented have a value beyond the immediate circumstances under which they were presented, we shall endeavor to present, as we can, the more interesting in full to our readers. The reports as we give them are mainly from the Philadelphia Press, whose reports, though not entirely free from inaccuracies, were in the main very full and accurate.

CLOSING DAYS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN ALLIANCE.

The last two days of the Alliance were devoted principally to reports and discussions of missionary work in various lands, and miscellaneous business. Besides this at the afternoon session on Friday several papers of importance were read. Rev. Alexander Mitchell, D. D., of St. Andrews, presented a report from the Committee on "Desiderata of Presbyterian History." Rev. Dr. Breed read a paper on "Diffusion of Presbyterian Literature." Rev. Dr. Hatfield of New York, one on "Revivals of Religion," and Prof. David Steele, of Philadelphia on "Personal Religion." Two of these papers were specially admirable, those of Dr. Breed and Prof. Steele. Dr. B. declared that the power of printed thought was never so great and extensive as it is at this day. Book hunger is one of the predominant traits of our time. Nearly everybody reads. The libraries of the world contain millions of volumes. New books are coming out every day. The number of new copies of newspapers issued annually in this country is not less than six hundred millions. The effect of this book-power on the public mind and heart is incalculable. The moral character of the printed page ranges from the highest to the lowest. The great need of the age is a pure literature to counteract demoralizing and infidel tendencies, such as the Presbyterian Church preeminently supplies. Our Presbyterian literature is intensely theistic, christological, and embodies from beginning to end, as to its polity, the representative idea. The great doctrines of grace, clear-cut and well-defined, are brought prominently forward. These are among the ideas that pervade Presbyterian literature—the very ideas, as history and biography show, that go to build up character, to ennoble the spirit of man, and equip him for grand achievements. The testimony of keen-eyed observers who are not Presbyterian sympathizers, as to the practical advantages of a literature springing from the Presbyterian system, is not wanting. Dr. Currie, an able leader of the Methodist Church, writes of the Westminister Confession: "It is the most glorious and most comprehensive system of doctrine ever formed. It is a comprehensive embodiment of nearly all the precious truths of the Gospel. We concede to the Calvinistic Churches the honor of having all along directed the best religious thinking of the country." Some of the best fruits of Christian life and noblest specimens of Christian character have been exhibited among those who were Calvinistic in belief. Wide diffusion therefore of the Confession, Catechisms, Presbyterian books and papers that distinctly set forth the great Pauline system of faith and order would exert a most happy and healthy influence. Prof. Steele's paper—Personal Religion—was listened to with marked attention. He alluded to the fact that the age in which we live is one of great activity. There is a constant striving after higher attainments. This is true in art, science, philosophy, literature and discovery. There is an increasing desire for social improvement and material comfort. Amidst this restless, ceaseless activity the love of Jesus is thrown off. Personal religion is neglected in the rush for material good. The pressing need is of a reattachment of one's self to God—a sound Scriptural conversion—an absolute surrender of the entire man, understanding, will and conscience; and passions renovated and readjusted—the whole man so consecrated that the social, domestic and business life shall be in every act, for "the glory of God." This return to God will undoubtedly characterize a new epoch in the spiritual history of the world.

MISSION WORK IN VARIOUS LANDS.

Quite a number of distinguished missionaries, native and foreign, were delegates to the Alliance just closed in Philadelphia. The Council had the pleasure of hearing among others, Rev. Adolphe Monod, of Carcasonne, France; Rev. Mr. Buscarlot, of Lausanne, Switzerland, Rev. Antonio Arrighi, of Italy; Prof Comba, of Florence; Rev. J. E. Szalatnay, from Velim, in Bohemia; Rev. Fritz Fliedner, from Spain; Rev. Leonard Anet, from Belgium; M. Eugene Reveillaud, of Paris; Rev. Narayan Sheshadri, of Bombay, India; Rev. M. McKenzie, of Swatow, China; Rev. Thomas Nelson, of New Hebrides; Rev. Mr. Ewing, from Egypt; Rev. Mr. Constantine, from Athens, Greece; Rev. Mr. Beattie, from Syria; Rev. Allen Wright, from Choctaw Nation. Most of these who spoke made a profound impression. These devoted men bring the glad news of the organization of new churches and the spread of the Gospel in every land. The spread of religious liberty on the Continent of Europe is a notable sign. The Ancient Waldensian Church (the Martyr Church) so long bound, is now free, and through her missionaries she is preaching a pure Gospel beyond her ancient seats, down the Italian Peninsula—spreading all over it a net work of Christian missions. There is an effort being made, I may say, to create a permanent fund for the benefit of the Waldensian pastors. They receive now $300 annually a piece, a sum totally inadequate to support a family. It is proposed to raise this sum to $500. Already, Scotland has raised nearly $30,000, and it is hoped the Presbyterian Churches of America and England, will raise an additional $30,000, and thus show in a substantial way their sympathy with a poor and struggling church. Italy is making great progress towards the light. Since the downfall of the temporal power of the Pope and the unification of Italy under Victor Emanuel the Gospel has been preached openly. Bibles are sold and tracts distributed beneath the very shadow of the Vatican, and neither Pope nor priest can stay the good work. In the eloquent words of Rev. Mr. Arrighi before the Alliance: "During these 20 years (of Italian freedom) Christ crucified has been proclaimed to the Italian people, and to-day I stand here in the name of ten thousand Christians converted by the labors of devoted missionaries and repeat to you the words of the Apostle Paul: 'We, of Italy, salute you,' we of Italy greet you,' we of Italy bring to you Christian salutations in the name of a common Father, in the name of a blessed Jesus, in the name of true Christian faith and in the name of true Presbyterian Catholicity."

There was also an interesting statement of the condition of things at present in France. There is an open door for evangelical work. The people are weary of Romanism. The distinguished French author, journalist, and lawyer, M. Eugene Reveilland, who reached the Council late in its sessions, from Paris, was enthusiastically received and made a fine impression. As he cannot speak English, he is accompanied by Rev. Mr. Dodds of the McAll missions, who interprets for him. Mr. Reveilland is here in the interest of Gospel work in France and will remain until about the first of next year visiting most of the larger cities of this country. He gives an encouraging statement of the work in France. The McAll missions are doing a grand work in Paris. The truth is spreading in other places. The great need of France in order to national stability and freedom is the Protestant faith.

The two great foes of the Gospel on the Continent are Rationalism and Romanism, yet these can be overcome by the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and it was a joy to the great Council to hear from so many quarters of its steady advance.

Saturday was devoted to miscellaneous business. After reading a letter to be sent to the Churches, by Rev. Dr. Lang, of Glasgow, Rev. Dr. Dickey, of Philadelphia, made the farewell address. After prayer by Rev. Jonathan Edwards, of Danville, Ky., the Chairman declared the Council dissolved.

On Sunday morning some seventy of the members preached in the various pulpits of Philadelphia. In the afternoon, numerous Sabbath Schools were addressed by the delegates. In the evening, (7½), farewell meetings were held in some twelve or fifteen churches. Most of these meetings are reported to have been of great interest and attended by immense congregations.

On Monday, through the kind invitation of Dr. McCosh, some two hundred and sixty delegates and their friends visited Princeton, the seat of the College and Seminary. The day was one of great delight. The delegates and others were met at the depot by the Faculty of the Seminary and conducted to the Seminary Chapel where Dr. McGill gave an address of welcome. The Seminary buildings and library were then visited; after which all repaired to the First Presbyterian Church where the college faculty, through Dr. McCosh, extended a hearty welcome to all to see Princeton, the college, &c. Brief addresses were made by Revs. Drs. Main and Lang and Messrs. Sheshadri and Geo. H. Stewart. Dr. McCosh then led the way to the cemetery where repose some of the most illustrious men this country has ever produced—Burr, Edwards, Witherspoon, Finley, Davies, the Alexanders, Hodge. After a sumptuous dinner at the University hotel, all were highly entertained by a visit to the college buildings—the gymnasium, museum, library, halls, etc. The day closed with a reception at the President's mansion, and by 6 o'clock the Alliance that left Princeton depot at 5 p. m., were beginning to scatter far and near, some to New York and the East, others to Philadelphia and the South and West, still others across distant seas. A few weeks ago brethren in Christ were gathering together, now they are dispersing to the four quarters, carrying with them, doubtless, fresh courage and zeal in promoting truth and righteousness among men.

THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

The missionary meeting held during the sessions of the Alliance was highly interesting. Dr. J. Leighton Wilson read a paper on Co-operation among Missionaries and pointed out some of the advantages, viz:

In a general way there will be secured, on the one hand, all the advantages which usually result from concentrated action, and on the other will be avoided all the evils which necessarily flow from distracted counsels, even when the different parties aim to accomplish the same object; to provide a religious literature for the people and the course of study that should be prescribed for young men preparing for the ministry; the terms of admission to church membership; how certain vices are to be treated in connection with Church discipline; what salary should be allowed to native helpers and various other questions of a similar character. After arguing the various points in detail, Dr. Wilson said: There is something sublime and grand in the idea that all the varied branches of our venerable Presbyterian Church should be found earnestly working, not to extend and perpetuate their own peculiarities of worship and government, but to rear one simple, pure, scriptural Presbyterian Church for each one of the great sections of the unevangelized world.

Dr. Wilson's plan did not look to organic union, but aimed, if we understand it, to present to the heathen in China, India or other countries simply one Presbyterian Church, as the Presbyterian Church of India, &c. This would simplify the matter greatly to the heathen, who cannot be supposed to comprehend the differences between Presbyterian Churches. The plan would not, as we take it, interfere with the present support of the missionaries by the various churches.

Rev. Dr. John C. Lowrie, of New York city, said:

I bless God for the degree of co-operation that now exists. It has great width and is deep in the hearts of thousands and tens of thousands of God's people. We are agreed as to a great many things, and, in fact, I may say as to most things. But yet the question of co-operation implies diversity. There are some diversities at home in the selection and appointment of missionaries, for instance, and as to whether by formal action of churches, as in some cases among us, or whether by accepting volunteers; as in other cases, or whether on some middle ground, by which both ends may be secured. There is, however, another point about which there is a diversity of view, another point of great practical moment, and that is the one which relates to the collection and supervision of funds. I need not dwell upon that point. Then there is also a third point of great interest, and that is the one which relates to the work which is to be performed by our Christian women. We are all advocates of their work, but there are questions as to the manner of it and as to the closeness of the relations between their organization and the Boards of Missionary organization of the Church at large. Having some general ideas concerning the work of all the members of the Church, I am disposed to think that in the branch of the Church with which I am connected this connection between the ladies' work and the general work is one in which there has been a satisfactory gain. They are the auxiliaries of the general Board. Certain matters are reserved to that Board, and their operations are inside of the estimates which come from missions, and yet I admit that there are questions concerning their work which are of great interest, and about which we cannot altogether as yet agree. But all these home questions may be left to the Churches at home, and when we go abroad on various missionary fields we find diversities of opinion, but not of views, which are very serious. For instance, in regard to the great subject of Christian education, we find a diversity of opinion existing, and especially as that subject relates to the training of native ministers. As has been stated by Dr. Murray Mitchell, there is a project pending in China which has been advocated by one of the leading Scottish missionaries, for a general Presbyterian college in that country, and the same idea has been suggested by our brethren in India. Some of them are decided advocates of the project, and perhaps their advocacy is mainly upon the ground that the Government system, in its influence and practical workings, tends to discourage the Christian religion and hinder the spread of the Gospel; and some of our brethren are so impressed with the idea to which I have referred that they are in favor of a general Presbyterian college in India; but I confess that I feel afraid of this great institution. I think the true theory of our whole work abroad is the theory of the grain of mustard seed, or the leaven in the meal, or as has been stated by our Lord, "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation."

The Business Committee to whom the subject of co-operation was referred reported through their chairman, Rev. Dr. George D. Matthews. The following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"Inasmuch as one of the great objects embraced in the Constitution of this Alliance is to entertain all subjects directly connected with the work of evangelization, such as the relations of the Christian Church to the evangelization of the world, the distribution of mission work and the combination of Church energies, especially in reference to great cities and destitute districts, and the Council having manifest evidence from various quarters of the strong and increasing desire among the Churches in connection with it that some suitable measures should be taken to secure, as far as practicable, co-operation in the work of foreign missions; therefore be it resolved,

"That the success which has attended the work of foreign missions claims devout gratitude to God from the whole Christian Church, and the desire expressed for such co-operation as may be found suitable should be recognized as one of the most hopeful signs of the future.

"That the Council is deeply impressed with the importance of social union in the practical work of the mission field among the Reformed Churches, and regards it as most desirable and timely were the Churches represented in the Council to adopt such measures as in their wisdom might seem meet, for maturely considering the question of the best means of further organizing and unifying our evangelism in the several fields in which a plurality of Presbyterian ministers are contingously established, and this in such a manner as to be in harmony with the interests and claims of the parent Churches.

"That the Council assume no right to offer suggestions or initiate measures for the Churches represented in it, but does hereby approach them by the communication of the paper herein embraced with the expression of its fraternal and dutiful regards as an assemblage of Committees appointed by them to confer upon matters of common interest in promoting our common Christianity, and with the prayer that its great and holy ends may be advanced by a careful consideration of the matters set forth.

"To carry into effect the reference of this matter to the several Churches concerned in it, the Council does hereby appoint two Committees, namely: For the United States and Canada—Rev. William M. Paxton, D. D., of New York, Convener; Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, D. D., of Baltimore; Rev. J. B. Dale, of Philadelphia; Rev. Philip Peltz, D. D., Rev. James Boyce, and Rev. Dr. Fisher, of the Reformed Church. For Europe and other places not otherwise provided for—Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, Convener; David Maclagan, Esq., Edinburgh; Rev. Prof. W. Graham, D. D., of London; Rev. George Robson, of Inverness; Rev. John Marshall Lang, D. D., of Glasgow; Rev. Jr S. McIntosh, of Belfast; George Smith, Esq., of Edinburgh; Rev. W. H. Smith, of Kirk Newton.

"It shall be the duty of this Committee to communicate in such manner as they deem best with the Churches assigned to them and report the result at the next Council. Should it become manifest in the meantime that plans of co-operation to some extent can be agreed upon among some of the Churches interested, the said Committees are authorized and requested to give such aid in carrying them into effect as may be found practicable."

It may be well here to jot it down that the churches of the Presbyterian system lead all others in the work of evangelization of the heathen. The Presbyterian Church is essentially a missionary church.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We had intended bringing up notes of our recent trip to the Council and elsewhere, but Alliance matters, will doubtless prove more interesting to our readers just now. We may give some notes and impressions in our next.

The Council was not dull. Very far from it. One could not look upon the beaming faces and hear the overflowings of kindness and humor from all, without an impression that Christianity as represented by Presbyterianism, despite the calumnies of enemies, is a joyous thing. Even in the Council this overflow of humor would find vent. The typical Scotchman has a quaint humor which is in and over and all around him, and yet which is perfectly consistent with the highest intellectual power, most scholarly qualifications and the most humble piety. And the typical Scotchman—we will be pardoned—is apt to be a Presbyterian.

The discussion on the eldership as given on our first page will be found interesting. Equality in the eldership is a true scriptural principle and a Presbyterian principle. Every Presbyterian minister is ordained as an elder, not as a minister. Elders are assigned different functions or official duties in accordance with their qualifications, which qualifications are, as in the case of the ministry, largely determined by previous systematic training and study. This arrangement for a division of labor does not affect the authority or equality of the eldership. So we contend; although duties esteemed the more honorable fall to the ministry. But indeed we have no sympathy with the spirit among Christians which constantly looks to the assertion of privilege, whether of ministers, elders, or laymen. Is it not enough that we have the assurance of Christ: "All ye are brethren?" He who is servant of all shall be first of all; who serves best will be honored most. In our several places and relations let us determine to fill the measure of duty and then we may claim the full measure of privilege.

We exceedingly regret that we cannot get a copy of the paper read before the Presbyterian Council by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson on "Evangelists and Evangelistic Work," the only copy being in the hands of the proper committee of publication in Philadelphia. On all hands it is conceded that the address was original, closely condensed, and forceful both in thought and expression.

We have said that the papers of the day in general accord a direct beneficial influence to the great Council. Some, however, recognizing the power concentrated in the gathering demand extraordinary results. Some claim that should there not be great revivals of personal religion and immense accessions to the churches as an immediate result, the Council shall be adjudged a failure. A cynical journal of New York, always hostile to Christianity demands not less than that the Council should show how Christianity can elevate the poor to the privileges of the rich or Christianity itself shall be deemed a failure.

We note these not to enter into any discussion but to note how unfriendly critics compliment the Alliance in making these demands. The journal last referred to treats Presbyterianism as fulfilling, or to fulfill the entire mission of Christianity, as conceived by it, and seemingly ignores all else. Surely it is speaking volumes for the display of Presbyterian power and resources that it should be regarded as having the whole work of the Church laid upon it and its prompt accomplishment demanded.

THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The sixty-seventh annual meeting of the Synod of North Carolina will be held in the First Presbyterian church in the city of Raleigh on Wednesday evening, Nov. 10, 1880, at 7 o'clock. WM. S. LACY, Stated Clerk.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

FROM NASHVILLE PRESBYTERY.

The fall meeting of Presbytery on Sept. 18th, 19th and 20th, at Spring Creek church, in Wilson county, Tenn., was not so largely attended as usual, owing to the absence from home of a large number of our ministers. Nothing beyond the regular routine business was transacted that would be of interest so far from home. The fall meetings of this Presbytery are held generally in the country churches, and are always the occasion of much social enjoyment, and this fall the meeting was the occasion of spiritual benefit to the church. This should always be the case, and doubtless would be if the meetings were looked forward to with this end in view. During this meeting preaching was kept up twice a day, which was waited on by a large concourse of people. Dinner for the whole assembly was served each day in the grove adjoining the church, and the most profuse hospitality displayed to the members of Presbytery and the strangers in attendance.

The services were protracted, after the adjournment of Presbytery, throughout the week, resulting in a quickening of the church members and an accession of some eight persons to the communion of the church.

The Rev. W. L. Rosser, the pastor of this church, has three other churches under his charge, making in all a very large pastorate. These churches are all in a healthy and vigorous condition, united among themselves and devoted to their pastor, thus, in one instance at least, verifying the statement that a church may prosper and grow, though able to secure the regular ministry of the Word only once a month. Bro. Rosser was greatly blessed this year also in his protracted meeting at the Mt. Vernon church, having received fifteen additions to the church, while several others found peace in believing who did not then unite with the church.

The Bethsalem church, in this Presbytery, also had a season of refreshing last week. The pastor was assisted by Rev. Dr. Arbuthnot of Murfreesboro, in a series of meetings. The Holy Spirit was poured out, and the church greatly revived. Thirteen professed faith in Christ and were added to the communion of the church.

The Decherd church having lost their house of worship last spring by a storm, are now rebuilding and hope to have their new church edifice completed before the close of the year. This is a deserving people. They have struggled along in the face of many difficulties and discouragements, since their organization as a church nine years ago. This disaster, which befell them in May, was a most severe blow, but with the assistance of other churches in the Presbytery they are going on with the work of rebuilding their church. They still need aid from abroad, as they have about exhausted their own resources. Any contributions that any of your readers may feel disposed to send to Mr. Calvin T. Blair, clerk of session, Decherd, Tenn., will be most gratefully received and will be most worthily bestowed. M. E. N.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct 5th.

Mr. Editor: Yesterday I received on examination three persons into our church here. The Lord seems to be blessing my poor, unworthy efforts for good in this destitute field. I expect to return to North Carolina between the 1st and 15th of November, if I am spared.

Yours, very truly, D. A. McRae.

San Augustine, Texas, Sept. 27.

On Sabbath, 10th inst., two persons were announced as having been received into the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C., on profession of faith, and one by certificate. Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson is pastor.

STEELE CREEK CHURCH.

The following interesting item from the pastor of Steele Creek church, although written Sept. 29th reached us since our last issue, having been unaccountably delayed:

Sunday, the 26th ulto., was our communion day, and a precious season it was. On Friday morning previous, the preparatory services began with a practical and forcible sermon by Rev. G. L. Cook, of Caldwell, N. C. He was followed in the afternoon by Rev. R. Z. Johnston, of Lincolnton, N. C., with an impressive discourse on Prayer.

The interest and attendance increased daily; and on Sunday, the large auditorium could scarcely seat the congregation. Those who have been here on such occasions can best appreciate that language. One noticeable feature in the meeting, was the large colored attendance; for whom comfortable accommodations are made, and who always find a welcome with us.

It was greatly regretted that it was necessary for Mr. Cook to return home on Saturday, Mr. Johnston, however, remained until the end of the meeting on Sunday afternoon, and did effective work. Since the spring communion, seventeen persons have been received into membership—eleven on profession and six by certificate; during this meeting ten infants and one adult were baptized.

There has been no marked visitation of God's Spirit, but quietly and powerfully He has worked through the months gone by; and has made our hearts to rejoice in seeing the work of the Lord prospering in our hands.

The friends in North Carolina—and they are many—of Licentiate J. N. H. Summerell, will be specially pleased to hear that he will soon return to this State. We have reason to know that it involves some pecuniary sacrifice for the brother to make this move, but a conviction of duty founded on the hope of increased usefulness, has led him to accept charge of Poplar Tent in Concord Presbytery. He will enter upon his duties about the first of November. A warm welcome awaits him.

MEETING OF SYNOD.

We have been requested by the pastor of the First Church, Raleigh, N. C., to publish the following request. We invite especial attention to it:

"Delegates who expect to attend Synod are earnestly requested to send in their names at their earliest convenience. The committe of arrangements will be saved much time and trouble by having the names of delegates before their arrival.

Cards have been sent to all the churches in the Synod. A very small number of which have made any response.

Address: E. R. Stamps, Esq.,
Chm'n Com. Arrangements,
Raleigh, N. C."

Correspondents of Rev. John W. Primrose will please address him at Oxford, N. C. on and after 20th inst.

YORK CHURCH, TUSKALOOSA PRESBYTERY.

Mr. Editor:—The Presbytery of Tuskaloosa met at York, Sumter county, 23d ult. York is a new and thriving village at the junction of the Alabama Central and Great Southern Railroad. Our church organization there is of but recent date, and the Presbytery adjourned at the place to give encouragement to the efforts of her little flock. It was a providential presbyterial action. The sessions severally were of a business-like and Christian character. It was evident from the first that the brethren present were truly in the spirit of working, praying and preaching.

The novelty of the occasion brought out a large attendance, and during the sessions a great seriousness prevailed among the people. Presbytery adjourned on Saturday afternoon, the 25th, satisfied that the Spirit of God was moving on the hearts of His people, and it was determined to prosecute the services of praise, prayer and preaching. Bros. Morse and Watson were retained, and most faithfully did they labor until the close of the series of meetings last Sabbath night. God was with His servants giving unction to their prayers, and power to their sermons. The results of the efforts on the occasion was as follows: The strengthening and comforting of God's people, the reclamation of backsliders, the conviction of scores, the conversion of many, and the adding of nine to the church.

Others are expected to unite on examination and some by letter. The whole occasion of the presbyterial sessions and the prolonged services was one of unalloyed delight.

To God be all the glory!

One other item: A young brother will immediately commence study preparatory to entering the ministry.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Concord Presbytery met on 30th ulto. at Newton, N. C. Rev. L. K. Glasgow, moderator, and Rev. B. L. Beall and ruling elder S. Frontis, temporary clerks. Rev. J. Rumple was reappointed trustee of Davidson College for four years. An evangelist has not been secured for the western field; in the eastern field Rev. J. H. Thornwell is retained. His salary has been paid and there is hope that it can be increased. His labors have been efficient and successful. A minute of the death of Rev. Daniel Lindley was recorded and Rev. E. F. Rockwell, Rev. J. Rumple and ruling elder T. H. Robinson were appointed to prepare a biographical sketch. Rev. Dr. W. A. Wood was nominated as the next moderator.

[The official abstract from which we sketch the above will appear very soon. It came too late to be published in full this week.]

Transylvania:—The Presbytery of Transylvania held its fall meeting in the Presbyterian Church, Lawrenceburg, Ky., beginning on the 24th ulto. at 7½ o'clock p. m.

Rev. W. M. Crenshaw, the last moderator, preached and constituted the Presbytery with prayer. Rev. J. J. Chisholm was chosen moderator. There were present eight ministers and seven ruling elders. The next meeting will be held in the church at Somerset in April next.

Presbytery resolved to make an earnest effort to raise its proportional amount of the Sustentation, Evangelistic and Invalid funds.

In accordance with the action of the General Assembly, a permanent committee was appointed to superintend and promote the Sabbath school work.

The churches under our care are directed to observe the last Wednesday in October as a day of prayer for our missions and their work.

In order to prosecute our missionary work in the mountain districts Presbytery resolved to begin anew by raising money to build a house of worship at one point in the field.

A committee was appointed of which Rev. E. M. Green is chairman to examine the Revised Directory for worship and report at the spring meeting.

No action on Retrenchment and Reform.

Most of the members remained over till Monday and enjoyed the delightful services of the Sabbath with Bro. Betts, the pastor, and his good people at Lawrenceburg.

Paducah.—Presbytery met in Columbus, Ky., Sept. 24th, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. E. M. Richardson, of the Presbytery of Memphis. Rev. J. T. Hendrick, D. D., of Paducah, was elected Moderator, and Ruling-Elder T. G. Poore, Esq., of Clinton Church, Temporary Clerk.

Education.—Rev. E. M. Richardson, Secretary of the General Assembly's Committee of Education addressed Presbytery in behalf of that cause, whereupon Presbytery adopted a minute expressing its sense of the great importance of the work, and exhorting our churches to renewed earnestness in prayer that the Lord call our young men to the ministry, and to larger liberality in contributing to the support of the needy sons of the church preparing for the sacred office.

The Sabbath.—A strong paper was adopted deploring the evils of Sabbath desecration, and urging to resolute and united effort on the part of all God's people, of every name, in securing the proper view and treatment of the day as one of secular rest and religious uses.

The Narrative gives a mingled picture of light and shade. On the whole it is cheering in its testimony to faithful labor and life of Christian men and women amid abounding evil.

Licentiates Dismissed.—Mr. A. H. Todd to the Presbytery of Memphis, and O. G. Morton to the Presbytery of Cincinnati.

Ordination and Installation.—Mr. A. J. Creighton was received as a licentiate from the Presbytery of Columbia, and ordained and installed pastor of the Columbus church.

Next meeting at Uniontown, April 14, 1881.

Stated Clerk.

Red River: The Presbytery of Red River has just closed its fall sessions (Oct. 5, 1880,) with the Homer church. The ministerial attendance was full and their entertainment by the citizens most hospitable. The future of this Presbytery is more hopeful. Licentiate James A. McLees, having been received from the Presbytery of South Carolina, was ordained evangelist. Rev. Messrs. D. A. Todd, J. S. Frierson and W. M. Vinie were granted leave to labor within our bounds for six months. But there are still other vacancies. Three of the ministers of this Presbytery are from North Carolina and three from South Carolina. We like the stock. Pray the Lord to send us more. The Homer church has just received four members.

Ouachita:—Presbytery of Ouachita met at Prescott, Ark., Sept. 23d at 7:30 p. m., and was opened with a sermon by the retiring Moderator, Rev. W. T. Howison, from Eph. vi: 18–19.

There were present five ministers and eleven ruling-elders. Rev. I. M. Ginn was elected Moderator and Elder J. E. Hampton, Temporary Clerk.

Rev. W. G. Woodbridge from Tombeckbee Presbytery and Rev. W. E. Burke from St. Louis Presbytery being present were invited to sit as corresponding members.

Licentiates G. F. Robertson, under care of Holston Presbytery, and G. W. Davies, under care of Montgomery Presbytery, were received under care of this Presbytery.

Rev. E. McNair, D. D., was dismissed to the Presbytery of Fayetteville, N. C.

Calls from Washington and Columbus churches, each for one half of the time of licentiate G. F. Robertson were placed in his hand and accepted, and he was ordained and a committee appointed to install him pastor over these churches. Rev. I. M. Ginn, by appointment of Presbytery preached a doctrinal sermon on "Total Depravity," and Rev. W. T. Howison was appointed to preach at next Fall meeting on the "Qualifications and Duties of the Eldership."

One church was reported as organized since last meeting of Presbytery, and committee appointed to organize two more if the way be clear.

Presbytery adjourned to meet at Hot Springs, Ark., Thursday before the third Sabbath in March, 1881, at 7:30 p. m.

E. M. Munroe, Stated Clerk.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Rev. W. G. Woodbridge informs the Southwestern Presbyterian that he has accepted a call to the First Presbyterian church of Hot Springs, Arkansas."

From the Central Presbyterian:

At Walker's Creek, Rockbridge county, Va., two persons united with the church upon profession of their faith, both of them men with families. These accessions increase the number of the names from twenty-nine to forty, there having been eleven added since the organization, a little more than a year since.

The Ninth Street Presbyterian church, of Covington, Ky., caught fire from sparks from an adjoining planing mill and was burned on Tuesday afternoon of last week. It is estimated that the building was worth about $9,000. It was insured for $5,000. The loss will be the more severely felt by the congregation inasmuch as since Rev. Mr. Sommerell left them they have been without a pastor.

The Rev. A. R. Cooke writes from Buford-ville, Bedford county, that he has declined the call to the church at the Hot Springs, Arkansas, and will begin to supply the Wisdom Cove church, near Millboro, according to invitation, on the first Sabbath in October.

From the Southern Presbyterian:

Ten communicants have recently been added to the church at Pulaski, Tenn., under the pastoral care of the Rev. D. L. Wilson.

Last month eight communicants were added to the church at Farmville, Va., under the pastoral care of the Rev. H. H. Hawes.

Seventeen communicants have been added to the church of Sand Spring, in North Mississippi Presbytery.

The Rev. A. R. Kennedy, pastor of the churches at Augusta and Cotton Plant, Ark., has been called to the church at Maysville, Kentucky.

Last Sabbath Rev. N. W. Edmunds was installed pastor of the church at Sumter, S. C., so long the pastoral charge of the late Rev. Dr. McQueen. The installation services were conducted by the Rev. Messrs. J. S. Cozby, W. J. McKay, and J. L. Bartlett.

The Rev. John G. Law, pastor of the church at Darlington, S. C., writes us: "The Rev. Roderick Henderson assisted me at our last communion. The services were continued through the week. Eight communicants were added to the church. A meeting of ten days at Centre Point church, resulted in eleven accessions to the church. Two were received at Turkey Creek. The Centre Point congregation are trying to build a parsonage for their minister."

Five communicants were recently added to New Harmony church in Harmony Presbytery. The church is under the pastoral care of the Rev. R. D. Perry.

Rev. R. S. Burwell writes to the Texas Presbyterian from Dallas, Texas, on 23d ult.:

I thankfully acknowledge the receipt of the following sums of money for the building fund of West Fork church, in Tarrant county:

Denton, $1 10; "A Friend," Knoxville, Tenn., $1; Norfolk, Va., $10.

The land necessary will be given us by Messrs. Levi and J. W. Walker, sons of W. M. Walker, deceased, who was the first Ruling Elder in this church. We thought the land-owner, who has thousands of acres of land in that section, would give us enough for the church, but he did not.

Received six members on profession last Sabbath at this church; among them the head of a family, his wife and daughter. I once more earnestly appeal for help. Will not others send me a nickle or a dime? Any amount will be gratefully received. This is the Lord's work, and I trust some at least of God's people will respond to this worthy cause.

Rev. G. R. Waddel writes on the same day to the above paper from Mason, Texas:

I am here with Bro. J. H. Ziveley; we came here to hold a protracted meeting. There are a few Presbyterians here, and we may, if the way be clear, organize a church. The meeting of the Presbytery of West Texas, at San Saba, was slimly attended; none of the ministers present but Bros. Ziveley, Josephus Johnson and myself. One Elder present—old Col. Caruth, from Flatonio. He is now more than seventy-five years of age. His attendance is a rebuke to the stout, active brethren whom the long journey feared off. We had a good deal of good sound Gospel preaching from Bros. Ziveley and Johnson. They preached alternately, beginning on Saturday night, the 11th, until the following Thursday, when Bro. J. left. Bro. Z. continued to preach till Sunday night. On Sunday morning, the 19th, our little church was dedicated, Bro. Ziveley preaching the sermon. Eight members were added to the church; four on certificate and four on profession of faith. This addition makes forty-nine names on our roll. Two and a half years ago there were only fifteen. I baptized eight children during our meeting.

From the Christian Observer:

At the communion of the Third Church, Louisville, Ky., last Sunday there were three additions to the church. There have also been some five other additions to this church, and some three or four at the Homestead Mission within the last three months. Rev. J. H. Moore is supplying these two points.

Rev. Alexander Cowan, pastor of the church at McMinnville, Tenn., has received a cordial invitation to return to his old pastoral charge—the Hendersonville and Madison churches; and we are advised that he will accept it.

The labors of Rev. William A. Slaymaker are being richly blessed. Since he entered upon his ministerial work in the vicinity of Marion, Alabama, a little over a year, there have been forty-six additions to the churches under his care. Last month he was assisted by Rev. J. S. Frierson, in a meeting at Bethesda church; eight persons were received on profession of their faith, and others who are deeply interested will no doubt soon see the way clear openly to confess Christ. A few days ago three deacons were ordained and installed in Friendship church, and two persons received into its membership.

A correspondent writes that "Rev. J. T. McBryde began services here (Central, S. C.) on Friday, September 24th, preaching morning and night. God's Spirit has been present with us in this meeting in convicting and converting power. Four have joined our church—good, substantial people, on profession of their faith in Christ. Several will join the Baptist and one or two the Methodist church. The faith of this little flock is revived, and our church is gaining ground."

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

A correspondent writes from Nevada county, Ark., that the crops are very poor in that section there having been too much rain for cotton. A new Presbyterian Church will soon be built in Hope, Ark.

The same correspondent referring to the frequent notices of persons having been bitten by snakes, says that more persons have been bitten in Arkansas this season than ever heard of before. The fact causes little alarm however. The following means of cure are resorted to: When one is bitten as soon as possible the mouth of a bottle containing spirits turpentine is applied to the wound. The effect is to draw the poison and change the liquid to a whitish color. When turpentine cannot be obtained a chicken is split in the back and while yet warm from life and without removing the entrails, it is bound to the wound. The chicken soon becomes impregnated with the poison, as is shown by its turning green. Some persons give the patient ardent spirits; others think this unnecessary. After these applications have done their work, the wound is poulticed with snake root or other proper substances.

The Kings' Mountain celebration was quite an imposing affair. Some 12,000 persons, some say double that number, were present. After prayer. Hon. D. G. Fowle delivered the opening address. The Governors or other official representatives of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee took part in the exercises. The same States were represented by young ladies in the unveiling of the monument. The address of the occasion was delivered as had been arranged and announced by Hon. John W. Daniel, of Virginia.

We have advices that the health of the Steele Creek community of Mecklenburg county, N. C. is good, and the crops fully average.

A Short Life of William Ewart Gladstone. This is another of Appleton's Handy Volume Series. Paper; 35 cents. The life of the great English statesman will no doubt be interesting to many of our American readers.

The True Faith of Our Fathers, being, as the author says, a refutation of Dr. Stearns' "Faith of Our Fathers," and a vindication of Archbishop Gibbons' "Faith of Our Fathers." This is a Roman Catholic book, of course. Price 75 cents.

Livy. This is a neat little volume in flexible cloth, price 60 cents, belonging to the series of classical writers, by W. W. Capes, and published by D. Appleton & Co.

Messrs. Wittkowsky & Baruch, of Charlotte, N. C, whose advertisement appears in our paper, are certainly doing an immense business. A visit to their establishment transports one in imagination to the colossal stores of our metropolitan cities, and impresses most favorably by the systematic and businesslike manner in which every thing moves forward.

Death of an Aged and Venerable Citizen.

We received intelligence recently of the death of Capt. Neill Sinclair, and furnish our readers with some particulars that may be of interest. He died on Thursday, August 17th, 1880, at his residence on the Big Marsh in Robeson county, in the 87th year of his age. He was born at Cuilgeitrah near Tarbet in Kentyre, Argyleshire, Scotland, in the year 1794. He was about ten years of age when his father, Duncan Sinclair, immigrated to North Carolina. Together with the Sinclairs there came in the same ship, the Southerland's who settled in Duplin, the Clarkes of Jura, who settled in Bladen, the McGregors and McLeans in Cumberland, the Blacks in Moore, the McEacherns, Livingstons, Johnsons, McLauchlins and McBrydes, who located in Robeson. These emigrants, nearly one hundred in number, arrived in Greenock early in the Spring of 1804, and were detained there till June, when they took passage in the packet ship, Minerva, for Wilmington, N. C., where they arrived on the 4th of August following. Capt. Alexander Carrick, who commanded the ship, with his mates, Graham and Galbraith, and almost the entire crew died of fever at Smithville, and the vessel with a new Captain and crew were lost on the homeward voyage on the coast of Ireland. Capt. Norman McLeon, a "Brither Scot," conveyed the Sinclairs to Byrne's Landing on the Cape Fear, whence they reached their destidation.

Neill Sinclair was married on the 3rd of May, 1821, to Catharine McMillan, of Cumberland county, who with eight children survive him. In many respects Neill Sinclair was an extraordinary man. He was possessed of a strong intellect, was quiet and unobtrusive in his manners, generous in action, warm in his friendship, and practiced that warm-hearted hospitality characteristic of the Scottish race. He led the life of an humble and devout Christian. His faith was that "a' tesgasg dhuinn gach mi dhiadhachd agus ana-mianna aicheadh agus ar beatha a chaitheadh gu stuama gu cothromach agus gu Diadhaidh anns an t-saoghal so lathair." (Titus III 12.)

He was an Old School Presbyterian, having connected himself in early life with the Church at St. Pauls, of which Church he was Ruling Elder for more than fifty-two years. He was thoroughly conversant with the history, doctrines and discipline of his Church, decided in his convictions, and had ever a reason for the faith that was in him. In politics he was a Whig, and was an enthusiastic admirer of Henry Clay. While he always took a lively interest in the politics of the day, he loved the quiet independence of a farmer's life too well to seek an office. He was a strong friend of education, and was a member of the first Board of Superintendents of Common Schools appointed in Robeson. He was at one time Captain of the Militia and Justice of the Peace. He was proud of his lineage, and he never forgot that he was a native of the land of Bruce and Burns and Walter Scott. When he felt that death was approaching, with mind unclouded, with his house in order, at peace with God and man, surrounded by his weeping family, with the prayer, "O Lord, Hold me fast," the spirit of this venerable citizen went forth to receive its reward for the deeds done in the body.

MARRIED.

At the residence of Mrs. Francis C. Douglas, relict of the late Rev. John Douglas, in Steele Creek township, N. C., on the 6th inst., Miss SUSANNA BAKER, of consumption.

Her only struggle was to resign her ministrations of love to our aged and generous benefactress. Having done this,

"Her spirit, like a peaceful dove,
Fled to the realms of joy above."

DEATH OF MRS. MARY A. RITTER.

Saturday evening at 2 o'clock the sad intelligence that the above named esteemed lady had breathed her last, spread rapidly over the city.

Mrs. Ritter had been an invalid for three or four years, but was confined to her bed only a few days before her death. She was born at Hillsboro, N. C., in 1808, and on the 22d of this month would have reached her 72d year. The last part of her life has been spent in this city, where she leaves her only child, Mrs. W. B. Winans.

For forty years a member of the Methodist church, she died in that faith, and worthily exemplified its teachings. Revered and loved by every one who knew her, she lived a life fruitful with Christian charity, and her deeds live after her. Her kind old face and cheering smile have displaced the gloom from many a lonely fireside, and the poor found in her a ministering angel indeed. She made no pretense of her charity, and only the frequency of her good deeds gave the world notice of the sorrows she ministered to. Hundreds here will miss her kindly hand and heart.

Dr. J. B. Cottrell conducted the funeral services at the Methodist church, Sunday evening at 2 o'clock, after which the remains were interred in Fairview cemetery.

The funeral was attended by an immense throng, and the line of vehicles reached well nigh from the church to the cemetery. Hundreds walked out, for the venerable woman had so endeared herself to all classes and ages of our people that her death was felt to be a bereavement to all. Dr. Cottrell spoke of her as one who exemplified in her life that chief principle of the Christian character—charity. He said that he had found it a delight to visit her in her sickness; so genial, so responsive, ingenuous and cordial was she. She was so munificent to the needy, and so considerate of the wants and feelings of those who were about her, that it was no wonder at all that in her sickness and upon the occasion of her death and funeral, there were such unmistakable tokens of sorrow.

Greensboro Patriot and Durham Recorder requested to copy.

At her residence, in Franklin county, N. C., on Friday, the 10th of Sptember, 1880, Mrs. JANE A COOKE, relict of the late Captain Jones Cooke, in the 63d year of her age.

Her maiden name was Kingsbury. She was born in the State of New York, reared in Litchfield county, Ct., and educated at Hartford Female Seminary.

Her father and mother died when she was only two years old, and the care of her tender years of orphanage devolved upon her maternal aunt, Mrs. Ruth Henderson. Mrs Henderson and Mrs. Kingsbury were Mathers, of the Cotton-Mather family.

In 1840 the deceased came to North Carolina to take charge of a select school in Franklin county, at the instance of A. C. Perry, Wm. R. Hargrove, Jones Cooke and Wm O. Green. In homes of these, her patrons, she met a warm reception and genial hospitality, and in turn bestowed upon their children the most thorough and pains-taking culture of mind and heart, inspiring them by the gentleness of her manner and kindly sympathy with a lasting affection akin to that they bear to their own mothers.

In August, 1841 she married Captain Jones Cooke, a man of high character and a prominent citizen in the county. She was his third wife, and for more than a quarter of a century enjoyed a happy married life, surviving her husband eight years lacking a day. There were of this marriage five children all of whom are living and were with her in her last hours. During her painful and protracted illness of several months duration she had the best medical skill, the kindest attention of neighbors and friends, and the unfailing devotion of filial affection. She never murmured, but bore all her sufferings with patience and Christian resignation. The only sorrow she knew was that occasioned by the thought of separation from those she loved most tenderly. The night before her death she several times expressed her joy and hope of reward in these words, "Hallelujah! Come, Jesus, Come."

She was a true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, and for many years a devout member of the Presbyterian church in Louisburg. Always decided and earnest in her religious views and convictions she was ever charitable toward those who differed from her—exceedingly careful and considerate of the feelings of others, it is believed that she never gave pain to the slightest sensibility of any. Her religion was not demonstrative in profession, but of her character the essence, and of her every-day life the guiding principle.

Endowed with a fine intellect, studiously developed, she had a quick perception of fitness and propriety, a well poised judgment, free from disturbing speculations and vain fancies, that led her to right conclusions in matters of family interest and business conduct, when left to her own resources. But alas! she has left us forever. No more shall we behold her in the family circle, the centre of clustering affections and source of beneficent and loving kindness. No more shall her gentle accents greet the ears of those accustomed to wait upon her words of wisdom, cheer, kindness, and prudent counsel.

No more the hearty grasp of her friendly hand shall welcome us at the threshold of her earthly home. She has gone to a brighter home above: gone to Him who said "In my Father's house are many mansions, and I go to prepare a place for you." There may she meet again her children, she loved so tenderly, the friends of her youth, of middle age and declining years, is the sincere prayer of one she early led by the hand in the way of knowledge, virtue and truth.

Her funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Atkinson, of Raleigh, and a large number of neighbors and friends followed her remains to the family burying ground, where she rests beside her husband. G.

Distress after eating, the results of indigestion, will no longer be experienced if a tablespoonful of Simmon's Liver Regulator is taken after each meal, and, if persevering in the use of this remedy for a few weeks, a permanent cure will be effected. It is not unpleasant to the taste, does away with sickening medicine or pills; is a mild laxative, but does not nauseate or irritate the stomach, and, unlike any other known medicine, when its use is discontinued, the system is not left constipated or costive. It is very properly called the Regulator—it removes bilious secretion, cleanses the blood, strengthens the kidneys and assists nature. It takes the place of quinine and bitters of all kinds; is no violent drastic medicine; is gentle and harmless, and warranted not to contain a single particle of any mineral substance, but is purely vegetable.

Those people whose hair is turning gray should use "Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer" to restore it to its natural color and vigor.

NASAL CATARRH!

All cases promptly and permanently cured by
Dr. S. W. BEALL,
Homeopathic Catarrhal Specialist,
A reputable Physician of 30 years' practice.
Not a Douche, Not an Inhaler, Not a Snuff.

Chronic Nasal Catarrh has never been cured by local treatment alone. Catarrh being constitutional requires constitutional treatment to eradicate it from the system.

In connection with Dr. Beall's Nasal Catarrh Specific, a course of treatment is furnished each patient as indicated by the symptoms. Also an Atomizer with cleansing solutions to be locally applied in the form of a spray. Patients at a distance treated by the aid of a carefully prepared diagnostic sheet. No single box or bottle of medicine is applicable to all cases.

Dr. Beall has cured hundreds of cases in its worst form, and patients now being treated in all parts of the United States report rapid improvement. Treatment is pleasant and directions easily followed.

The following is a specimen of the testimonials constantly being received:

To the Public—Statement of A. W. Essey, of the firm of Essey & Harter, Troy, Ohio.

For a number of years I was afflicted with Nasal Catarrh, affecting seriously both my head and throat. The discharges from the nose were streaked with blood, and had a very offensive smell. After a course of treatment from Dr. Beall, I am entirely cured. A. W. ESSEY.

Extract from a Home Endorsement.

"Dr. Beall offers to the public no quack nostrum, and parties can rest assured that humbuggery has no place in the treatment proposed.

"H. H. Williams, Judge Court Common Pleas; John W. Dowd, Supt. Troy High School; S. A. Brewster, Presiding Elder, Springfield Dist., Cin. Conference; Jno. L. Meredith, Cash. First National Bank, Troy, O., &c., &c.

BEATTY'S ORGANS ONLY $65.

Style, No. 5000. Dimensions: Height, 72 inches; Depth, 24 inches; Length, 46 inches; Weight, boxed about 400 lbs.

It is Five Octave, fine Walnut Case of handsome appearance, built plain but very neat, so it will not take the dirt or dust. It contains the celebrated Vox Celeste Stop, which is the sweetest toned and most perfect stop ever placed in an organ, also the Vox Humana Stop, the Grand Organ Right and Left Knee Swell. (4) Four Set of Golden Tongue Reeds, as follows! A set of powerful Sub Bass Reeds. Set of 3-Octave of Vox Celeste, and 2 1-3 Octave each of Regular Golden Tongue Reeds. Besides all this it will be fitted up with an Octave Coupler, which everybody knows doubles the power of the instrument. Lamp stands & Pocket for Music. It has a sliding lid & conveniently arranged handles for moving. Its bellows, which are of the upright pattern, are made from the very best quality of Rubber Cloth. Of great power, and are fitted up with steel springs and the best quality of pedal straps. The pedals instead of being covered with carpet, are made of metal, of neat design, and never get out of repair or foot-worn, like carpet.

☞ This Organ is built expressly for parties who dont want to pay a high price, but want plenty of Music in a plain, substantial case.

I will box and deliver the above Organ on board cars at Washington, N. J. with Stool, Book and Music, for only $65.00.
☞ Please send reference if you do not send money with your order. Remember you are under no obligation. (Not even freight charges.) To keep the organ unless it is just as represented in this Advertisement, as it will be shipped to you on three to five days test trial. And after you decide to keep it, I will then send you a written warrantee for six years. ☞ Those desiring to purchase are requested to visit my Manufactory here.
☞ Illustrated Catalogues and Newspaper, Holiday Edition, sent FREE.
Address, DANIEL F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Speak Nae Ill.

GOOD ADVICE FOR EACH ONE OF US.

Other people have their faults,
And so have ye as well,
But all ye chance to see or hear,
Ye have no right to tell.

If ye canna speak o' good,
Take care, and see, and feel,
Earth has all too much o' woe,
And not enough o' weal.

Be careful that ye make nae strife
Wi' meddling tongue and brain,
For ye will find enough to do
If ye but look at hame.

If ye canna speak o' good,
O! dinna speak at all,
For there is grief and woe enough
On this terrestrial ball.

If ye should feel like picking flaws,
Ye better go, I ween,
And read the book that tells ye all
About the mote and beam.

Dinna lend a ready ear
To gossip or to strife,
Or, perhaps, 'twill make for ye
Nae funny thing of life.

O! dinna add to others' woe,
Nor mock it with your mirth,
But give ye kindly sympathy
To suffering ones of earth.

—Presbyterian.

Plucky.

The boy marched straight up to the counter.

"Well, my little man," said the merchant, complacently—he had just risen from such a gloriously good dinner—"what will you have to-day?"

"Oh, please sir, mayn't I do some work for you?"

It might have been the pleasant blue eyes that did it, for the man was not accustomed to parley with such small gentlemen, and Tommy wasn't seven yet, and small of his age at that. There were a few wisps of hair on the edges of the merchant's temples, and looking down on the appealling face, the man pulled at them. When he had done tweaking them, he gave the ends of his cravat a brush, and then his hands traveled down to his vest-pocket.

"Do some work for me, eh? Well, now, about what sort of work might your small manship calculate to be able to perform? Why, you can't look over the counter."

"Oh yes, I can, and I'm growing, please, growing very fast—there! see if I can't look over the counter!"

"Yes, by standing on your toes; are they coppered?"

"What, sir?"

"Why, your toes. Your mother couldn't keep you in shoes if they were not."

"She can't keep me in shoes anyhow, sir," and the voice hesitated.

The man took pains to look over the counter. It was too much for him; he couldn't see the little toes. Then he went all the way round.

"I thought I should need a microscope," he said very gravely, "but I reckon if I get close enough, I can see what you like."

"I'm older than I'm big, sir," was the neat rejoinder. "Folks say I'm very small of my age."

"And what might your ago be sir?" responded the man with emphasis.

"I'm almost seven," said Tommy with a look calculated to impress even six feet nine. "You see, my mother hasn't anybody but me, and this morning I saw her saying because she could not find five cents in her pocket book, and she thinks the boy that took the ashes stole it—and—I—haven't had—any—any breakfast, sir."

The voice again hesitated, and tears came to the blue eyes.

"I reckon I can help you to a breakfast, my little fellow," said the man, feeling in his vest-pocket. "There, will that quarter do?"

The boy shook his head. "Mother wouldn't l t me beg, sir," was his simple reply.

"Humph! Where's your father?"

"We never heard of him, sir, after he went away. He was lost, sir, in the steamer City of Boston."

"Ah! you don't say. That's bad. But you are a plucky little fellow, any how. Let me see;" and he poudered, puckering up his mouth and looking straight up into his. "Saunders," he asked, addressing a olerk, who was rolling up and writing on parcels, "Is Cash No. 4 still sick?"

"Dead, sir; died last night," was the low reply.

"Ah, I'm sorry to hear that. Well, here's a youngster that can take his place."

Mr. Saunders looked up slowly—then he put his pen behind his left ear—then his glance traveled curiously from Tommy to Mr. Towers.

"Oh, I understand," said the latter; "yes, he is small, very small indeed, but I like his pluck. What did No. 4 get."

"Three dollars, sir," said the still astonished clerk.

"Put this boy down four." There, youngster, give him your name, and run home and tell your mother you've got a place at four dollars a week. Come back on Monday, and I'll tell you what to do. Here's a dollar in advance; I'll take it out of your first week. Can you remember?"

"Work, sir—work all the time?"

"As long as you deserve it, my man."

Tommy shot out of that shop. If ever broken stairs, that had a twist through the whole flight, creaked and trembled under the weight of a small boy, or perhaps, as might be better stated, laughed and chuckled on account of a small boy's good luck, those in that tenement-house enjoyed themselves thoroughly that morning.

"I've got it, mother! I'm took! I'm a cash-boy! Don't you know when they take the parcels, the clerks call 'Cash?' Well, I'm that! Four dollars a week! and the man said I had real pluck—courage, you know. And here's a dollar for breakfast; and don't you never cry again, for I'm the man of the house now!"

The house was only a little ten-by-fifteen room, but how those blue eyes did magnify it! At first the mother looked confounded; then she looked faint; and then she looked—well, it passes my power to tell how she did look, as she caught the boy in her arms, and hugged him and kissed him, the tears streaming down her cheeks. But they were tears of thankfulness now.—Youth's Companion.

A Child's Heart.

The other day a curious old woman, having a bundle in her hand, and walking with painful effort, sat down upon a curb-stone on a fashionable street to rest. She was curious because her garments were neat and clean, though threadbare, and curious because a smile crossed her wrinkled face as the children passed her. It might have been this smile that attracted a group of three little ones, the oldest about nine.

They stood in a row in front of the old woman, saying never a word, but watching her face. The smile brightened, lingered, and then suddenly faded away, and a corner of her old calico apron went up to wipe away a tear. Then the eldest child stepped forward and asked:

"Are you sorry because you haven't got any children?"

"I—I had children once, but they are all d—dead!" whispered the woman, a sob in her throat.

"I'm awful sorry," said the little girl, as her own chin quivered. "I'd give you one of my little brothers here, but you see I haven't got but two, and I don't believe I'd like to spare one."

"God bless you, child—bless you forever!" sobbed the old woman, and for a full minute her face was buried in her apron.

"But I'll tell you what I'll do," seriously continued the child: "You may kiss us all once, and if little Benny isn't afraid you may kiss him four times, for he's just as sweet as candy!"

Pedestrians who saw three well-dressed children put their arms around that strange old woman's neck and kiss her were greatly puzzled. They didn't know the hearts of children, and they didn't hear the woman's words as she rose to go.

"O! children, I'm only a poor old woman, believing I'd nothing to live for; but you've given me a lighter heart than I've had for ten long years!"—Early Dew.

"Then I Have Got It."

Some years ago I was leaving a hall in Glasgow, in which I had been preaching the gospel, when a respectable man, with a very eager face, stretched out his hand and grasped mine saying, "Sir, I am very anxious to get salvation."

"Then," I said, "God is very anxious to save you."

He listened earnestly to hear what I would say to him, hoping some word would give him peace; but I only put the gospel to him in the most familiar text of Scripture. As I reminded him that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but should have everlasting life," he stopped me by saying:

"But I do believe in Jesus."

I replied, "Jesus said, 'He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life.'"

A look of astonishment and joy immediately broke over his face as he said, "Then I've got it! Thank God, I've got everlasting life."

To Be.

A young girl had been trying to do something very good, and had not succeeded very well. Her friends hearing her complain, said:

"God gives us many things to do, but don't you think he gives us something to be, just as well?"

"O dear! tell me about being." Marion looked up with penitent eyes. "I will think about being if you will help me."

"God says:

"'Be kindly affectionate one to another.'

"'Be ye also patient.'

"'Be ye thankful.'

"'Be not conformed to this world.'

"'Become little children.'

"'Be ye therefore perfect.'

"'Be courteous.'

"'Be not wise in your own conceits.'

"'Be not overcome of evil.'"

Marion listened, but made no reply.

Twilight grew into darkness. The tea-bell sounded, bringing Marion to her feet. In the firelight Elizabeth could see that she was very serious.

"I'll have a better day to-morrow. I see that doing grows out of being."

"We cannot be what God loves without doing all that he commands. It is easier to do with a rush than to be patient, or unselfish, or humble, or watchful."

"I think it is," returned Marion.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Persian Legend.

It is related of a Persian mother on giving her son forty pieces of silver as his portion, that she made him swear never to tell a lie, and said: "Go my son, I consign thee to God; and we shall not meet here again till the day of judgment."

The youth went away, and the party he traveled with were assaulted by robbers. One fellow asked the boy what he had, and he answered with a candor that surprised his questioner:

"Forty dinars are sewed up in my garments."

The robber laughed, thinking that the boy jested. Another asked him the same question and received the same answer. At last the chief called him and asked what he had. The boy replied:

"I have told two of your people already that I have forty dinars sewed up in my clothes."

The chief ordered his clothes to be ripped open, and the money was found.

"And how came you to tell this?"

"Because," replied the boy, "I would not be false to my mother, whom I solemnly promised never to tell a lie."

"Child," said the chief, art thou so mindful of thy duty to thy mother, while I am insensible, at my age, of the duty I owe to God? Give me thy hand, that I may swear repentance on it." He did so, and his followers were struck with the scene.

"You have been our leader in guilt," they said to the chief; "be the same in the paths of virtue." And taking the boy's hand they took the oath of repentance on it.—Canada Presbyterian.

Charlemagne's Table-Cloth.

Aix la-Chapelle was one of the favorite residences of Charlemagne. There were often assembled the lords and ladies of his court, with his own family, which consisted of several sons and one beautiful daughter. He was the most intelligent and powerful monarch of his time; his dominions were more extensive than those of the Roman Emperors had ever been. It is more than a thousand years since his death, yet his fame will endure to the end of time.

In the midst of the splendor of his position he was quite simple in his tastes and was particularly devoted to literature and science. Among his most intimate friends and admirers were men renowned for their learning.

One day, after a grand entertainment had taken place in the palace, the guests were amused to see a page enter, and, on bended knee, present to his royal master a salver, upon which was carelessly folded a soiled white table-cloth. Charlemagne, not in the least surprised, threw it into a fire, evidently prepared for the purpose. All eyes were fixed on the fabric, which did not smoke nor blaze, but only assumed a red hot appearance. A few moments passed, and the monarch raised it from the furnace unharmed and white as snow.

"A miracle! a miracle!" they all exclaimed.

"No, good friends," answered the king; "this cloth is woven of a substance which fire purifies, but cannot destroy. It was known to the Greeks who named it asbestos, meaning unchanged by fire; and an Italian writer, who had lived hundreds of years before our time, speaks of a cloth made from some vegetable product which could not be injured by heat. Another mentioned, with apparent sincerity, that it was manufactured 'from the hair of certain rats that lived in volcanoes.' We read, also, that the marvellous cloth was used to wrap the dead before placing them on the funeral pile, that their ashes might be gathered separate from those of the wood."

Thus spoke the mighty Emperor for the instruction and edification of his guests.

While Charlemagne did not quite partake of the wild fancies of the Southern nations, it is not probable that he had a clear idea of the real structure of this mysterious substance. As time advanced, it was fully understood; and now that it has become of practical use, we cannot glance at a newspaper without seeing the advertisement, "Asbestos Materials."

Asbestos is a fibrous variety of a dark-colored rock resembling iron-ore; this is known by the name of hora-blende. Pyroxine, another mineral, also assumes this appearance, but not so often as the former.

We cannot understand why one of the toughest stones can be transformed into a substance as soft, flexible and white as floss silk; neither can we comprehend how the sparkling diamond is produced from charcoal. Yet we must accept these facts and try to learn all about them.

When the hard rock took this beautiful form, it was called by the Greeks amianthus, meaning undefiled, in reference to the ease of cleansing it by fire. This name is now used to distinguish it from the coarser and more impure varieties known as asbestos. It occurs in narrow seams in the rock, and is occasionally found in fibres two-thirds of a yard long. These have a rich satin lustre, and the slender filaments can easily be separated one from the other. A single one, if thrown into the fire, changes into a drop of enamelled glass, while a quantity can be heated without producing any change.

The silk-like appearance of amianthus gave to some ingenious ladies the thought of carding, spinning and weaving it into cloth of different degrees of fineness. Purses, gloves, caps, handkerchiefs and napkins were made of it, and sometimes articles were knitted from the soft exquisite thread. The inhabitants of the Pyrenees wore girdles of this substance, mingled with silver, which they esteemed not only for their beauty, but for some mysterious charm they were thought to possess.

When Napoleon went to battle, he wore a shirt woven of amianthus, which was easily cleansed by throwing it into the fire. In France and Bohemia firemen's clothes and gloves for handling hot iron were made from it. The Russians have also attempted the manufacture of incombustible paper. At one time it was hoped that an important branch of industry might be established for the manufacture of this delicate and useful fabric; but the rarity of amianthus and the difficulty of carding it into durable thread, in consequence of its brittleness, have cause them now to be regarded only as curiosities.

Asbestos, besides being of a coarser texture than amianthus, differs from it in color; the latter is a creamy white, while the former is brown, green, and grayish white. It sometimes occurs in thin interlaced sheets between the cracks and fissures of rocks, and feels something like kid; it is then known as mountain leather; when in thicker masses, it is called mountain cork, referring to its elasticity. It is also found very hard and compact, and then receives the name of ligniform asbestos, from its resemblance to petrified wood.

Asbestos is found in many parts of Europe and various localities in the United States. Staten Island, N. Y., especially yielding large quantities. It is now mined and transported to factories, where it is assorted, cleaned and prepared for the various purposes for which it is used.

It is made into paints of different colors, which are used to protect surfaces exposed to heat or water. Steam-pipes and boilers are covered with some preparation of it that prevents the escape of steam, it is also very valuable as packing in the joints of machinery, and is extensively used in the manufacture of fire-proof roofing and flooring.

Chemists find it very useful as a medium for straining acids, which do not affect this substance.

Asbestos steps aside from its useful career to surprise us by its appearance in one of the precious stones. The peculiar floating light in the gem known as cat eye is due to filaments of asbestos passing through a greenish-gray chalcedony. In the East it is much worn as an amulet, because it is imagined to have the power of enriching the wearer.

This is a slight illustration of the manner in which the apparently useless objects in nature may become of service and ornament to man.—Mary St. Maar.

Home Talk.

A good many men and women covet, and perhaps have, the reputation of "charming conversationalists," who never appear in that role in their own homes. There their talk is confined to humdrum topics, to mere gossip, or to enforcing quiet while they cultivate their precious intellects, or settle their nerves to fit them for amiability in public. Yes aside from the pleasure which cheerful and worthy conversation diffuses over a home circle, its educative force can hardly be over-estimated. The bright and interesting girls, who surprise and delight you with their ready fund of information quite outside of the conventional topics, and the "well-posted" boys, who know much more than books could have taught them will be found in general to have a father or mother who is wise enough to "visit" with them, and who do not keep their best mental and social gifts for outside friends.

Show us a father who saves his new stories or jokes to delight the family circle after supper—who has an eye out for new facts of travel, discovery, science, literature, art or religion with which to stimulate conversation at home—who talks with the little chaps about their studies and plays, and the older ones about their duties, ambitious and labors—who keeps before his daughters an ideal of a gentleman who treats ladies with sincerity, reverence and as equals, and doesn't carry his "small talk" in a separate package from the rest of his knowledge, strictly for their use, and we'll show you a rare man, we are afraid. If a home is to be something more than a boarding-house, a mere convenience or social necessity, it ought to draw out the best gifts of each inmate into the fund of common enjoyment and mutual ministrations.—Golden Rule.

The Dead Prayer-Office.

What becomes of the unanswered letters? Thousands of them find their way to the dead letter office. Some never reach the person for whom they were intended because the postage is not paid; some fail because they are directed to the wrong office; some cannot be sent because the address is illegible; and some because the matter enclosed is unmailable. These float through the mails, are examined at different offices, marked "missent," and finally they fall into the dead letter office. There they are opened and read, and, if valuable, are forwarded, if not they are given to the flames. Such is the accuracy and skill of the postal officials that very few letters ever fail of reaching their destination.

Some prayers never reach God because they are not addressed to God's office. They are directed to the audience. Here one prays a "sharp cut" to some stubborn brother, or rebukes some error in theology in another, or drives some keen-edge blade of censure into another, directs a severe criticism to some who are rushing into fashionable follies, and sometimes (shame on us) the very supplication which we offer in tenderest tones, in behalf of the weeping widow and helpless orphans, is intended more for those who kneel in mourning before us than for God who sits in glory above us. God's office is not in our neighbor's care, and if we direct our prayers to that point, they will certainly go to the "dead prayer office."

Again, there is a prayer upon which the address is illegible—not because it is a rough scrawling "hand-writ;" these can always be deciphered, but because it has so many extra flourishes. This prayer is uttered in a pompous, grandiloquent style. It is full of long words, scientific terms and classical quotations. The writing on the envelope is very much in keeping with the style on the inside. The ink was fancy, and it soon faded, the pen was the tongue, and it did not see the color in the prayer. How different when indited by the heart! It is no wonder that this prayer gets lost, and finds its way into the "dead prayer office."

The last prayer we notice is the unavailable prayer. There is a great latitude allowed us in the postal matter of our government, but there are a few things which cannot even get into the mail bags. Sharpedged tools and corroding acids, no matter how securely wrapped will not be transported through the mails; these are put in a separate box and sent to the dead letter office, or they are captured by the first postmaster that handles them. Many of our prayers, if answered, might be a blessing to us, but they would fall like a shower of daggers upon our neighbors. Sometimes in our prayers we halfway complain of the strange providence which has befallen us, and argue the case with God; then the prayer is full of sharp pointed arrows. Is it at all strange that kind answers are not returned? The corroding of selfishness or sensuality or pride is sometimes in our prayer. Such a prayer is lost on the way. It is poured out in mid-air. It is never answered, and well for us that it is not.

No legally "stamped," sincerely directed and well-meaning prayer is ever lost. The answer may be delayed, but the prayer is "on file."—Advance.

THE BEST REMEDY
FOR
Diseases of the Throat and Lungs,

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cure, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.
Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

ABSTRACT OF THE MINUTES OF CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

Presbytery met at Newton, N. C., Sept. 30, and was opened with a sermon by Rov. J. A. Ramsay, from Rev. iii: 15, 16, "I know thy works, that thon art neither cold nor hot."

Present dnring the session, thirteen ministers and twenty-two rnling elders.

Rev. L. K. Glasgow was chosen moderator, and Rev. B. L. Beall and S. Frontis temporary clerks.

Rev. R. Z. Johnston of Mecklenburg Presbytery, being present, was invited to sit as corresponding member. Rev. A. S. Vaughn of West Jersey Presbytery, Rev. J. M. Stamey of the N. C. Conference and Rev. J. C. Clapp of the Classis of North Carolina were invited to seats as visiting members.

Rev. J. Rumple was reappointed trnstee of Davidson College, to serve fonr years.

The committee on Home Missions was directed to arrange, if practicable, to snpply Catawba station with preaching.

The committee appointed to employ an evangelist for the western division of the Presbytery reported that they had not yet succeeded in secnring one, and that they had corresponded with several, and that it was their object to get one of the best that can be had, but feared that if the salary offered was not subscribed by the chnrches, or in some way made certain, it might be a failnre. The diligence of the committee was commended, the committee continued and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That the sessions of our churches comprising the western division of our missionary field be enjoined to cause subscription papers to be circnlated through their respective congregations for the purpose of securing by contribution the snm called for by the evangelistic committee, to be expended in the support of an evangelist in said field.

The committee to superintend the evangelistic work in the eastern field reported that they had succeeded in keeping Rev. J. H. Thornwell in the Stanly field; that his salary has hitherto been promptly paid, and that they hope to continue him with some increase of salary. In their judgment the Stanly field presents features of great encouragement and promise. The committee report that at Norwood there is a membership of some sixteen members, a neat and commodious chnrch building nearly completed, and as far as completed paid far, and large and interested congregations.

Rev. P. T. Penick preached, according to appointment, a sermon on Sabbath observance.

The report of the agent of Foreign Missions was read and discussed, and the following adopted:

1. The Presbytery regards the work of foreign missions as a definite attempt to obey the last command of the ascending Saviour to "teach all nations," and therefore a matter of supreme necessity to vindicate our claim to be the Church of Jesns Christ.

2. Concord Presbytery rejoices to recognize the fact that the foreign mission work presents a more encouraging prospect than it did last year, in the fact that the contribntions have been increased by $2,251 23 over those of last year; the accnmnlated debt has been reduced by about $5,000, and a more rigid economy has been introduced into the management of the work.

3. The Presbytery very earnestly recommends the wider circulation of the Missionary among our people, and urges all our ministers and sessions to use their efforts to introdnce it into every family.

4. Tho Presbytery further recommends that all our Sunday schools introdnce the practice of taking up collections from the Sabbath school pnpils and teachers every Sabbath for the canse of foreign missions.

5. The Presbytery reiterates the injunction for the regular observance of the monthly concert of prayer for foreign missions.

The enterprise of building a honse of worship at Old Fort was commended to the favor and material aid of our churches.

The death of Rev. Daniel Lindley, D. D., a member of this Presbytery, having been announced, the committee appointed thereto presented the following, which was adopted:

"Presbytery learns with deep regret of the removal from earth of this most zealous and venerable brother and father in the ministry, at the age of eighty years. He was for a time the pastor of one of our largest chnrches, bnt left this country in 1834 to evangelize the savage Zulus of Africa. He labored with great zeal and perseverance, and on acconnt of the ill health of his wife returned in 1873.

The next year he visited this region and attended a meeting of this body in Morganton and of the Synod in Concord town, visited many of our churches and gave graphic descriptions of what he saw and experienced in Africa, and excited great interest in the work of missions. Bnt full of labors, years and honors in the cause of Christ, he has gone to his reward, and rests from his labors, and his works do follow him. We are reminded to imitate his example and finish onr work. Presbytery would desire to express their sympathy with snrviving friends in this bereavement. He died Sept. 3, 1880, at the home of his son-in-law."

The annnal report of the board of trustees of Davidson College was read, whereupon the following was adopted:

"1. The statements made in that paper are highly satisfactory and enconraging.

"3. That this Presbytery has cause for profound gratitnde to God in the good work which the College is doing.

"3. That we would urge upon the members of Presbytery that they take pains to let it be known 'what manner of collego onrs is,' and that they labor to increase the nnmber of students."

Rev. E. F. Rockwell, with Rev. T. G. Thnrston as his alternate, and H. C. Hamilton, ruling elder, with J. G. Hall as his alternate, were nominated as commissioners to the next General Assembly.

Rev. W. A. Wood, D. D., was nominated as the next moderator.

Rocky River church was chosen as the place and Wednesday before the first Sabbath in April next, at 11 o'clock a. m., as the time for the next regnlar meeting of this body.

Rev. E. F. Rockwell, Rev. J. Rumple and Ruling Elder T. H. Robinson were appointed to prepare a biographical sketch of the life and labors of Rev. Daniel Lindley, D. D., to be presented at the next regnlar meeting.

The committee on colportage, appointed to arrange, if practicable and agreeable, with Mecklenbnrg Presbytery to carry on the work of colportage by co-operation, reported that they had not yet succeeded in making said arrangement. The committee was continned and their report approved.

A paper tonching Sabbath observance was read and referred to a committee consisting of Rev. P. T. Penick, Ruling Elder T. H. Robinson and Prof. W. J. Martin, to report at next regnlar meeting.

The following snpplies were appointed: Rev. W. A. Wood, D. D., to administer the Lord's Snpper at Fifth Creek; Rev. J. A. Ramsay, to do the same at Prospect; Rev. P. T. Penick, to do the same at Salem, and Rev. E. F. Rockwell to visit Catawba Station as often as he may be able to preach.

The varions standing committees made their reports.

A cordial vote of thanks was tendered to the citizens of Newton for their generous hospitality, to the Methodist and German Reformed churches for the tender of the nse of their churches, and to the Western N. C. R. R. for the courtesy of reduced fare.

Presbytery adjonrned to meet in Raleigh at the call of the moderator.

WM. W. PHARR, Stated Clerk.

GIVE NOW.

How easy it is to be open-handed when it involves no self-denial. When people wish they had wealth to do good with it they commonly mean that they would like to have so much money that they could give freely without feeling it. But what generosity is there in that? The true measnre of onr devotion to any object is what we are ready to give up to it. Until we make sacrifices for a cause we farnish no proof that that cause has onr heart. We do not even know whether or not we really love a friend unless we are called on to choose between his welfare and something we are loth to surrender. For what, and to what extent, have you really denied yourself to give help or pleasnre to others, or to advance yonr Master's cause, within the past week or month? That is a qnestion to test your generosity and love. No loving or giving is worth speaking of that does not involve a readiness for sacrifice and self-denial.—S. S. Times.

RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

The Philadelphia Presbyterian pnts the evil of no religious paper in the family in this forcible way:

"Yonr children grow np ont of the spirit of the Church. They have learned nothing of its grand history. They have imbibed nothing of its missionary life—have canght nothing of the spirit of its progress, and have no well anchored affections toward it. They know nothing of its great and good men—nothing of its vital thonght throbs along the circulations of their soul-life. They have no knowledge of its doctrines in their practical application in human strnggles, hopes, victories and disasters.

"The religions paper is the minnte-hand marking the period of the Chnrch's mean temperatnre, the ebb and flow of her life. The religions paper is the weekly commentary on the Word of God, as it appears in doctrine, conviction and providences. This is all lost in the family that takes no chnrch paper, and the result is too apparent. Yonr children have no chnrch esprit du corps—no traditional love for the church of their fathers. When they leave home they are like drift-wood, floating into an eddy that draws, offering no resistance from conviction or spirit to other forms of church doctrine and worship.

"Snch people spend their last days in stnpid wonder as to why their children have all left the Presbyterian Chnrch. We can answer: they never had a chnrch paper, and know no more of the Chnrch in which they were born, in its spirit, progress and triumphs, than they do of Confncianism. The effect is also apparent in the Chnrch when its benevolent causes are presented. Of the people who contribnte to the pastor's salary two-thirds of it comes from those who read the chnrch papers. If any one has any inclination to doubt, we have not the slightest objection to a careful examination, and if our statements are not true, we will, as gracefully as we can, but truthfnlly, retract. Of those most loyal to the pastor and his projects for good, through a series of five years, the proportions will not be lessened. Of his best workers in the Sabbath school it is great. And when you come to giving to carry on the missionary work of the Church in its varied branches those who do not take the church papers give comparatively nothing.

"We can tell, when we take chnrch collections, who take the church papers. They are those who give in proportion to ability, and those who are without do not give according to ability or enlightened gratitude. And this is trne of every Presbyterian chnrch in the land; we only wonder that pastors and elders do not know it, or if they do that they do not make greater efforts in behalf of their chnrch papers, in the interest of piety, loyalty and progress in all that is good."

THE BEST OF ALL SCHOOLS.

The fireside is a seminary of infinite importance, because it is universal, and because the education it bestows, being woven in with the woof of childhood, gives form and color to the whole textnre of life. There are few who can receive the honors of a college, but all are graduates of the hearth. The learning of the nniversity may fade from the recollection, its classic lore may monlder in the halls of memory, but the simple lessons of home, enameled upon the heart of childhood, defy the rnst of years, and outlive the more mature bnt less vivid pictures of after years.

So deep, so lasting, indeed, are the impressions of early life, that you often see a man in the imbecility of age holding fresh in his recollection the events of childhood, while all the wide space between that and the present hour is a blasted and forgotten waste. Yon have, perchance, seen an old and obliterated portrait, and in the attempt to have it cleaned and restored, you may have seen it fade away, while a brighter and more perfect pictnre painted beneath is revealed to view. The portrait, first drawn upon the canvass, is no faint illnstration of yonth; and though it may be concealed by some after-design, still the original traits will shine through the outward pictnre, giving its tone while fresh, and snrviving its decay. Snch is the fireside—the great institntion of Providence for the education of men.—Goodrich.

TWO HEARERS.

During the Synod at Fort Worth as is customary, preaching was appointed at night, and it was desirable that men sonld be appointed who would be acceptable, in every respect, to the congregation assembled. On one evening Bro. M. was appointed to preach. After service, a person in the congregation remarked that it was tiresome to listen to a sermon delivered as that one had been delivered. In another part of the house there was another person who listened to the sermon. That person had gone to church with a heart well nigh crnshed, and almost in despair. The preacher presented Christ as an almighty Savior; as a loving Savior; an all-sufficient Savior. The form of this hearer might have been seen bending forward to drink in the precions truth nttered by the preacher. At the close of the sermon the feeling of that heart was,

"My Savior! My Redeemer!
I fly to Thee for rest!"

Why was the one hearer charmed, while the other was uninterested and wearied? When we hear persons complaining abont the sermon, it may be well to remember that preparation to hear is sometimes as necessary as preparation to preach.—Texas Presbyterian.

FEARFUL IN FIGURES.

"Line npon line, precept upon precept—here a little and there a little." is God's plan for inculcating trnth and correcting evil and man can hardly devise a plan better than God's. Ever and anon this paper has had something to say of the vast amount of liquor-making, liquor selling and liquor drinking going on in this land, and there is every reason why we should continne to speak and write of it. The evil is on the increase almost everywhere. As stated before in these colnmns, we believe that there is less drinking among members of the Church than heretofore. There ought to be none of it among them. The man who solemnly takes npon himself the vows of the Chnrch and then drinks liquor as a beverage, has but little regard for his own honor, or that of the Chnrch, and ought to be excommnnicated. But outside of the Church the manufactnre and nse of liquor is greatly on the increase. The year ending June 30th 1879, reported a larger qnantity of spirits made than any previous year. During that year 71,892,621 gallons were produced, which was a total net increase of 15,789,567 gallons over the previous year. There are in the United States 4,252 wholesale and 155,850 retail dealers in liquor. There are in the United States 1053 rectifiers. In the District of Colnmbia, which means Washington City, the seat of our national government, there are over 1000 liqnor drinking honses! This fact alone is sufficient to bring down upon us the curse of Heaven's anger. In 1870, 13,985,745 bushels of corn; 2,838,933 bnshels of rye, 2,801,307 gallons of molasses and 1,334,897 bushels of malt were made into spirits in these United States. The tax on fermented liqnors and spirits in 1879 was more than sixty-three millions of dollars. The tax alone! Add to these fearful figures the cost of almhonses, prisons and paupers made by intemperance and ruined fortunes of thousands of men and the millions of families, and the figures become fearfully alarming. But let us bring this investigation a little nearer home. In North Carolina there are 1276 distilleries, 499 more than any other State! We have in our State 1759 retail liqnor dealers! Who can calculate North Carolina's liquor bill? Who can tell the misery, the woe entailed npon a large nnmber of our women and children every year by this fearful evil? And yet our legislatnre met and made it easier for liqnor to be sold by reducing the tax on selling it to one half what it was before! These are facts that ought to be kept constantly before the good people of the State and we shall keep them before onr readers. Every grogshop in North Carolina ought to be closed by law. The State has as much right and is just as much bonnd to protect its citizens against the slow murder committed by liqnor as against the stroke of the assassin's knife. All this talk about prohibition being nnconstitutional or impracticable is mere bosh. The idea that the State has no right to prevent men from selling misery and ruin to a large class of onr people is simply absurd! In our opinion the State not only has the privilege, bnt it is her duty to stay this terrible curse. The State, with commendable zeal, provides for and protects its deaf mutes, its insane, and to some extent, its poor; why not protect the inebriate and his family? It is high time for North Carolinians to look this question squarely in the face and the sooner we meet the issne and settle it on the side of the right the better.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

HE KNOWS.

BY IDA L. LEWIS.

My Saviour knows! This blessed thought
Oft cheers me in temptation's hour,
And in the darkest night 'twill calm
Me with its holy, cheering power.
He knows each heartache and each pain
That burns within this throbbing brain.

My Saviour knows my inmost soul,
And how I strive to watch and pray,
And keep my faltering feet within
The path of truth—the narrow way.
Though oft my eyes with tears are dim,
The way is not unknown to Him.

My Saviour knows! It is enough,
Foes may assail and friends depart.
As one by one earth's ties dissolve
This thought in peace doth keep my heart—
He knows best! Why should I grieve
When troubles come, and hopes deceive?

My Saviour knows! All, all is well:
E'en death's cold hand I do not fear,
When round me roll the waters deep
Then I shall feel his presence near.
O, Lamb of God, upon thy breast
I'll lay my weary soul to rest. —Selected.

PRESBYTERIAN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

HOW MANY SCHOOLS, TEACHERS AND PUPILS THERE ARE IN THE WORLD.

Last evening was Sunday-school night at the Academy and an audience that packed every inch of the building, standing around the doors and crowding the steps and boxes, listened to the interesting proceedings. On the stage and around the balcony were placards covered with statistics respecting the present state of the Sabbath school. A large placard in the centre of the stage read as follows:

WORLD.

Sunday school statistics:

Teachers	1,504,613
Scholars	12,680,307

On the pillar at the right of the stage was an enormous chart bearing the following:

UNITED STATES.

Sunday Schools	32,261
Teachers	886,328
Scholars	6,623,124

This chart also gave the information that the number joining the Church from Sunday schools in twenty-three States and four Territories during one year previous to report was 124,856.

Following is a tabulated statement of the other placards:

IN THE COUNCIL.

Professor Robert Flint's Paper.

THE PROFESSOR OF THEOLOGY IN EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY UPON AGNOSTICISM.

(From the Philadelphia Press.)

Professor Robert Flint, D. D. (Edinburgh), read a paper on Agnosticism as follows:

Agnosticism, rightly considered, has reference to doubt of all kinds, but the meaning of the term has of late been restricted to religious disbelief. Anti-religious agnosticism has of late years been spreading rapidly, and it is one of the greatest works the Church has to perform to check its growth and eradicate it as far as possible. The best method to accomplish this is by a more universal distribution of knowledge, for the more enlightened a man is the less liable will he be to fall into anti-religious agnosticism, provided his culture be not confined to one narrow rut. He must have general knowledge, so that he can look on all sides of the question, to be competent to come to any fair and proper conclusions. One constantly hears anti-religious cant expressed by men who have never read any of the writings on the subject, but who are not less honest on that account. Yet religious incredulity endeavors to defend and justify itself by appeals to metaphysical theories. The negations of the positivist as to the spiritual and supernatural are mere arbitrary assertions, although founded on some theory of agnosticism. It is this endeavor to maintain agnosticism in religion which has, more than anything else, I suppose, led recently in Germany to the resuscitation of the negation or skeptical portion of the philosophy of Kant—or, in other words, of the spread of what is called critical philosophy. From this the inference I draw is that the Churches are vitally interested in the spreading of the mental and speculative branches of knowledge such as psychology, because religious agnosticism can only be overthrown by convincing argument and knowledge. The necessary result of overlooking or depreciating the power and importance of knowledge will be the increase of it. It is a question in which our churches are vitally interested, and all church theology is greatly and intimately dependent upon philosophic social culture, such as will entirely refute all such doctrines. Let us be just to every order and fact and ideas. [Applause.] In the next place the anti-religious agnosticism of the age, is of course greatly favored by the critical temper and analytical spirit of the age. We are living at a time when a very large number of persons claim the right to exercise their own judgment, who have unfortunately but little judgment to exercise. [Laughter.] But a very large number of persons forget that the right of private judgment, although very important is only a half proof, and that the duty of judging rightly is its complement and equally important. We cannot help this because God has willed that we should live in this nineteenth century, and probably we don't need much to regret it; because with all its faults, the nineteenth century is by no means the worst century in which our lots might have been cast. It is a century of research back in all directions to a state of society very unlike that which now prevails. The Communistic doctrine which some look upon as the ideal of the future is found to have been a general fact of the past. There is evidence in the history of every country inhabited by any division of the race, Hindoo, Persian, Greek, Latin, Anglo-Saxon, that there was a time when private property in land did not exist—when the soil was distributed among whole communities and when individual ownership was scarcely known. In contradistinction to that state of society there is prevalent in this age the principle of liberty, the principle of individuality. There are now two opposing forces in society, one tending to entirely sink man's individuality and make his will subservient to authority; the other tending to made each man an independent sovereign, the sole ruler of his own actions. Either of these forces allowed to have undisturbed control would destroy society, but as they exist the one counterbalances the other.

Three centuries ago a doubting, questioning spirit began to make its presence widely felt, and down to this day it has been growing in strength. The spirit cannot be met successfully by one-sided theories, but only comprehensive critical argument. Each Church must, of course, be left to deal with its own cases, and it is certainly a very mean and unworthy thing in any Church to try to make ecclesiastical capital out of the troubles of other Churches. [Applause.] But what I wish, however, to emphasize is that the mere exercise of discipline by any Church must be deemed a very poor method indeed of replying to agnostic criticism, or any kind of illegitimate criticism of religion and revelation. The only method which can reasonably be expected to do permanent and general good is by opposing to it criticism of a legitimate kind. Its irreverence must be confronted with piety. There is a tendency in some of our Presbyterian Churches to stand still and make no progress in faith. This is a progressive age, and the Church must be on the alert to keep up with the times. The Churches often forget that it is their duty not only to retain the religious truth which has been transferred to them, but increase it by their acceptance of all God's fresh disclosures of Himself and that it is their duty by continually obtaining knowledge to improve their theology. The Church which rests satisfied with the accomplishments of former generations, which does not seek to add to the old treasures which are in God's catechisms, is in a bad way. New treasures may be orthodox. Every Church must teach agnosticism its belief in spiritual truth. Every Church should present its theology in a light calculated to make men conclude that it is not a sham science and pretended exposition of the unknown and unknowable. Every Church should see earnestly more and more Divine light—everything which is new in theology. But the best refutation that can be given to anti-religious agnosticism is for the people of God to live good, honest and consistent lives; and it is an argument which we can all use.

DISCUSSION.

Rev. George D. Armstrong, D. D., of Norfolk, Va., the first speaker, while complimenting the paper of Prof. Flint, protested against the doctrine advanced in that part of it in which its author, speaking of the means for propagation of error growing ont of the spirit of inquiry abroad in the world, spoke in a way that might be termed sneering of Church discipline as a means of checking the evil. He (Prof. Flint) seemed to be in sympathy with those who claimed the right to teach doctrines contrary to the Confession of the Church to which they belonged, and to do this within the pale of the Church, and who complained of being persecuted and martyred because, by means of Church discipline, the Church sought to prevent this. The speaker (Dr. Armstrong) held that it had always been the wisdom of the Presbyterian Church that she knew what her creed was and that, as a body of witnesses, her members stood shoulder to shoulder. If there was anything upon which, before God, they had prided themselves it was the particularity with which they had universally held to their creed. When a teacher of God's truth came to entertain opinions which he knew were contrary to the Confession of Faith of the Church to which he belonged and taught those opinions publicly, it was neither honorable nor honest for him to hold fast to the certificate of the Church to his orthodoxy. He could not honestly nor honorably remain in the Church while teaching doctrines which its members did not believe bnt abhorred. [Applause.]

Rev. Dr. Boggs, of Memphis, followed. After expressing his sense of the pleasure and profit he had derived from hearing the paper of Prof. Flint, he took issue with that statement of it which spoke of the unexpected discoveries in science that the future had in store for the Church. The Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian faith were ready to say that history proves that all the great discoveries of science are behind, not before us; that in this respect the science of theology is allied closely to that of astronomy, and not to that of geology. Unless a teacher faces the future with something of this belief he is sure to evince something of an eccentric determination that would bring him ont of the line of truth. Speaking for the humble branch of the Church which he represented, he said its members were strict constructionists, and held it, as a point of honor among men, that when a teacher in the Church departed in any important particular from the Confession of Faith, his duty was to come forth like a man, declare that he could no longer accept that faith as he had signed it, and state his views. He could only stay within the Church by its express permission.

Principal G. M. Grant, D. D., of Canada, remarked that the principles laid down in the paper of Prof. Flint were concurred in by himself. He referred to the declaration that the Church that sought to meet questions of scholarship by the exercise of discipline, instead of by a wider scholarship and a more fearless thought, was the true friend of Agnosticism. By such a course men were brought to think that the Church was afraid to meet disputants on the platform of free discussion and at once drew their own conclusion. He also, agreed with the Professor in the position that if the Church took the position that the Westminster confession was final and unalterable it erred. By doing so it placed it on the same platform with the Bible, and it became idolatrous. He accepted the position assumed in one of the papers, that creeds are not made, but grow, and in that connection suggested the query, how can there be growth if the condition of liberty is not allowed? He believed that no true minister of Christ should accede from the Church if he believed himself faithful to the One to whom he took his ordination vows, the head of the Church. If such a one had erred widely, he should not be charged with dishonor when he had acted honestly.

Rev. Henry Wallis Smith, of Scotland, said that he rose to speak, as one who, feeling bound by the confession which he had signed, would remain in the Church to which he belonged only so long as he felt that he could honestly stand by and defend that confession. [Applause.] He regretted that any one should have imagined that Prof. Flint designed to indulge in anything like a sneer at the exercise of discipline by the Church. Any one who knew how nobly that gentleman had stood up for the Westminster Confession knew that he would be the last man to express any such sentiment. If he had intended to take any such attitude he would have expressed himself very distinctly and unequivocally. What Prof. Flint had said was, that the mere exercise of discipline was not an adequate means of replying to an heretical error. He believed that the Westminster Confession was a safe starting point, whence we could go forth and discuss most effectively those difficult theological questions which the criticisms and the philosophy of the day were pressing before us. From that position we could without fear follow that law of conservative development which had always been manifested in the Christian Church. We had been directed by our Master to search the Scriptures, and he, the speaker, believed that the Scriptures contained depths of meaning which these nineteen centuries had failed to detect.

Principal Cavin, of Toronto, Canada, spoke of the fact that much confusion had often been unnecessarily produced by confounding theology and Biblical scholarship. He thought it a blunder to bring up the subject of progressing theology in connection with the question of discipline and of how a Church should treat error. A most serious question for the Presbyterian Church was, he thought, whether we were to expect such progress in theology—that is in dogma—as would necessitate the reconsideration of the question whether the Church would be obliged to discipline those who go far astray after dogma. His conviction was that the province of literature is distinct from the province of discipline and is not the progress of the Church; that it was the duty of eminent teachers in the Church to counteract Agnosticism and other forms of speculative literature.

Rev. John De Witt, D. D., of Philadelphia, said that he did not know that their Church provides any place for a man to propound his dubitations; but of this he was assured, that since he has asserted that he sincerely receives and adopts the Confession of Faith, as containing a system of doctrine taught in the sacred Scriptures, the place for him to propound his doubts upon that question is not his place in the pulpit or in any position in which he assumes to be a teacher. [Applause.] When he is weak in the faith (and there are times when all may be weak in the faith) he is not to go into doubtful disputations. Whatever comes out of this Council, he hoped it might provide some way in which our Church could be so broadened as to permit discussion upon the very points which are subscribed previous to that discussion being brought into judicatories in the way of discipline, but he was clear that whenever any one as a teacher does propound theories on the subject of Confession, contrary to his subscription, it is not only the privilege, but the duty of the Church to proceed to the exercise of discipline. [Applause.]

At this point the hour for adjournment having arrived, some informal announcements were made of the meeting of committees, when the benediction was pronounced, and a recess taken until afternoon.

SPECIAL PROVIDENCES.

There is no religious doctrine, probably, more frequently scoffed and sneered at than that of a special providence; yet there is none less open to general denial, simply because it should never be submitted to general criticism.

Religious persons are in the wrong when they insist upon others, whether religious or not, agreeing with them in considering some particular event in their experience as a special providence. It is impossible that a thing can at the same time be specific and general. A special providence would cease to be special if it were general. The witness of God's Spirit with any individual spirit is to it a testimony directly to no other spirit.—Life of Dr. John Rice, by G. Wilson, M. D.

EFFECTIVE PREACHING.

Professor Conrad gives advice on this topic—short but good: "Oh that all ministers everywhere would understand the secret of effective preaching, and practice it! It is simply to talk naturally in conversational style; and, if there is any mental power or eloquence, or emotional fervor, or force, in a man, it will thus come out of him naturally and effectively, and not as from an actor performing a part in a play. Wherefore and therefore, beloved brethren, suffer a word of exhortation to be interjected here: 'Always be natnral in the pulpit. Do not declaim, but talk. Always talk naturally.'" Daniel Webster said: "When a man preaches to me, I want him to make it a personal matter;" that is, to talk as if he were talking to him; not to talk flippantly, as if the subject were a trifling matter, or in a tone of exagerated solemnity, but naturally, as one man speaks to another, whom he would persnade and lead to Christ.

THE PRONUNCIATION OF "U."

Ninety-nine of every hundred Northerners will say institoot instead of institute, dooty for duty—a perfect rhyme to the word beanty. They will call new and news, noo and noos—and so on through the dozens and hundreds of similar words. Not a dictionary in the English language authorizes this. In student and stoped, "u" has the same sound as in Cupid, and should not be prononnced stoodent or stoopid, as so many teachers are in the habit of sounding them.

If it is vulgarism to call a door a doah—as we all admit—isn't it as much of a vulgarism to call a newspaper a noospaper? One vulgarism is Northern, and the other Southern, that's the only difference. When the London Punch wishes to burlesque the prononnciation of servants, it makes them call the duke the dook, the tutor, the tooter, and a tube a toob. You never find the best Northern speakers, such as Wendell Phillips, George William Curtis, Emerson, Holmes, and men of that class, saying noo for new, Toosday for Tuesday, avenoo for avenue, or calling a dupe a doop. It is a fault that a Southerner never falls into. He has slips enough of another kind, but he doesn't slip on the long "u." As many of our teachers have never had their attention called to this, I hope they will excuse this notice.—Southern Letter.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the London Weekly Review:

Rev. Mr. Spurgeon still suffers severely from rheumatic affection of the knee, and on Sabbath he was unable to leave his home. Absolnte rest has been enjoined on him for a short time.

Two Indian fakirs at Delhi have been converted, and now go about among the people preaching Christ. They wear the yellow garments of their order, and, like all of their class, are held in great respect by the natives.

It is an alarming fact that a society of atheists lately organized in Paris already boasts of a membership of fifteen thousand in that city, besides having branches in all the large towns of France. Their influence is no longer negative, but they are now making aggression in different ways upon the Churches.

The Bishop of Liverpool, writing to some parishioners who complained of the introduction of what they believed to be unlawful ornaments in the Church of St. John the Evangelist at Walton, has intimated that he cannot refuse to consecrate the building. Although he "does not like" some of the adornments and arrangements of the church, the bishop is advised that they are not forbidden by the law.

At Helston the first funeral in a West of England churchyard conducted by Nonconformists took place on Monday afternoon. A Baptist minister officiated. The deceased's relatives wished the funeral to take place on Sunday, bnt the vicar being absent the curate in charge could not give the necessary authority. Nine-tenths of Cornish funerals take place on Sundays, which in mining districts is the most convenient days for friends to attend.

Rev. Dr. Littlejohn, the Bishop of Long Island, U. S., has been invited by the syndicate of the University of Cambridge, England, to deliver a series of sermons in the university pulpit. The Bishop has accepted the invitation tendered him, and will depart for England at the rise of the General Convention. The series of sermons will be delivered in the month of November.

A correspondent says that the statue of Spinoza, just unveiled at the Hague, is the first sculptured effigy of a Jew ever erected. While the Jews were a nation their abhorence of idolatry prevented a practice so common amongst their Assyrian brothers and Egyptian cousins; since then they have been hardly popular enough for others to do for them what they omitted to do themselves. It is matter for serious reflection, too, that after the numberless monumental representations of Christ and the apostles, the first statue of a Jew should be that of a Pantheist.

On Sabbath evening, in St. Columba Church, Oban, after the service, the pastor (Rev. Mr. Taylor) proceeded to install five elders who had been appointed to form the kirk-session, and he had not gone far when a tradesman in the town rose, and, interrupting, said—"In name of God and of this congregation, and in the temple of God, I protest against the proceeding until the grave charges preferred against some of the elders be disposed of." The gentleman then resuming his seat, the proceedings went on as though no interruption had taken place.

The Rev. Dr. Spence, who has been minister of Kilbirnie Free Church for thirty six years, on Sabbath preached farewell sermons, and at the close of the afternoon took leave of the congregation, many of the members being deeply affected. The Rev. Doctor, who is retiring through failing health, was the first pastor of this charge, being inducted in 1844. He did much to promote religious and educational matters in the parish, and is the oldest member of the Free Presbytery of Irvin. Along with his respected partner he leaves for London, where they are retiring into private life.

JOHN McLAURIN - Editor

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1880.

A FEW PLAIN WORDS.

To carry on government a large amount of money must be collected from the people by taxation. As we have heretofore explained, the principle of taxation when founded on just principles is never equal, as to all property or on all occupations or enterprises. Those trades, enterprises or institutions which directly tend to the prosperity of the State are taxed, if taxed at all in a very moderate degree, while such commodities or such traffics as contribute nothing to the general welfare, or are directly prejudicial to it are made to bear a heavy burden of taxation. This is recognized as sound common sense, and strict justice wherever there is civilized government.

Apply this to the State of North Carolina. We need to make immense advances in public instruction. The great need, the indispensable requirement, at the very ontset is money, and the State has no means, or no mode of raising the funds necessary save by taxation. How shall these taxes be raised? Upon precisely the principle we have indicated, and that there may be no doubt as to where we believe the heavy tax should be, we say upon the liquor traffic. The world over, we suppose, certainly throughout this country, the justice and propriety of making this death-dealing traffic bear a large proportion of the burdens of government is fully recognized, and the practice accords.

We are not favoring the licensing of liquor saloons for the purpose of raising revenue. God forbid! On that phase of the question the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN has never issued a doubtful word, but we take up the subject as it really is at this time before the people of the State. Liquor licenses are granted and will be granted—we wish it were not so, we believe it should not be so—but the live, practical issue before us is: The liquor traffic being allowed shall it be taxed heavily and specially or placed on equality with other subjects of taxation?

It is painful to see in some of the secular papers of our State, an attempt to make political capital—the practice is not confined to either party—by decrying discriminating taxation against the sale of ardent spirits. It is peculiarly painful, because it implies that in some sections the solid, sober, Christian men of the State will not, it is supposed, be affected by such advocacy of the liquor traffic, while the barkeepers and their supporters will be floated over to those who will most effectually legislate for the promotion of the liquor interest.

Will not the best people of our State look deliberately into this matter? The remedy is in their hands. If taxes are taken from liquor they must be placed elsewhere—upon our industries, or upon our property. Even if there is to be no advance toward educating the masses, to defray the ordinary expenses of government—expenses largely the result of this very liquor traffic—there can be no decrease of taxation. Is it not time for Christian men to assert themselves, and to let it be unmistakably known that they must be taken into the account when measures affecting the interests of the commonwealth are concerned?

EXPLANATIONS.

A friend writes: "If you give Prof. Flint's paper you might do well to give in a note the etymology of 'agnosticism.' There is scarcely one in a hundred that knows its meaning." And we are further moved thereto by the fact that we have privately been asked more than once the meaning of this word, and of the word "Pan" in connection with the Council. We refer those who desire a critical definition to Webster's Dictionary, in the supplement of which it will be found. It is derived from a Latin verb to know combined with a privative preposition, and thus expresses, as the cardinal idea, ignorance. Its use is in connection with theology, and it indicates the views of those who claim that we are entirely ignorant as to the existence of God and necessarily to as to what concerns duty to Him and all kindred subjects. Agnostics are not agreed among themselves, and in the range and scope of their notions there are various shades of disbelief. On one thing they are agreed: that of theology as a science we know nothing, and in so far as this refers to agnostics themselves there is general agreement with them. Their claim, of course, would remit theology to a region of doubt, speculation and dispute, and so the word agnosticism has come to indicate doubt and uncertainty concerning the Deity.

With regard to the word "Pan", it is simply a Greek adjective meaning all. And the newspaper reporters or others who first employed it to reduce the necessarily cumbersome official title deserve the thanks of readers generally. Pan-Presbyterian Council is simply the unofficial but handy and expressive way of referring to "the General Council of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches throughout the world holding the Presbyterian system."

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Presbyterian thus humorously reports some of the agnosticism prevalent with regard to this word:

"A lady, not finding the word in Webster, took down her classical dictionary, and saw that Pan meant the God of shepherds and flocks. She was sure she understood it, because ministers are shepherds and their churches are flocks. She thought it rather strange, however, that we would recognize the heathen deity that was supposed to preside over shepherds and flocks. Another lady never caught its meaning till she picked up a restaurant notice headed 'Pan-Presbyterian Dinner!' She had made the discovery at last. In common English pan means a dish, hence the term had some reference to the table, where all Presbyterian ministers are known to perform their duty. A prominent United States Senator, a member of the Methodist Church, meeting one of our ministers the other day, said to him, 'Why do you apply the word Pan to your great Alliance? Does it mean that you Presbyterians have gotten down at last to 'hard pan'?' 'Yes,' replied the minister, 'that is just it. We have gotten down to the solid rock of truth, and you Methodists have not reached that point yet.'"

SOME IMPRESSIONS FROM THE LATE PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL.

This great convocation of representative men from different parts of the world demonstrates the substantial unity of the Church for which our Saviour prayed. Here were men representing some thirty-two Presbyterian Churches in all lands meeting together in fraternal spirit to deliberate as to the best methods of promoting the Redeemer's kingdom. Protestantism, notwithstanding the severe and oftentimes just censures of Romanism, has not concerned itself much in times past to show that it was really and truly one—one in spirit, one in the essential truths of Christianity. Here one great division of the Protestant family showed unmistakably before the world that it possesses a unity far grander and nobler than that which is contained in mere external organizations.

But that which impressed us more than this substantial oneness of the Church was the unanimity with which great fundamental doctrines were adhered to. As containing the soundest views on great and vital subjects, we signalize the papers of Rev. E. P. Humphrey, D. D. LL. D., of Louisville, Ky., and Prof. Robert Watts, D. D., of Belfast, on the "Inspiration and Authenticity of the Scriptures;" Principal John Cairns, D. D., of Edinburgh and Prof. A. A. Hodge, D. D., of Princeton, N. J., on "The Vicarious Sacrifice of Christ," and Rev. T. D. Witherspoon, D. D., of Petersburg, Va., on "Future Retribution." If there was a single dissent to the views contained in those papers it was not made known. It surely is a matter of devout gratitude that the Reformed Churches are sound on these important points—that they are holding up and defending these precious doctrines against the assaults of hostile criticism and rationalistic unbelief.

In reference to the solemn and awful doctrine of future retribution presented in the admirable paper of Dr. Witherspoon, and which has been recently variously discussed by the pulpit and press, we cannot refrain from giving his closing words as reported by one of the daily papers:

"To shrink from an explicit testimony to the endlessness of future punishment is to imperil the souls of our fellow-men. If men can be persuaded, nay, if they are ever encouraged to a faint hope that the period of probation does not end with death, that further offers of salvation will be made to them in that after world, they will venture all upon that hope and postpone to a future life the interests and claims of religion. Beyond lie the ages and ages, and celestial glory, and, sure of heaven at last, men will indulge in sin to their heart's content. A solemn responsibility, therefore, rests upon the Church of God. She must bear testimony to this doctrine. Unpopular it may be, painful it must be, but she must, through her creeds and symbols, through her pulpits and ministry, bear her testimony to the truth of this doctrine. She cannot allow liberty on this point. She may be accused of bigotry, of dogmatism, but there is no other course for her to pursue. The issues involved are too great. For myself, fathers and brethren, impressed by the momentousness of this issue, I could ask no higher favor than these feeble words of mine, falling like a faint key-note upon the ears of this great convocation, should cause it to rise like a giant in his might and send forth from out this bannered hall one bugle blast that, echoing from shore to shore, shall tell to all the world that one great division at least of the army of Christ holds, and by God's help means to hold, the same redoubts of truth that have been pressed by the feet of God's veterans in all the history of the Church."

But, after all, what is the practical use of this alliance of reformed Churches, without authority, men are asking; what are the beneficial results that are to come from it? It is answered: 1. It is worth something to take by the hand and look into the face of honored brethren from other lands and compare views with them. With acquaintance comes sympathy and intelligent interest in the Master's work beyond our own contracted field. 2. It is something to hear from the lips of representative men of the amount of doctrinal soundness that prevails in the Churches of the old world and new. 3. A thorough discussion of the best methods of meeting the popular phases of modern infidelity, the critical attacks upon the inspiration and authenticity of the Scriptures and the best way of overcoming Romanism, cannot fail to do good. 4. The strong Presbyterian bodies are brought into active sympathy with the weak and struggling Churches on the continent. Substantial aid will flow in to these Churches, giving them new courage to stand under so many discouraging circumstances. 5. The best plans of co-operative mission work can be devised, and a wise distribution of missions indicated. (This subject is an important one and received attention during the sessions of the Council. Rev. Dr. J. Leighton Wilson of Baltimore read a paper on the subject of co-operation).

These are some of the ways in which the allied Churches are substantially helpful one to another, as well as useful in advancing the general interests of Christ's kingdom. Many brethren, especially in our own Church, are doubting the propriety of this movement. Surely, if the various Churches are encouraged and strengthened, and become more successful in opposing the enemy, and a wise co-operation in missionary work is begun, in so far forth, this movement is entitled to respect and confidence.

It seems to us that to meet every three years as now designed is entirely too often. The outlay of money and time is considerable. Every four or six years is frequent enough. The next Council meets in Belfast in 1884 because of the International Exhibition in New York in 1883.

On the whole, the Council of 1880, in the judgment of all, was a success, and from it bles ed influences will go forth to the ends of the earth.

Four persons—two by letter and two by profession—joined the Dr. Hoge's church (Second Presbyterian) in Richmond, Va., on Sabbath, 10th inst.

PAN-PRESBYTERIAN ALLIANCE.

It is difficult to speak briefly even of all the interesting aspects of this world-wide gathering of Presbyterians. The official volume of its transactions must be read to satisfy those who love their glorious Church.

SPIRIT OF THE COUNCIL.

A glance over the body would impress on anyone the fact, that its members were men who thought, and who were positive and fixed in their views. Grey and bald heads said, 'From the distant past we have held to the faith; and from buried centuries we have received the blue banner of the Crown and Covenant, and have borne it in many a conflict to victory.' Young men, standing in the strength of mature manhood, said, 'Our vigor and all our resources are consecrated to our Lord, and to the historic faith, baptized with the blood from amphitheatres and and alpine glens, and sultry plains.' Representative men are these from a world-wide church. But it is a spiritual aim which has summoned them in this secular age. With this breadth of constituency and with a natural diversity of views, there is most remarkable unity of purpose. They are whole-hearted, brotherly, devoted to work for Christ, genial, Christian. No dead uniformity sheds its gloom over speech or act; for there is a remarkable and beautiful mingling of the phlegmatic and the mercurial; the men of direct claim, incisive logic, and men of lively wit, who wake up the vast audiences by brilliant sallies, biting satire of falsehood, uproarious anecdote, the eloquence of invincible argument, and the sublimity of great thoughts. Their spirit is one of wide-reaching love, and "great-thoughted" earnestness for the Master. One could well say, 'Lord it is good for us to be here on this mount of holy privilege.'" We are glad to sit with our Rainy, Cairns, Calderwood, Graham, Main, Presense, Sheshadri, Hodge, Wilson, Armstrong, and the host of worthies from every clime. Thus one of the most important results of this Conference is, to inspire the whole Presbyterian world with an abiding and enlivening sense of this real brotherly oneness, and to enable the whole Church to work with the resulting confidence of conscious power.

HONEST SUBSCRIPTION.

One of the most important and serviceable discussions arose upon Prof. Flint's paper on Agnosticism. In one part he was understood to depreciate and deprecate the exercise of discipline on such errorists as Prof. Robertson Smith, and to counsel merely or chiefly intellectual combat. He was also understood to affirm that there were fresh discoveries to be made in the domain of revealed theology, which would affect essential doctrine. It was a satisfaction that these points were promptly clearly and decisively met by members from the Southern Presbyterian Church. The debate was opened by Rev. G. D. Armstrong, D. D., of Norfolk, Va., who was earnestly supported by Rev. Drs. Markland and Boggs. The key note was sounded, and the consentient voice of the Council sustained and strengthened its emphasis. A latitudinarian construction of the Confession of Faith, and a reduction of the creed of the Church to a very few and brief general propositions, were advocated boldly and sharply by Principal Grant and Dr. McDonald, both of Canada. Their views not only received no support or sympathy from their Canadian brethren, but met with decided opposition and rebuke from the whole Council. With almost absolute unanimity it was agreed that both common honesty and Christian integrity demanded that men who had voluntarily and solemnly subscribed the formal confessions of their respective Churches, could not rightfully remain in the Church and teach doctrines contrary to the standards, and repudiated by the historic faith of the body. Thus to take the honors and money of the Church was deemed both a dishonesty and a betrayal of the trust originally reposed in the recipients. They should at least be honest, if they could not be orthodox. These sentiments met with general applause, and cries from foreign brethren of "Hear! Hear!" At this juncture in church affairs, where speculation abounds, it is peculiarly gratifying to have a pronounced expression from a world-wide Church, of common consent to fixed doctrines, and determination to maintain the doctrinal integrity of this portion of the kingdom of our Lord. It was a signal achievement of this confraternal, ecumenical convocation to rise and to rest upon this granite platform. This will be a memorable epoch in the history of its memorable deeds.

DEATH OF REV. S. R. FRIERSON.

Through the courtesy of a friend we have learned of the death of Rev. S. R. Frierson, formerly pastor of the church at Starkville, Miss. He died on Monday, October 4, at his residence in Starkville. He has been in infirm health for several years past, and did not expect to recover, but of late he has been gradually sinking, and probably his friends will not be greatly surprised at the sorrowful tidings which we communicate.

His friends were many. His character was frank and fearless, yet kind and sympathizing. He impressed those who knew him as a spiritually minded Christian, an earnest and able minister of the Gospel, and a valuable citizen. He was esteemed and loved in the community which now mourns his loss. He was respected in the councils of the Church as a man sound in judgment, honest in his convictions, and straightforward in all his dealings.

He was pastor of the church at Starkville during nearly the whole of his active ministry. A few years ago he resigned on account of the state of his health, and did not resume pastoral work again. Mr. Frierson has been a member of the Synod of Mississippi over thirty years.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Persons wishing information as to the really fine phototype of the late Presbyterian Council, and as to the published proceedings of Council will please consult our "New Publications." Every Presbyterian ought to have a copy.

At this season when, if ever of the year, money comes into the hands of all classes and conditions of people—at this particular season, when prices of cotton and naval stores are high—we might reasonably expect that the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN would be remembered. Hundreds owe us, and now is the time to pay.

The venerable Rev. Dr. Plumer lately had a surgical operation of a delicate character performed, and he is now in Baltimore lying in a state that our latest information represents as exceedingly critical. Let us hope that he may be spared to yet many years of usefulness.

By one of those unaccountable oversights which are best explained by not attempting to explain, we slipped the poetic gem which Rev. W. S. Lacy furnished to the Orphan's Friend, and our first sight of it was in the Biblical Recorder. This brings us to say that the courtesy extended to our brother in this regard by the Recorder, and its complimentary allusions in this connection and that of the Cool Spring Association, bespeak that fraternity of feeling which goes beyond all denominational names to recognize the one great family in Christ.

We publish two articles to-day on the subject of the Alliance. They are from brethren who attended the Council and who add to an intense interest in the subject habits of close observation with clear methods of thought and graceful modes of expression.

The last Synod in Statesville adopted a resolution with regard to making up the roll of the Synod, to which it would be well to direct special attention, inasmuch as a notice in accordance therewith appears in this week's paper. The object of it, as stated by the mover of that resolution, if we remember rightly, was to relieve the Synod of the tedious delay in the preparation of the roll that has hitherto been usual and to secure greater accuracy. The change has some effects. For while it was irksome to await the making up of the roll, it was pleasant to hear the various familiar voices crying "Here!" in response to roll-call and turn the eye to catch a glimpse of an old friend. It was pleasant, too, to hear the churches called, with their varying names, redolent of precious memories and to see who represented them.

But this is a mere sentimentalism, and the change is a good one, an economy of time and patience, and a far better way of coming at correctness. The General Assembly so acts, and we have been informed the Synod of Virginia has so prepared its roll for years.

A slight amendment to the rule is desirable. The elder representing the church in which Synod meets should be on the Committee of Enrollment as well as the pastor, so as to give a committee of three, and a quorum of two, in case of inability for any one to serve at the hour chosen.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Stated Clerk and the pastor of the church in which the Synod holds its annual session be constituted a Committee of Enrollment, who shall, at a convenient hour before the opening of the Synod, prepare the roll of the Synod, after the manner of the preparation of the roll of the Assembly; and to this Committee of Enrollment shall each member report for enrollment upon appearing at Synod.

About the close of the session of Synod Rev. Dr. J. Henry Smith moved the following:

Resolved, That this Synod appoint a standing committee, to be called the Committee on the State of the Church, whose duty it shall be to report annually to this body the growth of the Church within its bounds, during the preceding year—the accession of members, the number of newly organized churches, the number of evangelists, and anything that may set forth the condition, growth, prospect and needs of the Church.

This resolution was docketed and made the special order for the third day of the approaching session of Synod at 11 a. m.

Shortly after the adjournment of the last Synod we specially called attention to this resolution, and we now urge thoughtful consideration upon it. The Committee on the Reports of Presbyteries necessarily works hurriedly and with imperfect data at command. It works, too, under stress of other and pressing current duties; as a consequence, as is frequently urged by this committee, its work is unsatisfactory and incomplete. Beyond this the details that are in routine communicated to the Presbyteries do not comprehend very much which it is desirable to know of the Church, its growth, progress and attainments.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

HUNTERSVILLE CHURCH, MECKLENBURG.

Mr. Editor: On Friday night preceding the second Sabbath of this month I was privileged to begin the service preparatory to the communion in the new church of Huntersville. I was assisted by the Rev. W. W. Orr, of the Associate Reformed Church, who preached on Saturday at 11 a. m. On the Sabbath the sacrament was administered to several hundred communicants representing all the neighboring Presbyterian churches. The services were closed with the sermon on Sabbath night. Five additions were received; four of them were young ladies on profession of their faith in Christ. These five new names swell the number of communicants to seventy-five, thus exhibiting a gain of nearly thirty since the church was organized, in November of 1878. The new building, recently completed at a cost of not less than twelve or fifteen hundred dollars, is commodious, well lighted, well seated, and in every way seems well adapted to the purpose for which it was intended. It is a credit to the energy, perseverance and self-sacrifice of this new congregation, and being located on an eminence in a grove of native forest trees commanding a fine view of the A., T. & O. R. R. it is really an ornament to the village. The congregation is now busy furnishing their handsome building and paying off a small indebtedness with the confident expectation of two joyful occasions in the near future, viz: that of welcoming back from Germany Prof. Latimer, whom they greatly esteem, and of entertaining the Presbytery of Mecklenburg, which meets with them next April. Huntersville, N. C., Oct. 15.

Rev. Isaac P. Osborne, at present in charge of Mt. Olivet church in Tuskaloosa Presbytery, has been elected principal of the Caledonia (Miss.) High School. He expects also to preach at Unity and other vacant churches in the Presbytery of Tombeckbee. After the middle of November his postoffice will be Caledonia, Miss.

The Carolina Watchman, published at Salisbury, N. C., says: "At a congregational meeting, last Thursday night, in the Presbyterian church, Messrs. Robert Knox and O. D. Davis were elected elders and W. L. Klutz and H. M. Jones were elected deacons. They were installed on last Sunday (Oct. 10)."

A beautiful chapel is now going up in Fredericksburg, Va., for the use of the Presbyterian Church. It is cruciform and in gothic style; built of native granite, which works up beautifully; and adorned with pillars of handsome red granite, which receives a polish like Tennessee marble. It is reared to the memory of a most estimable young lady whose parents formerly resided here, and loved their old home, and the home of their forefathers. Complete arrangements will be made for all departments of the flourishing Sabbath School; an elegant organ is being built for it; rich stained glass windows, memorial of various members of the family, are in preparation; and in one wing will be a beautiful pastor's study, fully equipped with all conveniences. The total cost will perhaps reach twenty-five thousand dollars. The active and beloved pastor, Rev. Jas. P. Smith and his congregation will have abundant reason to be ever mindful of and grateful to the liberal donors, Mr. and Mrs. French.

COAL VALLEY.

Mr. Editor: Please give me space in your paper to acknowledge the receipt of twenty-five cents from little Sandy McQueen of Big Rockfish, Cumberland county, N. C., to build Coal Valley church. Hope it will not be a great while before we can see the way clear to enter upon the erection of the house of worship, but, as I have said once before, we have not the means with which to do the work, but are dependent on the charity of Christian friends and those who love the cause of Christ. There can be and will be some money raised at and around Coal Valley for this object, but nothing like the amount necessary. There are no people who need the Gospel more than those at this point. The utter indifference on the subject of religion is appalling. There are some Christians among that ungodly race, but they are like Lot, in wicked Sodom. We must have help, we must have the sympathy, the prayers and pecuniary aid from friends abroad. To give an idea of how urgent the necessity for a house to preach in, I will state a little circumstance: I have been preaching in a school-room which is public property. The Saturday night before I preached there last the negroes had a gathering in this house for some frolic. When I entered the house on Sabbath morning at the appointed hour for services I found a few persons there, the room turned upside down, the seats in confusion, the floor almost literally covered with dirt and filth. The place did not have the appearance of decency, did not look as if there was any respect, much less love, for that Saviour who died to save the world. This is the state of the case. If any will help us to reform a people who are so manifestly deep in ungodliness and totally indifferent about their souls, may the Holy Spirit prompt them to come now to the help of Christ's beloved cause. Thanks be to God that there are some who sympathise. May there be many more ready to respond.

Affectionately, L. A. McLEAN.

NOTES OF FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

The enterprising village that bears the euphonious name of Shoe Heel—for Quhele has not yet stuck—lies along the Carolina Central Railway, in a level and somewhat dreary-looking country—the pines dark and sombre surrounding, and some undergrowth varying the monotony. But it is a delightful region—the farming lands good and in fine cultivation, and the roads smooth and so tempting. The people make a country, however, and this country is already made.—Charming hospitable homes abound, intelligent enterprising men and cultivated lovely Christian women (I'll dispense with the many adjectives that thrust themselves on my willing pen) make a most attractive society, and it is no wonder that Presbytery has a chronic ailment of meeting in this part of its bounds. Shoe Heel is growing and shows business, life and energy. And the Presbytery has done well to plant a church here, and to encourage the new enterprise by its presence. It met in the right place this time doubtless. (And it meets in the right place next Spring, mark you!)

A neat and commodious church welcomed the Presbytery. I was in it last November when Bro. Martin was installed. It was then in part a workshop, with work benches and lumber in it. Now it is finished "from turret to foundation stone," neatly furnished and all paid for but a trifle. The whole cost is about $1800. Considering the smallness of the membership and the recency of organization and the other obligations of the Church, for they have a faithful pastor to whom they are faithful also, you will see what a good record they have made for themselves.

Well, just as one migh expect who knows that country, Shoe Heel has beaten its own record in its entertainment of Fayetteville Presbytery. The hospitality and kindness were unbounded. Very opportune too, was the time. The softest and most benignant of suns glorified the days, and the nights were royally lovely. Barring the dust, the fleet horses, the fine roads glistening in the unclouded moonlight, or flecked with twinkling sheen and shadow like fairy land, and pleasant companionship, made the night series at Shoe Heel and Centre churches a luxury and delight. Large congregations waited reverently upon the word. And every evening the message was spoken from both pulpits. May it not have been spoken vain.

Presbytery met on Friday, October 14th, at 11 o'clock, and in the absence of the moderator was opened with a sermon by Rev. Joseph Evans, the last moderator present. It adjourned Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Let me give a brief sketch of what was done.

Rev. D. D. McBryde was elected moderator and D. McIntyre, of Cameron church, and Alex. McRae, of Smyrna church were chosen temporary clerks. There were present fifteen of the nineteen ministers of Presbytery, and about thirty churches out of fifty were represented.

Rev. S. C. Alexander, of Mecklenburg Presbytery, Rev. Dr. McNair, of Onachita Presbytery, and Rev. Dr. Hopburn, of Concord Presbytery were corresponding members.

Rev. Dr. Hepburn, President of Davidson College addressed the Presbytery, by request of the body, and a large congregation on Friday, with reference to that institution, its prospects, its work, its success. Every one was charmed with his remarks and with the Doctor himself. His statements were so frank and manly, so clear and satisfying, and he presented the claims and advantages of Davidson College with such force and withal unaffected simplicity and modesty, that he won all hearts, and you may be sure Davidson College made many friends. A resolution of satisfaction and appreciation were most heartily adopted.

The Sabbath question came well to the front and an interesting report was presented by the chairman of the Presbytery's committee, Rev. Roger Martin, which was considered in detail and adopted, providing for a pastoral address on the subject, a sermon before Presbytery and other important measures for the agitation of the subject.

Commissioners to the General Assembly reported, and the minutes were duly reported on. Rev. H. G. Hill, Rev. D. Fairley, and Ruling Elder A. K. McDiarmid were appointed a committee to examine the Revised Directory of Worship and report at the next Presbytery appropriate action.

McPherson church applied for and secured the services of Rev. G. M. Gibbs for one-half his time.

The pastoral relation between Rev. David Fairley and China Grove, a tie of twenty-one years standing, by the request of the pastor and the consent of the church, was dissolved. Rev. D. D. McBryde was appointed to preach there and declare the pulpit vacant.

Galatia church applied for and secured the services of Rev. David Fairley for one-third, and Sandy Grove church for another third of his time.

The committees of Home and of Foreign Missions made reports which elicited interesting discussion—the Presbyterial missionary meeting being held Saturday at 11 o'clock. A contribution was made to Foreign Missions.

A new assessment was made on the churches reducing the annual amount asked by Presbytery for its expenses. Let the churches note the minutes when they appear.

Rev. Joseph Evans was appointed by Presbytery to preach a sermon before the body at its Spring meeting on the Sabbath.

Buffalo church was chosen as the place, and Wednesday before the second Sunday in April as the time of the next stated meeting of Presbytery.

Yes, Buffalo! Come, Mr. Editor to the hill country of Judea, when the time of the singing of birds has come. W. S. L.

THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

A like rate of three cents per mile each way will be granted by the following Railroads: Atlantic and North Carolina; Western North Carolina.

The foregoing list includes all the responses hitherto received, October 15th 1880.

W. S. LACY, Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Eastern Texas meets at Longview Saturday, at 10 a. m., October 30.

S. F. TENNEY, S. C.

Rev. M. B. Shaw pastor of Clinton church in Louisiana writes to the Southwestern Presbyterian that he was assisted on a recent communion occasion by Rev. R. F. Patterson. Seven persons were added to the church on profession of faith, and one the week before, making eight additions to our little flock. We are rejoicing in this token of God's favor towards us.

The address of Rev. Alexander Cowan has been changed from McMinnville to Hendersonville, Sumner county, Tenn.

THE SUMMER RAIN—A PARABLE.

BY REV. WILLIAM S. LACY.

From the Orphans' Friend.

The rain,—the rain,—the blessed rain
Visits the thirsty earth again;
Kindly bringing,
With its singing,
Blessings on mountain, on woodland and plain,
Kisses of hope for the parched grain,
Smiles of life to the crisping corn,
Odours fresh to the scented morn,
Tears of joy to the day new-born.

II

Now,—'tis a patter
Upon the roof,
Like to the clatter
Of mail and hoof,
When horsemen gallop the stony street,—
Or the leaden hail where foemen meet.

Now,—'tis a whisper
Unto the leaves,
Soft as the vesper
Beneath the eaves
Of dim gray piles and solemn towers,
Where maidens pure keep holy hours.

Now,—'tis a gently soothing sound,
A murmuring in the distance dying,
As a humming bird's whirr when southward bound,
Or an insect's dreamy flying:—
A sweet, yet sad, monotonous strain,
Filling the heart with pleasure and pain;
Like the mingled feelings an old man knows,
When heart-sick and weary, he seeks repose
Under the trees where his childhood was spent,
So eager, so peaceful, so innocent:
His memory tells of the new delights
That lengthened his days and shortened his nights,
His memory tells that those joys have flown,
That he is left, alone—alone!

Now,—'tis a single, sudden drop
Upon the pane
That makes one start, and muse, and stop
To muse again!

III

Yet, blessed be God for the blessed rain,
Though angry and dark the cloud,
That shuts out the light from hamlet and plain,
While through meadow and mountain,
Over forest and fountain,
Roll thundering echoes loud!

IV.

A mother watches the lowly bed,
Where her suffering darling sleeps,
Caresses the precious, golden head,
And silently weeps!

With bony fingers and pluched face,
And brows deep furrowed with hopeless care,
They meet in the same neglected place,
The children of want, for their scanty fare,
And eagerly clutch each meagre share!

A maiden bows her head; she does not speak
Fair white-winged pleasures trip unheeded by,
The bloom of beauty fading from her cheek,
The brightness from her eye!

V

Ah! who would say that such cruel rain
Brings blessing and beauty in its train;
Each drop that falls, adds a bitter smart
To the many woes of a burdened heart,—
Yet it beats with a reckless, pitiless mirth,
Crushing the flowers of hope to earth!

VI

Hush! soul, and murmur not,
Trust though He kill,
Thy woes are not forgot,
Trust! 'tis His will!
He marks each secret spot,
Where, in thy grief,
Thou goest to weep, and find
In tears, relief.
He knows thy bitter lot,
He keeps those tears in mind,
Loving thee still!

VII

Take hope, my soul;—e'en though thy skies are clouded,
Though bitter, blinding tears thine eyelids fill
Thy Father's vision is not dimmed or shrouded,
He sees and loves the still!

Take hope—not simply since the poet singeth
"Behind the clouds," the blessed sun still beams,
Nor yet, that though whatever shade sin bringeth,
The daylight, darkened, gleams:

But hence take hope;—these very clouds that gather,
These very drops that pelt us as they fall,
The lurid bolt, the shaded sunlight, rather,
Are blessings after all!
For Patience, Trust and every Christian duty
Grow in the heart thus humbled, softened, tried,
As fairest flowers spring up in blushing beauty,
After the storm subside.

VIII.

Listen then to the rain
Singing in saddened strain,
"Soul, never fear again,
Hope for the best;—
Shadows may o'er thee fly,
Clouds gather in the sky,
Still know that by and by Thou wilt be blest!"

IX

The maiden, weeping for the absent one,
Till pale and sad and speechless with emotion;
Thus proves the preciousness of one, though gone,
The strength of pure devotion.

Gaunt want, with visage lank and sunken eye,
Teaches the children of his sore oppressing,
The worth of effort, and unceasingly
To struggle for the blessing.

The mother, bowed beneath affliction's rod,
Learns, as she feels the kindly tribulation,
Comfort in patience, and to trust her God
With hopeful resignation.

X.

And thus it is, the clouds that hide
The sweet sunlight, teach us to bide
His will, who hath all good supplied.

And thus it is, the drops that fall,
On flower or weed, in hut or hall,
Come with a blessing unto all.

Oh! let us learn then in the rain,
There is no drop that falls in vain,
Though harsh the stroke; 'tis for our gain.

XI.

Then blessed be God for the blessed rain,
Refreshing the thirsty earth again,
Tenderly bringing,
With its sweet singing,
Blessings on mountain, on woodland and plain,
Colours of glory to fading flowers,
Perfumed breezes to cool the hours,
Pearls of light to the maiden morn,
Balm of healing to hearts sore torn,
Lessons of love to sad and lorn,
Tears of joy to souls new-born!

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH.)

Centreville church in West Virginia under the pastorate of Rev. H. M. Bittinger has been revived. Fourteen persons were received into communion of the Church on profession of faith. The meeting held eight days. Rev. W. T. Wilhelm assisted the pastor.

Rev. C. B. Stewart pastor of Fairview church, writes to the Southern Presbyterian: We had a pleasant and profitable meeting at Piedmont (Greenville county, S. C.,) including the third Sabbath in September. There was preaching every week-day night for several days. The congregation and the interest increased steadily until the close. We had four additions—three heads of families.

Rev. R. E. Sherrill, after a four years' pastorate, resigns his charge of the church at Segain, Texas.—S. W. Presbyterian.

From the Christian Observer:

Rev. W. L. Bailey requests his correspondents to note the change of his address from Greenwood Depot, Va., to Point Pleasant, Mason county, W. Va. He writes us: "I have accepted charge of this field, and am on the ground. I began last Sabbath a week since. It is the same field I had when called to Augusta, Ky., seven years ago."

Rev. L. B. Chaney sends us an interesting account of his visit to Sherman, Texas, to assist Rev. Dr. J. S. Moore in a series of meetings, the publication of which is necessarily deferred. The meeting was very interesting and solemn. Five persons were added to the church, four of them on profession of faith.

Rev. Theo. Hunter, who is in charge of Madison and Mount Hermon churches in the Presbytery of Central Mississippi writes us from Canton, Miss.: "I have had two interesting meetings in my two churches; at one, four accessions; at the other three, nearly all young people.

Ten or twenty years of success for a remedy that has in that time never been found wanting in all that is claimed for it, certainly ought to give confidence to those that have not tried Simmons Liver Regulator. The trial of it is attended with no inconvenience, no danger, no doubt; if it will not cure you it can possibly do you no harm, and in no case of Bilious Headache, Constipation, Liver Disease, or its attendent evils has never been known to fail.

"I certify that my wife and self were in bad health for some fifteen years. I chanced to be looking over one of your almanacs and saw A. H. Stephens' and Bishop Pierce's names to testimonials. I then obtained some of the Regulator, and can heartily recommend Simmons Liver Regulator to my friends as an excellent medicine.

Death of Mrs. Marion S. Lewis.—In His own way, in His own time the Bridegroom cometh. Happy they whom He finds prepared to meet Him. It is the whole of life to fulfill life's duties in the sphere in life which God appoints. Mrs. Lewis was the true wife and mother—living for those she loved and pointing them to the heavenly home. Her call from service here to the rest of praise above was sudden, and the blow to those bereaved severe, yet this shall be for their comfort: Like as a father pitieth his children so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him.

September 30th, at Haw River, in Alamance county, Mrs. CORA J. CARIGAN, in the 41st year of her age.

She left a son and many friends who are truly afflicted in her death. Having professed faith in Christ in her youth, she died in the enjoyment of peace and joy such as the sustaining grace of God alone can give. Truly it may be said, "Her end was peace.

In this city, on Saturday, October 16th, at 10 o'clock p. m., Mrs. MARION SHAW LEWIS, wife of Capt. Thos. C. Lewis, in the 36th year of her age.

September 14th, at her residence in Richmond county, Miss PEGGY McNAIR, at the advanced age of 94 years.

To her death came suddenly, but we doubt not found her ready and waiting for the summons. In the morning she was in her usual health and engaged in her domestic affairs; at half-past 9 o'clock P. M. she fell asleep in Jesus.

She was a woman of great energy and industry, and of more than ordinary mental capacity, and strange to say, though she had reached such an extraordinary age, (with the exception of memory,) her mental faculties were comparatively unimpaired. It is supposed that she was for at least seventy years a professor of religion; and her life testified that she had not the form of godliness without the power thereof.

At her father's home, in Graham, N. C., on the 28th of July last, CALLIE A. TURNER, in the 24th year of her age

She was the only remaining daughter of J. J. and M. E Turner. After one week's severe struggle, typhoid fever, so fatal in the family, claimed its victim.

For ten years she had been a believer in Christ; for half that time a member of His visible Church. In society she was gentle and beloved, in the church zealous and pious, in the Sabbath school and Bible class faithful and studious. She died in the faith with a glorious hope of immortality.

"Leaves have their time to fall
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all—
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

B. W M.

At his residence in Robeson county, on the 12th of August, ARCHIBALD McRAE, aged 84 years.

The deceased was for more than thirty years a ruling elder in Smyrna church, for which church he always manifested considerable attachment. When, in 1837, it was determined by the people in the community to build said church, he was one of the leading spirits in getting up funds for that purpose. He was a most punctual attendant upon the ordinances of the sanctuary, and while able was equally punctual in the giving of his substance to the support of the Gospel.

For the last three or four years of his life he lived in darkness, long-falling sight having at length resulted in total blindness. But we trust that he is now enjoying the light emanating from the throne of God, where there is no more darkness, no more infirmities of age, no more pain or suffering, no more losses or crosses.

When it was evident to himself and those around him that the time had come when he must exchange worlds by passing "through the valley of the shadow of death," he seemed to "fear no evil," but expressed the hope that he was ready to go.

"Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

On September 29th, 1880, at her home in Taylorsville, N. C., Mrs. AMANDA STEVENSON BURKE, leaving her husband with an infant daughter to mourn their sad loss.

She was a consistent and active member of Concord (Iredell) church, and for many years an earnest worker in the Sabbath school. Her death was eminently calm and peaceful; her only expressed desire that the will of God should be done. And so she fell "asleep in Jesus.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Pastor.

On Sabbath, October 10th, 1880, at his father's residence, JAMES B. CLARKE, a member of Bethany Church. Had he lived till the 16th of the month he would have been 22 years of age.

The death of this only son and brother in early manhood is peculiarly sad; but his sorrowing family and friends have much to console them. Several years ago he professed his faith in Christ, and in that precious faith he died. Being "absent from the body," we have good hope that he is "present with the Lord."

W.

IN MEMORIAM.

DR PETER McLEAN departed this life in Laurinburg N. C., Sept. 20., 1880, in the 25th year of his age.

In the death of this estimable young gentleman, the community has lost a most tender Christian physician, skillful and judicious beyond his age; the church a faithful, conscientious and efficient office-bearer: and his family a most considerate, affectionate, and greatly beloved member.

He was the son of the late Dr. Augus D. McLean, of Robeson county, whose fragrant memory is still affectionately cherished in the community, and especially in Centre church of which he was an honored elder. Gracefully did the mantle of the father rest upon the son. Selecting the same useful and noble profession, inheriting like talents, emulating his father's virtues, and with native abilities and excellent acquirements sanctified by the same lofty but unobtrusive piety. Dr. Peter McLean was the worthy son of a worthy sire.

The subject of this brief sketch was, from his earliest childhood, greatly beloved by a large circle of relatives and friends for the peculiar suavity of his manners, the sweetness and gentleness of his disposition, and the unsullied purity of his life. In his untimely death, his family feel that they have been bereft alike of their hope, their pride, and their ornament. And it is not too much to say, that he has left the world without a stain on his character, and without leaving an enemy behind him.

After careful preparation in his academic studies at excellent schools, he entered the University of Virginia, where he continued his literary course for a year and a half. He then took a course of medicine at that institution. He then went to the University in New York city, where he continued the study of medicine, and was graduated with credit in due time. Returning to Robeson, his native county, he at once entered with zeal and enthusiasm upon the practice of his arduous profession. He soon gained the confidence of the entire community, and took high rank as a physician, remarkably matured in judgment and skill for one so young. A short time since he received an offer from an eminent physician of Laurinburg, whose ripe experience, long success, manly and generous career placed him in the front rank of his profession—an offer at once so flattering and so evidently to his advantage, that his best friends and near relatives, as much as they were reluctant to lose him from their midst, could not dissuade him from accepting it. Here, as in his native country, Dr. McLean soon entered upon a large and responsible practice. His labors from the first were arduous, and soon, a constitution not naturally of the most robust kind, yielded to over-work and too much exposure. His attack, violent from the first, soon became complicated, and though he had the most careful and constant attention of the best medical skill, and the most tender and judicious nursing, his noble and pure spirit in three short weeks took its flight, and Dr. Peter McLean was no more.

How inscrutable and mysterious are the ways of Providence! A beloved young physician of rare promise, entering apparently upon a career of no ordinary usefulness and success; a young man of lovely Christian character, promising to become a polished and stable pillar in the house of God; a public spirited young citizen, commanding the confidence and affection of a large community; a friend and relative tenderly beloved and cherished by an extensive family circle, is ruthlessly stricken down by Death! It only remains to us to bow in absolute submission to the will of Him who doeth all things wisely and well, and who maketh "all things work together for good to them that love Him;" and patiently to wait till that great day when it shall be clearly revealed, that all was done in infinite wisdom, power and love. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!"

But while such a death has cast no ordinary gloom over our community, and has caused no ordinary sorrow to many stricken hearts, yet we sorrow not as others who have no hope, nor is it an unmingled cup that is pressed to our lips. Many drops of sweetest comfort have taken away its bitterness. The memory of such a pure, generous young life, the heritage of such a noble Christian character, the full persuasion that for him to die is gain, eternal gain, afford inexpressible consolation to those who are called to mourn his untimely death. That his was an unsullied name, that he never caused a sorrow, that he never left a pang or a sting in any human breast, and that he leaves no one behind him to utter a single reproach, all this greatly softens and mitigates the grief of those who mourn.

May such a character impress itself for good upon the young men of this community. May they emulate his virtues, his piety and his usefulness.

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Pastor.

Confidence and Enterprise.

We suggest a careful reading of the remarkable proposition made by the Marshal & Smith Organ Co., in our advertising columns. In regard to this offer we would say to you that twenty years' devotion to the manufacture of the Parlor Organ has so improved their mechanical appliances, and increased their facilities, that they are enabled to overcome all opposition. Determining that their new instruments shall be placed in every part of the country, and with a confidence in their work and in the public, that is as novel as it is generous, these gentlemen make an offer that actually sinks all competition. Taking all the responsibility to themselves they propose as a means of introduction into new localities to send their beautifully perfected instruments, combining power, compass, tone, variety and finish, at the extremely low price of Sixty Dollars. And not only that, but they send it to you to try thoroughly at your own home for fifteen days, and if not found perfectly satisfactory they refund the money and pay freight both ways, thus asking the purchaser to take no responsibility whatever. This offer is for thirty days only, as by that time the manufacturers are confident that the desired object will be accomplished. Certainly now is the time to buy, and as purchasers from all parts of the country will avail themselves of this opportunity we would advise such of our readers as are able to order at once.—A. Q. Review.

WILMINGTON MARKET

DURING WEEK

ENDING OCTOBER 19.

The attention of all persons interested is called to the fact that strict personal attention is given to the collection of the necessary information, and the careful preparation of our Market Report, so as to give a correct general review of transactions and prices, for the week ending each Tuesday morning.

Spirits Turpentine.—A steady and rapid advance was taken in this article from 41 cents on Wednesday last to 45 cents on Saturday. On Monday the market was weak, and late in the day a few casks were sold at 43½ cents. On Tuesday market unsettled, without sales and decidedly lower tendency.

Rosin.—On Wednesday and Thursday Strained brought $1 40 and Good Strained $1 45; Friday an advance of 5 cents was made on each grade; Saturday further advance of 5 cents on each grade; Monday market quiet and quoted at $1 45 for Strained and $1 55 for Good Strained.

Crude Turpentine.—On Wednesday $1 60 for Hard and $2 50 for Yellow Dip and Virgin; Thursday and Friday $1 70 and $2 65 respectively; Saturday and Monday $1 80 for Hard and $2 80 for soft qualities; Tuesday no change.

Tar.—Receipts taken on arrival at $2 10.

Cotton.—Sales were made on Wednesday on basis 10⅝ cents for Middling; Thursday and Friday sales at 10½ cents. On Monday and Tuesday 10⅝ cents.

Timber.—Arriving slowly and wanted. The market is well sustained and good timber coming in brings remunerative prices.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Dare to Say "No."

Dare to say "no" when you're tempted to drink,
Pause for a moment, my brave boy, and think—
Think of the wrecks upon life's ocean tossed
For answering "yes," without counting the cost;
Think of the mother who bore you in pain;
Think of the tears that will fall like the rain;
Think of her heart, and how cruel the blow;
Think of her love, and at once answer "No."

Think of the hopes that are drowned in the bowl;
Think of the danger to body and soul;
Think of sad lives, once as pure as the snow;
Look at them now, and at once answer "No;"
Think of a manhood with rum-tainted breath;
Think of its end, and the terrible death;
Think of the homes that, now shadowed with woe,
Might have been heaven had the answer been "No."

Think of the lone graves, both unwept and unknown.
Hiding fond hopes that were fair as your own;
Think of proud forms now forever laid low,
That still might be here had they learned to say "No."
Think of the demon that lurks in the bowl,
Driving to ruin both body and soul;
Think of all this as life's journey you go,
And when you're assailed by the tempter, say "No."

Neatness.

A STORY FOR LITTLE GIRLS.

"I'm real glad I didn't live in old times, Old Testament times," said Daisy.

Little Mag looked up from her work inquiringly.

A basket of clothes to be mended was upon the chair between the two little sisters, and beside each was a small work box.

"You see," continued Daisy, "it says 'he rent his clothes,' or they 'rent their clothes.' It seems to me that whenever they had anything to trouble them in Scripture times, instead of crying, as we do, they just went about in a frantic way and tore their clothes. Wasn't it silly?"

"Perhaps they didn't have to mend them afterwards," was Mag's reply. She did not mind the rents half so much as the repairing.

"Dear me, what a flntter of rags they must have been in, then," said Daisy, looking with dismay at a dress with the pocket half torn off; mother had laid it upon the top of the basket to be mended.

"Do you suppose they made their little girls mend 'their garments,' or did they go about with the rags flnttering in the wind like old Nance Smith?"

Daisy made no reply, for the good reason that she was thinking of something else. Not hearing what Mag said, the little girls of Old Testament times did not receive the sympathy which under the circumstances she might, as a fellow-sufferer, have offered.

Mag answered her own question. "They didn't have needles and thimbles and spools of cotton in those times. If those children only knew what it saved them not to have such things!" and Mag looked longingly out of the window towards the swing in the garden, where the neighbor's children were waiting for the two sisters to join them.

"What are you thinking about, Daisy?" inquired Mag, seeing her sister laugh without an apparent cause.

Daisy was leaning over the half-darned stocking she held over her small fist, quite convulsed with laughter, and was for some time utterly unable to reply. Then she straightened herself up again, and tossing back the hair which had fallen over her eyes, running the semi-circular comb once or twice through it before it was fastened to suit, she looked up at Mag.

"I'll tell you what let's do!" she said, her eyes full of merriment.

"Well?"

"The next time we don't like anything, instead of crying let's tear our clothes."

"You little goose! Mamma'll make you mend them. That's all you'll get by it."

And disgusted at finding no better proposition, when she had expected to hear "something funny," Mag snipped off her thread from the finished work with as much energy as if she meant it to express the disappointment she felt.

"I think Benny must have come to grief when he tore this apron!" she exclaimed, picking up next from the basket a check apron torn almost across.

There was a tap on the window from a small switch held by a hand on the ground below.

"It's Bessie White. You're nearest the window, tell her we'll soon be there," said Daisy.

Mag leaned over the window-sill. "We'll soon be through," she said.

"There's an organ-man and a monkey coming," said the child from the garden below.

"It's a shame that we have so much mending to do. Whoever tears clothes ought to mend them. I'm going. Good-bye."

Daisy threw down the half-finished work, and Mag followed her example. Both children ran out to see the monkey. They thought no more of the work-basket nor the neglected work.

Mother, who came in soon after this, finished the mending and put away the clothes; mother also put away the two work-boxes.

A week after this Daisy was gathering blackberries and tore a long rent in her overskirt, and Mag, who had a fall about the same time, caught her foot in the hem of her dress and tore off the facing, but the work-boxes with which to repair the damage were nowhere to be found. Strange to say, they could not find their other school dresses, and dared not venture upon wearing their best.

They pinned up the rents, and said nothing about the matter. Mag, who was always tripping over something or catching her dress over some obtrusive knob, being a little girl who was fond of romping, began to look before the close of the week, as she had said of others, "like a flutter of rags," but mother made no remarks on her appearance.

Happening to see "Nance Smith" pass along the road, the two girls looked down at their own torn dresses and then at the miserable, shiftless beggar-woman, and they both blushed. Things were beginning to look serious.

"This is the man all tattered and torn," shouted little Benny, quoting from "The house that Jack built."

The girls thought he was pointed in his remark, but Benny had not even noticed their dresses.

"Daisy, my dear, you have torn your dress," said the school teacher, noticing the unusual appearance of the little girl who was generally so neat and tidy.

Daisy blushed and said nothing in reply. "O, Mag, I'd give anything if I could find needle and thread to mend this rent. If the Israelites felt as badly as I do over their torn garments it must have been real sorry that they felt, both before and after the act," she said to her sister.

Their mother took them on her round of visits among the poor that day, and showed them the results of habits of indolence and negligence. They saw wretched, dirty, tattered children; they saw men and women in torn and ragged clothing. Everywhere they noticed the effect of ——"poverty," they said, but mother corrected them.

"It's not poverty," she said, "the poor are not necessarily ragged and dirty. It is the result of idleness and negligence."

Their mother took them after this to abodes of poverty, but where at the same time everything was neat, clean and tidy.

That night this wise mother and her two little girls talked over the matter together. She showed them how unjust she would be to their best interests if she allowed them to grow up with habits of indolence; if she neglected to teach them how to sew and mend, and have a knowledge of all the little things which make our homes pleasant.

As these were sensible little girls they saw the force of what was said; and sorrowful for having pained this good mother they promised to do better in the future.

When their mother brought out their work-boxes from the high shelf on which she had hidden them they sat down to mend their dresses with a willingness which a week before would have seemed to them impossible.

If there are any little girls among our readers who are not willing to sew and to mend, we advise them to observe the tattered children in the street, and ask themselves how they should like to present such an appearance. But you say, "We do not have to mend our own clothing."

It would be well for you to learn how to do it, for then you might teach some poor street child. If God has so blessed you—all the more, as a debt of gratitude, should you help those who are poorer and more ignorant than yourself.

Even if you are not obliged to mend your own clothes it would be wisdom on your part to learn, for there will probably come some time in your life when you would be very glad of the knowledge.—Christian Intelligencer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

As Light as a Feather.

Of a feather's lightness we may form some idea when we find that the largest quill of a golden eagle weighs only sixty-five grains, and that seven such quills do not weigh more than a copper penny-piece; that the feathers of a common fowl which weighs thirty-seven ounces, weigh only three ounces; and that the entire plumage of an owl weighs only one ounce and a half. Meant as they are, some for covering and some for strength, we shall find them, on examination, very differently put together. The light down part, when examined through a microscope, will be found to bear little resemblance to the flat part or blade of the quill. If it were not so a bird would scarcely be able to fly at all; for when the flat of the wing was pressed down, the air would pass through it, and yield no resistance. The fibres of the downy part, we see, have little connection with each other; they have short and loose side shoots; just sufficient to mat them together when pressed close to the skin; whereas, the side shoots of the quill-feather hook and grapple with one another, so as to make one firm and united service.

But of others there are much stronger and stiffer than the wing quill feathers; as those, for instance, forming the tails of the woodpecker tribe. And the reason would be evident to any person who watched a woodpecker on the stem of a tree feeding. Its food consists of grubs, usually concealed in the wood. In order to get them, he must therefore remain fixed on the bark and make a hole with his beak, a tedious, if not an impracticable operation, were it not for the wiry stiffness of the tail-feathers, which press against a tree and act like an additional limb. The tail, however, has another use, applicable more or less to all birds; it is to them what a rudder is to a boat, and in many cases acts like a third wing. If we look at a hawk hovering in the air, when he remains in one spot we shall see that the tail is spread out like a fan, and is in a constant state of quivering motion balancing the bird, while the wings are keeping it afloat.

It is clear that if water could soak into the soft feathery covering of a bird, every shower of rain would be the death of thousands, inasmuch as it would increase their weight considerably, and at the same time, by destroying the fine elastic nature of their feathers, entirely disable them from flying, and they must remain in a helpless state upon the ground, either to perish from hunger, or become the prey of men or animals, who would catch them without trouble. But against such a possibility they are guarded by an abundant oily covering, which is constantly renewed; so that the rain, instead of sinking in, runs off, without remaining an instant; and we all know that if we take up a duck, or any swimming bird, we shall find, though it might have been dying just before, that it is perfectly dry and free from all damp. But this principle of life, if it may be so called, in a feather ceases with the life of a bird; for if we were to throw a dead duck into the water, we should find that its coat had lost all power of resisting water, and become a spongy mass of moisture.

The growth of feathers in young birds in hot and favorable weather is remarkable. It has been ascertained by attending to nestlings, that in eight days after their appearing from the egg in a helpless, naked state, they have acquired the first part of their feathers.—Bishop Stanley.

A Pathway of Flowers.

Stella was a bright and handsome school-girl, and had the faculty of saying witty things, which often brought a laugh to the social circle. She was pleased with her gift, and took pains to cultivate it. Her friends were proud of her talent, though now and then an humble one winced a little when one of her bright shafts was aimed at him. A witty person needs to have the grace of a very, very kindly heart, or he will make many wounds hard to heal. Would not you prefer a very hard accidental blow to very little ridicule?

Stella was welcomed everywhere "was such good company," and her plain little sister Lucy, was cast quite in the shade when she was present.

But Lucy was humble and did not mind. She admired her pretty sister along with the rest, and never thought of having any talents of her own. So she quietly sang the baby to sleep—he always loved so to nestle on her neck; and then she had laid him down and mended Charley's lines, from that went to help slow Betsey on with her dinner.

"I declare, Lucy, I can't tell what I have done with my receipt-book," said absent-minded father, rumbling frantically from desk to cupboard. Nobody ever thought of telling Stella such trouble.

"Eat your dinner, father," said quiet Lucy, "I'll find the book if it's in the house."

And she did find it. She almost always could.

"Thank you, child," said father heartily; "you saved me twenty dollars to-day."

That was the way it was every day. Stella played off a merry jest on the loser but Lucy kindly put forth her hand and helped him. Stella's jests would all be forgotten as easily as pearls slip off a broken string, but Lucy's deeds of love and kindness were like choice seeds which everywhere sprang up into flowers. What a bright pathway some hearts make for themselves as they go along through this world!—Lutheran Observer.

Stitching on a Button.

He had never tried it before, but he was naturally a self-reliant man, and felt confident of his ability to do it. Moreover, his wife had gone to the country. Therefore, carefully selecting from the lady's work-basket the thickest needle and stoutest thread, he resolutely set himself to the task. Spitting upon his fingers, he carefully rolled the end of the thread into a point, and then, closing one of his own optics, he attempted to fill up the needle's solitary eye; but the thread either passed by one side or the other of the needle, or worked itself against the glittering steel, and refused to be persuaded. However the thread suddenly bolted through the eye to the extent of an inch, and, fearing to lose this advantage, he quickly drew the ends together and united them with a knot about the size of a buckshot. The button was a trousers one, but he liked the dimensions of its holes, and it was only going on the back of his shirt, anyhow. As he passed the needle gently upwards through the linen, he felt a mingled pity and disdain for men bungling over such easy jobs; and as he let the button gracefully glide down the thread to its appointed place, he said to himself that if over he married a second time it should be for some nobler reason than a dread of sewing on his own buttons. The first downward thrust had the same happy result, and holding the button down firmly with his thumb, he came up again with all that confidence which uniform success inspires. Perhaps the point of the needle did not enter to the bone, but it seemed to him that it did, and his comment upon the circumstance was emphatic. But he was very ingenious, and next time he would hold the button by one edge, and come up through the hole nearest the other. Of course he would. But the needle had an independent way of suiting itself as to holes, and it choose the one where the thumb was. Then the needle got sulky. It didn't care about holes, anyhow, if it was going to be abused for finding them, and the button might have been an unperforated disc for all the apertures which that needle could thenceforward be made to discover, without inficite poking and prodding. It always came through when it was least expected, and never when it was wanted. Still he persevered and it was not until he finally discovered that he had stitched over the edge of the button and had sewed it on the wrong side of the shirt that he utterly broke down.

How to go to Sleep.

The Kansas City Journal tells how to woo sleep when one is restless: Sit down in an easy position, relaxing all the muscles of the body, and let the head drop forward upon the breast, as low as it will fall without forcing it. Sit quietly this way for a few minutes, freeing all the will power from the body, and a restless, drowsy feeling will ensue, which will, if not disturbed, lead to refreshing sleep. If the sleepless fit comes on at night one can simply sit up in the position described. Stiffness of any part of the body must be avoided, and it is well to bend the body forward after lying down, rather than keep it straight, or throw it back upon the pillow. The writer suffered several years from sleeplessness, caused by severe pain and nervousness, and was taught the above by a physician of very great experience and ability, and found through it complete relief. Many persons similarly afflicted within the writer's knowledge have tried it, and always with good results.

CURIOUS HABITS OF PLANTS.

The interesting subject of botany, which we cannot even begin to study in our brief talks, is more important to us than appears at first sight. Every carpenter, ship-builder or wood-worker of any sort is interested to know about the stems of trees; the physician, the apothecary, the farmer, the miller, all are greatly concerned in the study of botany. And now that wood is used for carpets and wall paper, for writing and wrapping paper, you see how much the growth and properties of plants must be studied. Besides all these, who knows what new discovery some of the bright boys and girls in this class may make in the next twenty years! Remember that to the vegetable kingdom we owe india rubber, and think to what innumerable uses that is put. So you see, our study is a very practical one.

Do you know that plants sleep? The oxalis, that very pretty plant for the house or the garden, folds its leaves and lets its blossoms hang down for repose at night. It is said that one whose eyes are accustomed to note the changes of nature can see the difference in some forests between the sleeping trees at night and the wide-awake ones of the day. Especially is this change noticed in the torrid regions.

One very learned naturalist thought that he would find out what put the plants to sleep; some said it was the change of temperature from warm to cold, but his experiments showed that it was the absence of light. By subjecting sensitive plants to a brilliant light at night he kept them awake, and putting them into profound darkness during the day he put them to sleep.

To the careful observer a clover-fold presents a very different appearance when the sunset comes; the two side leaflets of each leaf draw closer together, while the middle one spreads itself protectingly over them.

Marvelous stories are told of the delicate sensitiveness of the mimosa pudica. The slightest touch on one of its tiniest leaflets, and gradually all shut, the branches droop, and the whole plant shows signs of great disturbance. Von Martius observed, while crossing the savannahs of tropical America, that "the sound of the horse's hoofs at a distance made all the sensitive plants contract as if they had been frightened." It is very curious, too, that opium sprinkled over a sensitive plant quiets it in some way, so that it ceases to show any indication of sensitiveness. Desfontaines took one of these strange plants in his carriage, and as soon as the wheels began to move the poor plant folded itself up. After a little time it seemed to become accustomed to the motion, and very gradually opened out its leaves and kept them so as long as the carriage continued to move. When it stopped, the leaves, having become accustomed to the shaking, appeared alarmed at the stopping and closed again. This phenomenon was repeated during the journey.

There are some flowers which open only at night. I have seen a bush of evening primrose covered all in a moment with its yellow blossoms just as day was closing, and there in a charming jessamine which opens its small flowers at night and fills the house with its fragrance. There is the common marvel of Peru, or four o'clock, which pretends to open at that hour in the afternoon and remain open all night, and there is the uncommon night-blooming cereus, which one must sit up for into the night to see, for it opens only after the time when everybody should be in bed, and before morning it is quite limp and faded. Two or three weeks ago a friend brought to me a beautiful white bud of a large cactus. It was just at twilight, and the flower, removed from the plant and stimulated by the warmth of the hand, was spreading its splendid petals and showing a beautiful bunch of stamens like a rich tassel in the centre. Before the evening was over it had spread wide open and was a worthy object of admiration.

We could scarcely believe that the miserable decaying thing we found in the glass the next morning had been the beautiful blossom so short a time before.

There are very curious things about the stems and leaves of plants, some of which I hope to tell you. In the meantime look at the flowers and plants around you, and see if you can find out something new about them.—Christian Union.

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

❖Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

A QUESTION WHICH NEEDS SOLUTION.

That question is the following: Whether it is proper for a minister of the Gospel to travel on the railroad on the Sabbath-day, in order to meet his ministerial appointments:

The question is not whether a minister or private member of the Church may go away from home on the Sabbath-day for the purpose of worshiping God. Nor is it a question whether he may on a week-day, hire a mode of conveyance (horse, buggy, hack, or railroad train) to take him on the Sabbath-day to a place of worship. There is no difference of opinion upon those questions considered in the abstract.

But the simple question is, whether a minister of the Gospel, in order to reach a ministerial appointment previously made, may travel on the railroad trains which are regularly run on that day. It is not contended that the supposed act is a sin per se, or necessarily a violation of the Sabbath. But that the act done under the supposed circumstances is wrong appears from the following considerations:

1. It encourages the violation of the Sabbath by others; that is to say, by those who run the Sabbath trains, by those who cause them to be run, and by those who make use of them for purposes that are unlawful on the Sabbath-day—who have no preaching appointments to fill. Let it be understood that I do not maintain the absurd proposition that it is wrong to patronize a railroad whose trains are run on the Sabbath. If that proposition were true, Christians would commit a wrong act every time they rode, during a week-day, on a Sabbath-breaking railroad, and every time they bought goods from an unconverted merchant. But I do maintain that it is wrong to travel on the railroad on the Sabbath-day except upon a call of necessity or mercy made by Providence. Filling a ministerial appointment by riding on the cars on the Sabbath-day is not generally considered such a call of mercy: and therefore encourages the violation of the Sabbath-day by others. It is perfectly certain that if, in this Christian land filled with houses dedicated to the worship of God, the preachers would abstain from making any use of the railroad trains on the Sabbath-day, except upon an unforeseen call of necessity or mercy, and would publicly and earnestly condemn it; and all the members of the various churches would heed their counsels, and follow their example, the railroad trains would soon cease to be run on the Sabbath-day. The country would not long witness the spectacle of a railroad whose directors, president, superintendent, conductors, engineers, roadsmen, mail route agents, etc., were all unconverted men. Each individual Christian exerts his influence to secure or to prevent the observance of the Sabbath on the part of our railroads.

I signed a petition to the legislature of North Carolina to stop the running of railroad trains between the hours of 12 o'clock Saturday night and 12 o'clock Sunday night upon the ground that the running of the trains during those hours was a violation of the Sabbath. If I make a ministerial appointment, and in order to meet it travel on the railroad during any part of that specified time, I voluntarily do that which I asked the legislature to restrain me and every body else from doing. I am not willing to recall my petition. And ought I to do a thing which the legislature would have made it unlawful and impossible for me to do, had it granted my request? Anyhow it would look strange to the mass of converted and unconverted sinners who are not accustomed to theological hair-splitting, if upon the plea that it is an act of mercy, I should do a thing which I have asked the legislature to make unlawful to be done.

But it may still be insisted upon that the traveling on the railroad to meet a ministerial appointment, being an act of mercy, is an exception to the law of the Sabbath, and therefore cannot encourage the travel on that day for other purposes than those of necessity and mercy. I answer, if the preaching of the Gospel at a certain particular place, on a certain particular Sabbath be such an act of mercy as makes it obligatory upon a preacher to make an appointment to preach at that place, on that day (a contingency which I need not discuss), still the use of the railroads on the Sabbath can be avoided. Otherwise we must recall our petition to the legislature. Let our ministers settle near their preaching places, or secure private modes of conveyance; and as it respects their attendance upon the judicatories of the Church, let them stay at home and send their excuse for absence, or get leave of absence so as to reach their appointments without traveling on the cars on the Sabbath; or let the judicatories hold their meetings in the middle of the week.

There are cases of mercy which the Lord makes, and there are those which man makes. The appointment for preaching by our ministers at their regular preaching places, on the Sabbath immediately succeeding the adjournment of Presbytery or Synod, is by no means one of those cases of mercy which the Lord has made, if it requires for its execution Sunday travel on a railroad. The acts of necessity and mercy allowed by our Lord to be performed on the Sabbath, are those which it would be a sin not to perform.

Moreover, the fact that preachers make use of a Sabbath railroad train in going home from the church judicatories, is an encouragement to the ruling elders to make use of the same mode of conveyance for the purpose, not of hearing preaching (they can secure that object without Sunday traveling) but of getting home to their families, their business or their pleasures—which are the very same motives by which all the other Sabbath-breaking passengers in their company are governed. I will venture to say that under the circumstances above described, not a single minister of the Gospel has ever seriously remonstrated with the elder or visitor by whom he was accompanied home from Presbytery or Synod, for performing an act which was not in his case an act of necessity or mercy, and therefore was a violation of the Sabbath.

II. The act supposed, in the queston under consideration, ought not to be done, because it has the appearance of evil. I am free to confess that the Divine injunction "Abstain from all appearance of evil" has no particular application to this subject. The Greek word translated "appearance" does certainly have the secondary meaning of resemblance, appearance, as well as form, sort or kind. But surely the apostle does not design to teach that we must abstain from absolutely everything which we believe to be good or not evil which is regarded as evil by others. The apostles considered it a good thing to preach Jesus, while the mass of their hearers considered it an evil thing.

There is a class of things which are called indifferent, which are things not positively commanded to be done—things which are proper or improper to be done according to circumstances. But surely the apostle did not design to teach that we must abstain from "all" such things, although they appear to us to be good when they appear to others to be evil. Our Saviour's plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath day was considered by the strict Pharisees of His day as an evil. By the phrase under consideration the apostle must mean to teach that we must abstain from every kind of evil.

But the question is by no means settled by that passage of Scripture, that a Christian who has no conscientious scruples in respect to the doing of certain things, is under no obligation to be influenced in his conduct by the scruples of others. I propose to show (not from the passage of scripture which has been considered) that there are certain things lawful in themselves from which we are required to abstain because they have the appearance of evil:

We are required to abstain from those things which are, as I have said, indifferent, the doing of which would be regarded as sinful by our Christian brethren, and tend to cripple our influence over them for good, or might tempt them to do the same things while at the same time they believe them to be wrong. The duty of abstinence from all such things is plainly taught by Paul in his Epistles to the Romans and Corinthians. In respect to meat offered to idols he declares that the eating or not eating is a matter of indifference in itself considered. He says: "Neither if we eat are we the better; neither if we eat not are we the worse. Nothing is unclean of itself; but to him that esteemeth anything unclean, to him it is unclean." But the brother who can eat the meat offered to idols without sin because he does not esteem it to be unclean, may not eat it if, by so doing, he "put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." The caution is given, "Take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak." Dr. Hodge, in his interpretation of the 14th chapter of Romans, says: "Though the thing (eating meat esteemed by some to be unclean) is right in itself, yet if indulgence in it be injurious to our Christian brethren that indulgence is a violation of the law of love. The use of liberty which every Christian enjoys under the Gospel is to be regulated by the law of love. Hence it is often morally wrong to do what, in itself considered, may be innocent." The strong brother who had knowledge could eat meat which had been offered to idols with a clear conscience, but that act was regarded by his weaker brother as a sin. The strong brother had liberty to eat that meat or let it alone. Let him contend for this liberty, and let him endeavor to instruct the mind and enlighten the conscience of his weaker brother, but he will make a wrong use of this liberty if his use of it "becomes a stumbling-block to them that are weak." The apostle forbade the strong Christian to use his liberty of eating meat in an idol's temple, when "the conscience of him who is weak" and who should see him sitting there would "he emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols"—that is, he emboldened to do the very same thing the strong Christian was doing, but which he could not do without being governed by another man's conscience rather than his own. It was upon this principle that the apostle himself acted. He said: "If meat make my brother to offend I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." In commenting upon this passage Hodge says: "It is morally obligatory therefore to abstain from indulging in things indifferent when the use of them is the occasion of sin to others. This is a principle, the application of which must be left to every man's conscience in the fear of God. No rule of conduct founded on expediency can be enforced by church discipline." In commenting on the passage "Let not your good be evil spoken of," Hodge says: "Do not so use your liberty, which is good and valuable, so as to make it the occasion of evil and so liable to censure."

Now what has the exposition of this principle to do with the subject under consideration? Very much. Supposing that a preacher has no scruples of conscience about riding on the cars on the Sabbath to fill a ministerial appointment, if it is one of the indifferent things he has liberty to do it. Let us now suppose that there are those about him whose consciences are not rightly informed, weak brethren in the ministry and in the membership of the church, who believe the act to be wrong. If they see the strong brother do it, one of two things will probably result: He will not be able to exert over them all that influence for good which he might otherwise exert, or they will be tempted (emboldened) to do that which will offend their own consciences. Do you say, Surely they will not do that which they believe to be wrong because they see others do it? I answer, You do not know human nature if you do not see that the danger is great if the temptation is strong. Did not Paul think that the weak brother, when he saw the strong brother sitting at meat in the idol's temple, was in danger of being tempted to violate his conscience and so harden it by doing the same thing? It was on account of the danger of his doing that very thing that the strong brother was enjoined not to use thus his liberty. The temptation to ride on the cars on the Sabbath day, without a reason justifiable in the sight of God, is often very strong. The strong brethren should stand up for their liberty if they have got it, but will they not be making a better use of it, and thus be the followers of Paul as he was of Christ, by abstaining from an act which will tempt their weaker brethren to violate, and thus to harden their consciences? In the meantime they may endeavor to impart such knowledge as will enlighten the consciences of their weaker brethren.

While I do not "pin my faith to any man's sleeve," I am disposed to think that the late Dr. James H. Thornwell was one of the strong brethren. I know what his course of conduct was in reference to the matter under consideration. Whether he was governed in that course by scruples of his own, or by those of his weaker brethren, and the law of love, I am not able to say. I received from the lips of his wife an account of his conduct on two occasions. Early in his ministry, before there were any railroads passing through North Carolina, he was appointed a delegate to the General Assembly. The daily stages were at that season of the year filled with merchants going North for goods. After starting on his journey he could have kept his seat in the stage to the end of the line if he had traveled on the Sabbath. He remained in Raleigh during the first Sabbath of his journey. As he feared, he could get no seat in the Monday's stage. The same was the case on Tuesday, Wednesday and perhaps Thursday. On the following Saturday night he again yielded his seat, and in consequence of these delays did not reach the Assembly until near the close of its sessions—his letter, in Palmer's life of Thornwell, says on the ninth day. On another occasion, not long before the close of his life, finding that a steamboat on which he could have a comfortable berth would not reach a certain place, to which he was going, until some time before day on Sunday morning, he took a seat in a stage or hack, and had a very uncomfortable and fatiguing ride through the country.

Dr. Thornwell was either a weak brother who thought that to be wrong which was right, or he was a strong brother who thought that to be wrong which was wrong, or he was a strong brother who thought it was wrong to use his liberty to the disregard of the scruples of his weaker brethren.

If I have presented a wrong view of this subject I hope that some of my brethren who think so will be so kind as to point out the flaw in my arguments. Let us have all the light possible on the subject. We have got real enemies of the Sabbath to fight, and perhaps it will be well to skirmish on this line first before we venture with too much boldness upon the intrenchments of the enemy.

It is possible that the following resolution will be offered to Synod, at its approaching sessions, for discussion and adoption:

That in the opinion of Synod it is not proper for ministers of the Gospel to make use of the Sabbath railroad trains in order to reach their ministerial appointments, because although it is not a sin per se, nor necessarily a violation of the Sabbath, it encourages the violation of the day by others, and puts a stumbling-block in the way of some who may be temptod by their example to do that which they believe to be wrong. P. T. P.

MIDDLE-AGED WOMEN.

Every age has its peculiar and appropriate interests. The little girl dances along with her doll, the school-girl is occupied with her lessons, and the young lady lives in a beautiful world of her own. Hers is the picturesque time of life. At home she is ornamental as well as useful, and the eyes of father and mother rest upon her complacently as she passes through the house like a sunbeam. After awhile she is sought and won, and then there opens to her another kingdom. There is the tranquil period of early married life. After awhile come the little ones, and the mother's hands and heart are full. As a friend wrote to us yesterday, "Although all the pathways of earth have been so long traversed they are as new to each one that enters as if none had passed that way before. There is but One who knows what joys, what hopes, what fears will be found therein." The years during which a mother is occupied in training and caring for her family are very busy years indeed, filled with earnest work, and especially touched with responsibility. But one by one they pass by, and there comes a sunny autumn morning when the lady, peeping into her mirror, sees the silver hairs among the brown, notices the paler color where the rose-blossom used to be, and realizes that she, young as she is, is a middle-aged woman. And surely that was Harry Archer who stepped past the window just now, so blithe and debonair, and it was to Elsie he tipped his hat so gallantly, and it is Elsie, little Elsie a wee while ago, whose blossom-tinted face is blushing with such sweet confusion as she bends over her dainty work. What does a middle-aged woman possess to compensate her for the youth that she has lost, for the burden and heat which she has borne and must still bear, and for the effort and energy she has so far put into life, her capital in the home-partnership, and her investment against the comparative inaction of old age? She has gained, for one thing, a very rich experience. She can read character as once she could not. She has grown more tolerant of those who differ from her, more patient with the erring, and more sorrowful for the unsuccessful. She has learned to restrain the too hasty word, and to check the too critical thought. She will not allow prejudice to influence her, nor will she throw away precious privileges as though they were worthless. For another thing, she has learned to live in the lives of others. Her boy in business or at college makes her his confidential friend. He tells her of his troubles and his joys. He asks and accepts her advice. Her daughters share their pleasures with her, as though she were their elder sister as well as their mother. Young people sun themselves in the light of her smiles, and feel assured that they are on the right road if she grant them her approval. It is she who necessarily takes the lead in charitable and missionary work. She goes to the various hospitals and Homes. She cuts out garments, and listens to sad stories, and provides for orphaned children, and helps the helpless and the discouraged. She cheers the pastor's heart by giving him efficient aid, and she packs the barrels and the boxes which carry the church's benefactions to outposts on the frontier and islands of the sea. If she be middle-aged and unmarried, and therefore somewhat at leisure, she is a tower of strength to a great many people, who would find their enterprises standing still and their hands tied but for her ability and self reliance. Just as in nature each season has its own delightful charm, so in life no one period monopolizes all the beauty. Spring has the sweetness of promise, Summer the richness of vitality and overflowing abundance, Autumn has the glow and the glory of fulfilment. The woman who has had her Spring and Summer should come to her Autumn thankfully, gladly, and perhaps exultantly. She has had her share of trouble and tears. She misses many who once walked with her on life's way. But the tears and the trouble have made her eyes clearer and her heart gentler, and she knows better than she could without them have known how to sympathize with souls in need. Home is drawing nearer, and she has not lost those who have entered within its gates of pearl. They have only gone before.—Christian at Work.

TRUST.

A picture memory brings to me:
I look across the years, and see
Myself beside my mother's knee.

I feel her gentle hand restrain
My selfish modes, and know again
A child's blind sense of wrong and pain.

But wiser now, a man gray grown,
My childhood's needs are better known,
My mother's chastening love I own.

Gray grown, but in our Father's sight
A child still groping for the light
To read His works and ways aright.

I bow myself beneath His hand;
That pain itself for good was planned,
I trust, but cannot understand.

I fondly dream it needs must be
That, as my mother dealt with me,
So with His children dealeth He.

I wait, and trust the end will prove
That here and there, below, above,
The chastening heals, the pain is love!

—J. G. Whittier.

GRUMBLE, GRUMBLE.

A few days ago a young man died under peculiarly distressing circumstances. His death was so sudden, and it might have been so easily avoided by a little thoughtfulness, and he was so young, so strong and so well! But the most distressing thing about it to his mother was his evident lack of readiness for death. Why he died—that is, the cause of his death—the doctor seemed not to know; but why he was not ready to die some who knew him and his family well have suggested a most significant reason. He died an ungodly man, if these people reason about it correctly, because of his parent's habit of grumbling.

They were church-members but many years ago had changed their residence from the country to the city, and their position in the church from one of influence in a small society to one of comparative obscurity in a large one. The new status never pleased them; they were proud and disappointed; they did not enjoy their back seats. Then they began to grumble. They grumbled at the minister, he did not do pastoral work enough to please them; they had been accustomed to see the pastor every day or two in the old home, this man seemed indifferent to them; neither did his preaching suit them, and he had altogether too big a salary, and, they fancied, seemed to preach for the money. They grumbled at the aristocrats in the church, people who had no business to be so "stuck up;" the church itself was becoming "too expensive a luxury for poor folks." They grumbled at the hypocrites, people who joined the church who were no better than they should be; they did not know but there were as good people out of the church as in; the church was afraid to discipline its black sheep, and such a state of things was a disgrace. They grumbled at the quartette choir, and all the city and new fangled notions; at the stupid prayer-meetings, and the "clap-trap Sunday school." And every Sabbath at dinner-table, after the morning sermon, the children heard this same grumble, grumble, grumble, till it was little wonder if, after awhile, this sort of endorsement of the church and the minister by the parents, began to bear fruit in an indifference and presently even a hostility to the whole thing represented by the church, which gradually made an irreligious, Sabbath-breaking, low-lived family out of one which, fifteen years before, had been conspicuously a Christian household.

The mother changed least. She made no particular effort to silence the grumbling; did her full share of it; was very ready to make a pretext of illness to discontinue church-going altogether; by her incessant complainings made it decidedly uncomfortable for the ladies of the church who called upon her, and for the pastors who came one after another and sought her out as a church member, and tried to arouse her to her duty; but she was first to be conscious of a wrong drift among those she loved. She could not long be blind to the change for the worst which was transpiring in her sons. She mourned the company they had often heard her say was as good as the people in the church, many of them; she was wounded by their coarse abuse of religious people; she began to be sensible of a dull agony of spirit on account of their habits; she was bewildered, and her own faith was sometimes almost lost, as she heard them boldly avow the grossest infidelity—those boys of hers who, in their country homes years ago, had so delighted in the Sabbath school, one of whom she had consecrated at his birth to the Christian ministry. But the finishing touch to her misery came when that same son, having outstripped all the others in boldness of infidelity and badness of life, was one day, without a moment's warning, summoned to yield his soul into the hands of his Maker. And now she sits in her darkened room, scarcely sure of her reason at times, going over again the years of the downward grade of her family's career, and whether or not some echo of the reasons people are giving for her sad experience has reached her ears, her own words are not empty of self-reproach for this sin of hers, repented of—shall we say?—too late.—Congregationalist.

SOME MEN'S WIVES.

Three men of wealth, meeting, not long since, in New York, the conversation turned upon their wives. Instead of finding fault with women in general and their wives in particular, each one obeyed the wise man's advice, and "gave 'honor' unto his wife."

"I tell you what it is," said one of the men, "they may say what they please about the uselessness of modern women, but my wife has done her share in securing our success in life.

"Everybody knows that her family was aristocratic, and exclusive, and all that, and when I married her she had never done a day's work in her life; but when W. & Co. failed, and I had to commence at the foot of the hill again, she discharged the servants and chose out a neat little cottage, and did her own housekeeping until I was better off again."

"And my wife," said a second, "was an only daughter, caressed and petted to death, and everybody said, 'Well, if he will marry a doll like that he will make the greatest mistake of his life;' but when I came home the first year of our marriage, sick with the fever, she nursed me back to health, and I never knew her to murmur because I thought we couldn't afford any better style or more luxuries."

"Well, gentlemen," chimed in a third, "I married a smart, healthy, pretty girl, but she was a regular blue-stocking. She adored Tennyson, doated on Byron, read Emerson, and named the first baby Ralph Waldo Emerson and the second Maud; but I tell you what 'tis," and the speaker's eyes grew suspiciously moist, "when we laid little Maud in her last bed at Auburn my poor wife had no remembrance of neglect or stinted motherly care, and the little dresses that still lie in the locked drawer were all made by her hands."

FRENCH COOKERY AT HOME.

Most persons insist that French cooking means extravagance and lack of substance "kickshaws, frogs and slops." It is true that French cookery is as widely different in every respect from all others, as unlike as the decoction which has served from the classic teapot of Mesdames Gamp and Prig on the night of their quarrel was from tea. At our restaurants they serve up roasts, boiled meats and that mystery of mysteries, hash. Beef, vegetables, fowls are boiled, then eaten, simply a tasteless, innutritious fibre. The water filled with the juices, the aroma, the strength and essence are thrown away; the French make soup of it; in fact, whatever of life-giving substance is boiled, the water is precious as a basis for soup; nothing is wasted; every crumb is turned to account in endless stews, ragouts, the legions of way of cooking eggs, and nothing is boiled excepting the hardest vegetables. With the working classes or those in middle class life roast beef is an impossibility; a tough old chicken is by skillful management made into a delicious fricassee, but the cook would never select a chicken of that sort to roast, any more than she would fricassee a tender one. Economy in housekeeping is practiced among all classes; for instance, the exhausted beef which has made the refreshing bouillon is prepared in nine different ways: They mince it, rather slice it cold, mixed with oil and vinegar, chopped herbs and anchovies, serve it hot with mushrooms or tomatoes, or with onions and other vegetables, or in pastries so delicious that no one knows the original foundation. A French kitchen is remarkable for its number of stew pans; with us its presence is remarkable: our roasts are baked in a round oven, our stews are boiled; dyspepsia stalks abroad over our land, not because we are overfed, but from bad cooking, and its ghost even is not seen in either France or Germany.

The queens of the American kitchen exist for dyspeptic purposes, and their mistresses are totally unable to adjust these gastronomic grievances, and so become wrecked on the Charybdis of domestic discord. It is a cruel and most unpalatable truth that a man loves his wife according to the state of his digestion. The process of nutrition is as great a mystery as the secret of life itself. Americans generally are enormous meat-eaters, and, like the English, express a great contempt for kickshaws; they like chops for breakfast, or a fine steak, coffee, tea and bread; they have breakfasted and feel rather heavy as they sally forth with the irrepressible newspaper. Their luncheon, eaten in an incredibly short space of time, consists of meat again, a beef steak, cold beef or chops, glass of claret or pint bottle of champagne. Dinner: beef again or mutton, boiled vegetables, few if any condiments. They can't work, they say, without good strong food.—N. Y. Evening Post.

TRUE VIGOR.

The vigor of a church is not determined by the amount of its demonstration. It often happens that congregations make up for what they lack in real spiritual power by noise and display. An energetic pastor or an excitable member may stir up a people till they effervesce in all kinds of religious service, fully believing themselves to be powerfully wrought upon by the Spirit of God, who are yet merely the subjects of human zeal. Sloth and inactivity are ruinous to the spiritual condition of any church, but artificial stimulation is nearly if not quite as bad. Diligence, earnest effort, prayer to God in humbleness and submission to his will—the right use of all these means of grace, and patient waiting for his blessing—these are methods which have the Divine promises, and which have proven effective. In these days the Church needs to learn that the world is not to be converted by spurts and spasms, but by the orderly application of the Gospel in dependence on the blessing of heaven.

GNOSTICS AND AGNOSTICS

President Hopkins at the recent meeting of the American Board made the following striking and characteristic remarks:

Recently, he said, there has come up in this country a set of people who call themselves agnostics, or religious know-nothings. Up to a certain point he would agree with them. There are some things he did not know: as why so many have so long been left in ignorance of Christ; why so many who have received Him are such poor Christians, and why evil should be permitted at all. But there are some things which he did know, and of which he was certain, viz: There is such a thing as moral evil; that between good and evil there is a difference; that good is better than evil; that such a work as Brother Parsons did in Turkey is better than murder. And he knew and was certain that, where real Christianity comes, there that which is evil will be supplanted by that which is better. Superstitions and vice will flee away as the mists of the morning. Not only will that which is evil be supplanted by that which is better, but by that which is best. Therefore whoever would bring themselves up to that which is perfect must do it through Christ and His love. Thus society as well as individuals will be made perfect. This is what we aim at. The power of the Gospel is equal to this. For this work we need helpers, not men of genius only, but talents of all sorts. There are some kinds of work for which we need weak men—that is, weak like Paul, who, when he was weak in himself, was strong in God. We need aggressive men like Paul, impulsive men like Peter, loving men like John. Who, then, will come forward to identify himself with this the grandest work of the ages?

TOUCHING INCIDENT.

The fourteenth chapter of John was read at a religious meeting in New York last week and the selection of that chapter, a gentleman present said, reminded him of an incident of the war. A soldier mortally wounded lay on the field of battle, and as he felt his end approaching he opened his Testament and read for his own comfort and for that of some around him that same chapter, and as he read its blessed words one and another wounded man crawled as near as he could to hear as much of the consoling words of Him who spake as never man spake. The scene was described as touching in the extreme. Several of the listeners died as they listened, and the reader passed away as he read. He was found dead, his hand clasping the Testament from which he read, and there were stains of his life's blood upon the book.

Patience is strength; impatience is weakness. By striving for patience, you calm the soul, and even the patient body will help to give patience to the spirit. To sit quiet, even though what is going on wearies you, is a gain. And for one thing, strive against the disposition to fly from one place to another. Wait: buds do not come out in a day, and you may yet find flowers where only a little while ago you thought it was only a barren waste.

God liketh patience! Souls that dwell in stillness
Doing the little things, or resting quite,
May just as perfectly fulfill their mission,
Be just as useful in the Father's sight,
As they who grapple with some giant evil,
Clearing a path that every eye may see;
Our Savior cares for cheerful acquiescence,
Rather than for a busy ministry.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Of the present ministry of the Free Church of Scotland there are 120 who joined in the exodus in 1843.

The people of Calcutta are becoming weary of idolatry. The manufacture of idols is declining, and the attendance at the temples is irregular and falling off.

Speaking at Liverpool on Tuesday night, Rev. Mr. Dale, of Birmingham, said neither the conciliatory attitude of the Archbishop of Canterbury nor the condescension of Dean Stanley would win the Nonconformists over to the Church of England. They do not desire to be conciliated, nor did they value condescension. They wanted equality.

Though the Papal throne is not to be established at Malta, Great Britain is to receive special attention from the Roman Church, and to be made the headquarters of one of its seminaries. It is stated that the Congregation de Propaganda Fide has set apart half a million lire for the erection at Malta of two colleges for the education of youths who wish to devote themselves to mission work in Africa.

Mr. Alderman McArthur, the Lord Mayor-elect of London, is a prominent member of the Wesleyan denomination. He has been connected with the Brixton Hill Chapel for a long number of years, and is superintendent of the Sabbath schools there. It is an appropriate coincidence that the year when there will be an ecumenical gathering of Methodists in London the Lord Mayor's chair will be occupied by a Wesleyan.

A Greek MS. of one of the Gospels, written in letters of silver on purple vellum, has recently been discovered in Calabria. It is said to be ornamented with eighteen miniatures, representing scenes in New Testament history, together with forty portraits of prophets. The discoverers of the MS. claim for it the position of the earliest surviving illuminated MS. of the Gospels, and assign it to the latter part of the fifth or the beginning of the sixth century.

Her Majesty the Queen attended Divine service in Crathie Parish Church on Sunday. She was accompanied by her granddaughters the Princesses Irene and Alexandra of Hesse, Princess Beatrice, of Dowager Marchioness of Ely, and the Hon. Miss Lambert. The Grand Duke of Hesse and Prince of Liverpool were also present. From Abergeldie Castle there were the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Prince of Glucksburg. Rev. Dr. Scott, of St. George's, Edinburgh, preached. The church was crowded, there being many strangers from Braemar and the neighborhood.

A letter received from the town of Sufa, in Southern Armenia, contains the following news:—"A Moslem lady and her daughter had embraced the Christian religion, and the girl had married an Armenian gentleman. The Moslem inhabitants of Sufa, excited by fanaticism, armed themselves with clubs, daggers, and guns, and some of them also being on horseback, attacked, on the night of August 3, the house of the Armenians, thereby spreading terror among the Christian families. They arrested the newly-married couple, and led them before the Moslem Governor, who thanked the Mohammedan mob for their devotion, and put the Armenian and his wife in prison."

A correspondent to the Times writes:—"As regards the Blantyre Mission, the Investigation Commission sent out by the society have started from Quillimane. It is deeply to be regretted that Consul O'Neill, who had received orders to accompany them, was prevented by a severe attack of dysentry from doing so. It is to be feared now that, at the best, the result of the inquiries to be made will be one-sided. The more one hears from the missionaries themselves, the worse it appears; and more one cares for missionary work and civilization the more one wishes that the charges made should be thoroughly sifted, as well for the sake of the other African mission as for Christianity itself."

MORAL OSTRICHES.

People may doubt all histories of William Tell and John Smith, and even question the existence of Buonaparte, but we cling to the old illustration, that when closely pursued the fleet ostrich hides its head under the sand, or at least in the tussocks of grass, and fancies it is safe. We think that a silly act. But is it not universally true, that none are so blind, as those who choose to be blind? Are there not on every hand many, who, like this foolish bird, conclude that nothing is known about their sins, provided they are not broadly flaunted in the eye of day? Many, who, feeling themselves watched and criticized in society and in church, yet by private concealment of wrong-doing suppose that danger is averted? Look at these moral (immoral?) ostriches!

See this one whose disposition is peculiarly porcupinish. At home, he is a censorious cross-patch. He would ordinarily make any home circle unlike a paradise, by his peculiarly startling and offensive moral gymnastics. He is not a Frenchman to his children; is snappish often to his wife, and to the cook—well, imagine how pleasant such a creature can be! But in public his smile is sweet as an angel's, and his tongue as oily as an olive. Yet there is war in his heart. Now undoubtedly it is true, that a large part of a man's private behaviour is generally known in his circle. No open comments are heard, yet he is judged by the secret light, and all his saintly bearing suffers a heavy discount. He sticks his head complacently in the sand bank of fancied safety, but his ostrich-body is fully displayed and he suffers.

Another is vicious in commercial transactions; in his suretyship; and is known on change as a very shylock, who has no hindering scruples. But he lords it by reason of his wealth; he is a leader in his church; he must not be offended, or he gives with open hand. He is guilty of no criminal act; nor of any such flagrant breach of moral law as to be subject to civil or church penalties. So he walks erect, as if he believed himself an honest man, and one walking in the way the holy prophets trod. People follow him, and fawn on him, and the pastor accepts, but scarcely enjoys his hospitalities. Ah! Satan is stealing the very seed of life from his barren, deceived heart, while vanity and self-conceit and sophistry, are the fatal sand-heap, where this moral ostrich thinks all ill is hidden, and only radiant qualities shine.

Many in high social circles secretly lead lives impure in many directions. Rumors and suspicions abound. Smoke tells of fire. Their skilfully hung tapestry has thin spots, and some corners lifted. No clear proofs of guilt are accessible so that they can be dethroned or ignored by society. No church court can handle them. These ostrich-folk know that their secret faults smell to heaven, are rank in God's sight, yet look at them: they walk in honor; they ascend, without gnawing conscience, to God's temple; but on their very backs can be read a broad placard written by the subtle serpent, "I am proud of you, my friend!" It is on his back however. So the wicked, cheating and cheated ostrich feels safe and laughs at his more scrupulous fellows. Suddenly, while at ease, the sharp iron of justice pierces his false security, and he writhes, revealed in open judgment.

The light of the Gospel, the power of the Spirit of God, must enter the hearts of men and keep them ever, with heads erect, in conscious peace with God and in power from friendly communion with the loving Saviour. Then we shall not know or be shocked at these disgraceful, head-hiding, moral ostriches.

DEATH OF DR. W. S. PLUMER.

"Died in Baltimore, surrounded by his friends, on Friday, Oct. 22, 1880, the Rev. W. S. Plumer, D. D., LL. D., in the 79th year of his age."

This is the brief announcement which comes to us. Full of honors as full of years he has fallen on sleep. Of no one, in this generation at least, can it be said that for the last half century he has stood before the religious public more prominently, and in prominence more deserved, than Dr. William Swan Plumer. His life was one of incessant activity, and from the storehouse of a most astonishing memory and the resources of a sanctified mind and heart he has given to the Christian world works which are read doubtless wherever Presbyterianism is known throughout the world. An enumeration of these works cannot be given here. They include Studies on the Book of Psalms, Commentary on Romans and Commentary on Hebrews, The Law of God, Rome Against the Bible, The Church and Her Enemies, and very many others.

Dr. Plumer was born in Griersburg, Pa., July 25, 1802. He graduated from Washington College, Va., and Princeton Theological Seminary; was licensed to preach in 1826. In the early years of his ministry he was a domestic missionary. He organized the Presbyterian churches in Danville, Va., and in Warrenton, N. C., and preached for a time in Raleigh and on the coast towns of North Carolina, among them Washington, Wilmington and Newbern. He was pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Richmond, Va., near a score of years, and afterwards had a pastorate in Baltimore.

For eight years from 1837, he was editor of the Watchman of the South, a religious paper then published in Richmond, Va., and founded by him. He was professor of didatic and pastoral theology in Allegheny Seminary for many years, and in 1866 became professor of didatic and polemic theology in Columbia Seminary. In 1880 retiring from the active duties of the professorship, he became Professor Emeritus.

In all great controversies of the Church in his day Dr. Plumer was prominent. In the great Old and New School controversy of 1837 he was an Old School leader. That Virginia took that side so determinedly is due more to the influence of Dr. Plumer, probably, than to that of any other one man in the country. The organ of the Presbyterians had espoused the New School theories, hence the establishment of the Watchman of the South under Dr. Plumer's control as indicated above.

The name of Dr. Plumer will be enrolled high in the roll of American Presbyterian divines.

The remains of Dr. Plumer were carried to Richmond, Va., where on Sabbath last they were buried. An immense concourse assembled in the First Presbyterian Church of which Dr. P. had been for so many years pastor—a concourse of friends from all Christian denominations and from all walks and conditions of life. Dr. Preston stated that Dr. Hoge and he had been appointed by the Synod of Virginia to conduct the services. His introductory was impressive, with the text: "Know ye not, that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel." In remarks feeling and appropriate he referred especially to the long pastorate of Dr. Plumer over the congregation now paying their sad tribute, and to the love and tenderness with which his duties had been discharged.

Dr. Hoge had looked to Dr. Plumer as a father, had counselled with him as such, and maintained with him through life the closest intimacy. Dr. Hoge's tribute was glowing with the eloquence that comes from a heart surcharged with love and sympathy. The character of Dr. Plumer, as portrayed by him, was peerless. He gave a biographical sketch of the life of the deceased. One incident Dr. H. related: At the close of the last letter—and a sad one—he had received from Dr. Plumer there was this postcript: "Hallelujah! the Lord Omnipotent reigneth."

Rev. Dr. Curry of the Baptist Church, appropriately bore his testimony to the great and sterling virtues of the deceased, dwelling specially upon the broad catholicity of his spirit, and claiming that he belonged not alone to Presbyterianism, but to Christianity.

SYNOD OF VIRGINIA

Met on 19th inst. at Martinsburg, W. Va. Ninety ministers and forty-three elders were present. Rev. Charles White was elected moderator, and Rev. J. W. Rosebro and Elder P. F. Howard temporary clerks. A motion to make the stated clerks of presbyteries a standing committee to examine the records of presbyteries, after some discussion, was ruled out.

Rev. Dr. Brown, of a committee appointed at the last Synod to confer with the authorities of the Howard University at Washington, D. C., presented a report. The report commended the theological department of that institution but did not favor "the Synod making use of said department in the furtherance of its work of colored evangelization." The ground of this objection was the duty of the Southern Church to sustain its own institution at Tuscaloosa, Ala., for the training of a colored ministry.

After some discussion mainly approving the report, an amendment which expressed the sympathy and approbation of Synod in regard to the theological instruction of Howard University, and the wish that it might long continue to give such instruction, was adopted, and the report so amended was adopted.

Prayer of the Synod was offered in behalf of Rev. Dr. Plumer, and a telegram expressive of the sympathy and affection of the Synod was sent to him and the family.

The complaint of Rev. N. M. Woods against the Presbytery of East Hanover for the licensure of Rev. R. R. Howison was taken up. The decision of a claim of Mr. Woods that no member of East Hanover Presbytery should be allowed to vote was postponed until roll-call.

"Mr. Woods' complaint, read by himself, was first heard. Mr. Woods complained of the licensure of Mr. R. R. Howison by the Presbytery of East Hanover, stating the facts, which are, briefly and much condensed, as follows:

"Mr. Howison, an estimable gentleman and Christian, was licensed to preach the Gospel in 1844 by the Presbytery of East Hanover. He was dismissed, at his own request, to Lexington Presbytery, by which he was ordained and installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Staunton, Va. After exercising the ministry for a short time, less than a year, the state of his health constrained him to ask that he be divested of the sacred office, which was done. He was reduced to the condition of a layman, and recommended to unite with some particular church as a private member, which he did. Within the last year, after having been out of the ministry for about thirty-five years, he applied to the Presbytery of East Hanover to be licensed to preach the Gospel again, and was licensed. Mr. Woods' grounds of complaint are: 1st. The law of the Church requires that a minister divested of his functions by one Presbytery shall not be restored by another Presbytery without the consent of the Presbytery which divested him. 2d. Mr. Howison was relicensed, a proceeding unknown in the history of the Presbyterian Church. 3d. The examination of Mr. H. for this relicensure was incompleto and did not meet the requirements of the Book in the case of licensure.

"Synod next heard the record of East Hanover Presbytery in the case of Mr. R. R. Howison, including his application to be taken again into the ministry, in which he gave a frank and interesting statement of his history, views and feelings in regard to the ministry.

"The complainant then sustained his complaint by arguments and citations from the digest of acts of the General Assembly bearing on the question. Mr. Woods took the ground first that East Hanover had no jurisdiction without the consent of Lexington Presbytery; and then that Mr. Howison should have been restored rather than relicensed to the ministry; and then showed the deficiencies of the examination. Mr. Woods spoke for three quarters of an hour and was attentively heard; enlivening his speech with occasional flashes of humor. Rev. Dr. Brown was then heard in behalf of the Presbytery. He began by quoting the proverb, "A man that is first in his cause seemeth just but his neighbor cometh and searcheth him." Dr. Brown commended the ability of Mr. Woods and said that half that ability on the other side would have given it victory; ten times that ability on Mr. Woods' side could not establish his positions. He reviewed the life of Mr. Howison during his absence from the ministry, his high Christian character, and his services as an Elder of the Church in Fredricksburg, Va., during this interval; and mentioned the fact that an injury received at the capitol in Richmond in 1870 had prolonged his disqualification.

Dr. Brown referred to the minutes of Lexington Presbytery, to show that the design was not to depose but to divest, arguing that Mr. H. was by this action, put back into the state in which he was before licensure. Mr. Howison had sought release from the ministry under a crushing sense of responsibility for duty which he could not perform. The action was valid now because it had been acquiesced in for thirty-four years. Confusion would have been consequent upon denial of jurisdiction to East Hanover Presbytery. What was the ecclesiastical status of Mr. Howison after divestiture? Dr. B. condemned in strong terms the papist idea that the office of the ministry, once assumed, pervades the being of the man and becomes indelible. He conceded that Mr. Howison had not been examined on church government; but being only examined for licensure, and inasmuch as a licentiate does not administer church government, his examination on church government, as is often done, might be postponed until he was examined for ordination. Mr. H., as Mr. W. had said was laboring acceptably in Hanover and would probably soon be called to become a pastor. Job had said that his "complaint was heavier than his groans," Dr. B. thought Mr. Woods' groan heavier than his complaint. Dr. B. closed with another humorous allusion. Mr. Woods, replying briefly, objected to Dr. Brown's distinction that a deposed minister is under the jurisdiction of Presbytery and a divested minister is not under jurisdiction, for the one as well as the other may become a private member.

"When Dr. Brown's name was called, his vote as a member of East Hanover was challenged by Rev. E. D. Washburne, as a precedent. Dr. Brown contended for his right to vote. Mr. Woods hoped that the challenge would be withdrawn. Dr. Peck hoped that the challenge would not be withdrawn, but that the matter would be settled now as to the vote of lower courts in cases in which they are interested. Dr. Bullock hoped it would be decided, and decided right; and argued for the right of the ministers of the lower court to vote in this case. The motion to challenge Dr. Brown's vote was lost.

When Mr. Woods' name was called, he asked to be excused from voting, and was excused. The vote stood as follows:

To sustain	18
To sustain in part	38
Not to sustain	55

"Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D. D., presented an overture to the General Assembly for a Union of Foreign Missionary operations with the General Assembly of the North, and for a similar union in the department of evangelistic labors for the colored race. Referred to Committee on Bills and Overtures."

The death of Dr. Plumer was announced to the Synod of Virginia, and Rev. Dr. Leyburn and Murkland were appointed to represent the Synod at the memorial services in Baltimore, and Drs. Hoge and Preston to represent the body at the funeral exercises in Richmond.

SYNOD OF KENTUCKY.

Synod met at Georgetown, Ky., October 13th. Over one hundred and ten members were present.

A very interesting discussion was held on the subject of "Secular Education." The participants were Dr. Bracken (who read the report), Drs. Brecks, Robinson, Hendrick, Davies and George. A discussion on "Modes of Work in Revivals" followed. Evangelistic Labor, Missions, The Religious Press, Education for the Ministry, engaged earnest conference. The question of Tithe was introduced by Rev. Dr. Pratt by a resolution that it was still in force, but Synod declined to discuss it.

SOME DISTINGUISHED MEN OF THE COUNCIL.

PROF. ROBERT FLINT, D. D. LL. D.

This rising young divine belongs to the Established Church of Scotland, and is Professor of Theology in the University of Edinburg. He was born in the year 1837, and is now forty-three years old. For sixteen years he has been a professor, and for four years previous was a pastor. Already he has distinguished himself as an author. His able work on "Theism" places him in the front rank as a clear and forcible writer. He is popular as a professor, and has the confidence and admiration of his students, upon whom he leaves the impress of his genius. One of them, who spent a year in Edinburgh and attended his lectures daily and had opportunity of an extended acquaintance among Scottish professors and ministers, said to us, that he did not meet in Scotland his superior as a teacher. The paper presented by Prof. Flint on Agnosticism at the Council in Philadelphia will take a high place among the many able papers of that body, and will no doubt add to his reputation, as a profound and scholarly thinker. It was thought by some that the position he took on the subject of discipline placed him among those in Scotland who are unfavorable to discipline in such cases as Robertson Smith and others. This position, however, was disavowed by his friends; notably by the Rev. Mr. Smith of Kirknowton, Scotland. He declared the professor would be the last man to sneer at the exercise of church discipline, as had been charged, but thought that "the mere exercise of discipline was not an adequate means of replying to an heretical error." Dr. Flint, it will be remembered, delivered the opening sermon of the first General Council in Edinburgh three years ago, which was very favorably received. Since the adjournment of the last Council he has been delivering at Princeton Seminary a course of lectures, provided for by the "Stone Foundation," on the subject of "Modern Agnosticism, historically and critically considered." If his life is spared, now in its early prime, he will make his mark upon the age.

REV. JOHN MARSHALL LANG, D. D.

Dr. Lang also belongs to the Established Church. He is about forty-five years of age, tall, full bearded, with a sympathetic voice, and is a capital speaker. He was frequently heard on the floor of the Council, and always commanded respect. He was educated at Glasgow college and received his doctorate from Glasgow University. His first pastoral work was in the churches of East Aberdeen and Anderston. He afterwards went to Glasgow and is now the honored pastor of the Barony church, where before him the celebratee Dr. Norman McLeod—albeit he was a latitudinarian in some things—so long and so grandly preached the glorious Gospel. Dr. Lang is greatly respected in his own country by the Church at large, as is evident from the positions of trust in which he has been placed. He is now Convener of the Continental Mission Committee of the General Assembly. In connection with Dr. Willis of Aberdeen, he was chosen the first deputation ever sent from the Established Church to the Northern Presbyterian Church in 1872. The doctor is no less gifted as a writer, than as a preacher. Those who take the Catholic Presbyterian may have seen frequent contributions from his pen. His book on "Heaven and Home" is highly thought of by those who have examined it. He read a paper on "Church order and Church life," before the Council.

REV. J. MURRAY MITCHELL, LL. D.

This distinguished missionary belongs to the Free Church of Scotland, a Church that has given not a few famous men, as Dr. Alexander Duff, to the work of missions. He is now sixty-seven years old, and has spent the greater part of his life in India, some twenty-five years at Bombay and some five or six years at Calcutta. Returning home from the latter city in 1873, he was appointed secretary of the Free Church Missions. This position he now holds, and he is on his way at this time, via San Francisco, to visit the missions of Japan, China and India in an official capacity. His great heart is thoroughly in the work; he has something of the noble enthusiasm that characterized Duff and Wilson. A few weeks ago he delivered a sermon in the Tenth Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, on "The Shaking of the Nations" of which the morning paper said: "The scholarly precision of his language, the broad literary culture evinced in his method, the refined countenance and the mellow but powerful voice together gave a singular charm to a discourse which, without them, would have been remarkable for both breadth and fervor."

It must have been pleasant to Dr. Mitchell to meet at the Council his old pupil, Mr. Sheshadrai. We may look for grand results from the missionary operations of that Church that puts her best men in the field. This seems to be the policy of the Free Church of Scotland. For broad culture, executive ability and zeal her missionaries have always stood in the formost rank. When the story of missions in India is written the names of Alexander Duff and John Murray Mitchell will have a prominent place.

REV. ANTONIO ARRIGHI.

This young man was a representative from the Free Church of Italy. He has a remarkable history, as published in some of the papers of this country. He was born of Roman Catholic parents in the year 1837 in the city of Florence, Italy. At the early age of twelve years he joined the patriot army of Garibaldi as a drummer boy. At the seige of Rome he was wounded by an exploding shell, and fell into the hands of the French troops, who turned him over to the Papal authorities, together with many others of Garibaldi's soldiers, and they were condemned to hard labor. This must have been very galling to the spirit of the young and ardent republican. But he was to suffer yet another calamity still more grievous, perhaps,—banishment from his native land—which, however, proved to be the greatest blessing of his life. He was forcibly sent away from his loved Italy with nineteen others to America. While in this country he was converted from the errors and superstition of Popery to the religion of Christ. At the same time he was profoundly impressed that it was his duty to prepare himself for mission work in the beautiful land of his nativity. He studied four years in Ohio, then repaired to the Theological Seminary, Boston, Mass., where he took a three years' course. After completing his studies he sailed for Italy and planted a mission in Florence, the city of his birth. He has been eminently successful in the work there, preaching and laboring in season and out of season in behalf of his benighted countrymen. Many have laid aside the abominations of Rome, and are rejoicing in the light of a pure Gospel, through the labors of this efficient worker for Christ. Mr. Arrighi speaks English quite well, and made a fine impression on all who heard him telling with a glowing heart the great things God is bringing to pass in his beloved country.

TO THE ALUMNI OF UNION SEMINARY.

Those who have not already done so will please at once inform the undersigned, 1st, when graduated or left this Seminary; 2d, when and by what Presbytery, licensed, ordained, installed; 3d, what changes have occurred in professional engagements, or in any others; 4th, what pamphlets or books published, and if any please send a copy of each to our library. It is very desirable to obtain prompt and accurate replies, as the "general catalogue" proposed to be published ought to be issued this ensuing winter. This is the fourth effort to get this desired information. Friends of deceased alumni will please reply respecting them.

B. M. SMITH.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Rev. Francis D. Moore, a Presbyterian minister of Covington, Ky., whom it will be remembered, became so notorious about a year ago for his heterodox notions on Sabbath observance, again appears before the public for a little while. The Presbytery of Ebenezer rebuked Mr. Moore and condemned his teachings. The question came up recently before the Synod of Kentucky (North) in examination of the records of Ebenezer Presbytery. It was recommended by the committee on the records that the action of Ebenezer Presbytery be sustained, but Mr. Moore was allowed the floor to explain his views, which he did at length. The Synod then unanimously approved the action of Ebenezer Presbytery.

Now if Mr. Moore continues to preach his peculiar notions there will be an ecclesiastical trial, and excommunication and a good deal of notoriety for Mr. Moore, and a rare chance for the expression of hate from the secular journals of infidel leanings. Mr. Moore may save it all if he will by submission or a withdrawal from the Presbyterian Church.

Some kind friend has sent us copies of the Martinsburg Statesman, and thus enabled us to give our readers a condensed report of the proceedings of the Synod of Virginia. We give quite full extracts of the proceedings in the case of complaint, because the case is a very novel one.

Our young brethren in the ministry seem to have with one accord resolved to find partners in life's joys—may it never be life's sorrows. Last week we published the notice of marriage of Rev. Lauchlin A. McLean and now we chronicle marriages of Rev. George W. MacMillan and Rev. Charles W. Robinson. The last named with his bride came directly on for a visit to his parents in North Carolina. Success in life to all.

To-day is the day appointed by the last General Assembly as a day of special prayer for the cause of Missions. The prayers of God's people draw blessings from the storehouse of His grace. Let us hope that earnest, importunate, prevailing prayer will ascend in behalf of Missions at home and abroad, and that showers of blessings will descend upon us.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

CHOCTAW NATION.

Rev. Charles W. Stewart sends us information regarding churches in his charge:

The churches are all in Indian Presbytery among the Choctaw Nation, and were organized by order of Presbytery during the month of August, 1879. New Hope church; Beaver Dam organized with six members, declined to three, but now has eight; Oak Hill church organized with twenty-two members and St. Paul's with fifteen. Mr. Stewart also preaches at two other places which have not yet been organized, as they are combined with other denominations.

A very good school at Oak Hill is conducted by a Baptist teacher, but there is an earnest call for a freedman missionary of our own faith and order.

After November 1st., prox., the postoffice address of Rev. D. A. McRae will be Melrose, Robeson county, N. C.

INSTALLATIONS.

Rev. T. J. Allison writes from Mebaneville, N. C., Oct. 22, 1880: "I was installed at Mebaneville as pastor of the church on the first Sabbath of this month. The sacrament was administered at night. One person was added to the church on profession of Christ. During the meeting we enjoyed the excellent preaching of Bro. Johnston, of Winston. I was installed at Bethlehem church on the third Sabbath. The sacrament was administered; six persons were added to the church on profession of Christ. Bro. Currie of Chapel Hill, and Bro. Law of Pittsboro, preached capital sermons, and a great many expressed themselves as having been much revived during this meeting, which began Friday morning, and closed Saturday night.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Dallas: At a called meeting Fort Worth church was granted permission to prosecute a call for the pastoral services of Rev. Wm. George, D. D., before the Presbytery of West Lexington, Ky., and Rev. L. B. Chaney was called to the office and work of evangelist of the Presbytery.

Atlanta: Davidson College was endorsed and recommended. An overture to the General Assembly was decreed, asking that the Form of Government be so amended as that elders and deacons may be demitted from office on the principle and under such circumstances as are now allowed to ministers. Rev. A. McElroy was received from the Presbytery of Nashville. Rev. R. F. Taylor was dismissed to Bethel Presbytery and Licentiate A. M. Cooper to Mecklenburg. Mr. Samuel Scott of Conyer's church was received as a candidate for the ministry.

Chickasaw: Rev. J. W. Rosebrough received from Presbytery of North Mississippi, and Rev. J. A. Kimmons dismissed to the Presbytery of St. John's. The following overture was ordered to be sent up to the Synod of Memphis: "The Presbytery of Chickasaw would respectfully overture the Synod of Memphis to overture the General Assembly to so modify our plan of systematic benificence that more may be thrown upon the Presbyteries, and the expenses of the Church be thus lessened; while preserving the central oversight by the Assembly, keeping prominent the idea of our unity as a Church."

Louisville: Presbytery decided that commissions, not committees, should conduct installations. Order taken for installation of Rev. Ben Helm. Rev. C. W. Robinson having accepted a call to Mizpah church for part of his time a commission was appointed to install him. Licentiate W. E. Cave obtained permission to prosecute before the Presbytery of Maryland a call to Big Spring church. Rev. A. D. McClure was received from the Presbytery of North Mississippi, and arrangements made for his installation at Bardstown. The tithe subject was made interesting by the extraordinary success reported by Rev. Mr. Houston in its trial in his church.

Central Mississippi: A church was reported by Rev. Dr. R. McInnis as having been organized at Bolton. Dr. McInnis was appointed to read an essay on infant baptism. The Southwestern Presbyterian University was endorsed and commended.

New Orleans: The action of special importance is contained in the following extract from the official minutes as published in the Southwestern Presbyterian: "It having appeared that J. G. Gruber, a member of this Presbytery, has, about five months ago, connected himself with the Evangelical Lutheran Church without leave for notification, and is thus holding his ecclesiastical membership in two different bodies at the same time; his course was judged to be disorderly, and his name was stricken from the roll of Presbytery. It having also appeared that a majority of the Evangelical Presbyterian church over which the said Gruber was pastor, had connected themselves with the Lutheran body, and still retain possession of the property occupied by them as a Presbyterian church, it was resolved that inasmuch as the said property was bequeathed to the Presbyterian Church, a Lutheran congregation has no claims upon it. This whole subject was referred to the church extension committee, with power to take such measures as may be proper to recover the property. It was made a standing rule, that the church extension committee report at the spring meetings."

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

Harmony met pursuant to adjournment on the 14th of October at Liberty Hill church, continuing its sessions three days. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. H. G. Gilland, from Isa. li: 3. Twelve ministers were present. Fourteen churches were represented. Fifteen ministers were absent. Twenty-five churches were not represented. The small attendance was owing to the fact that the place of meeting is located in the extreme western part of the Presbytery. More than half the number present went in their own conveyance.

Rev. J. G. Law, of Darlington was elected moderator, and J. T. Walsh, of Conwayboro, temporary clerk. In the absence of the stated clerk, Rev. J. S. Cozby was appointed to act in his place.

Rev. W. S. Plumer, D. D., was dismissed to East Hanover Presbytery. The stated clerk was instructed to write to our beloved brother and express to him the sincere regret of the Presbytery that he deems it his duty to take such a step, and also express to him our warm love and esteem for him. Presbytery having heard, through Dr. Leighton Wilson, of the severe sickness of our venerable brother did at once engage in earnest prayer in his behalf.

Rev. S. H. Hay was dismissed to the Charleston Presbytery. Rev. C. E. Chichester accepted a call to the Florence church, and the following arrangements were made for his installation during the next Spring meeting of Presbytery. To preach the sermon, Rev. W. J. McKay, Rev. J. G. Law alternate; to deliver the charge to the pastor, Rev. J. S. Cozby, Rev. James McDowell, alternate; to deliver the charge to the people, Rev. J. E. Dunlap, Rev. E. H. Buist alternate.

Rev. R. D. Perry obtained leave to retain a call from New-Harmony church, until the Spring meeting.

Rev. Messrs. Cozby, McKay and Edmunds, with elders Judge Fraser and A. F. Wilson were appointed a committee to organize a church at Mayesville. The committee to organize a church at Wedgefield was continued. Rev. C. E. Chichester, Rev. E. G. Smith, elder J. T. Walsh, Revs. J. G. Richards and E. H. Buist were appointed a committee to consider this subject and report to the next Spring Presbytery.

Rev. Drs. Girardeau and Mack being present as corresponding members, made earnest appeals in behalf of Columbia Seminary. Presbytery resolved to undertake to raise $3,500 to aid in the endowment of another professorship.

Directory of Worship.—A committee was appointed to examine the same and report to to the next Spring meeting. A. M. Fraser was granted permission to continue his labors outside the bounds of Presbytery. S. E. Bishop was continued in the Horry field at a salary of $500. The Camden church obtained permission to employ Rev. Mr. Sale, a licentiate of Athens Presbytery. This committee was instructed to apply to the Committee on Home Missions in Baltimore for $50 each for Rev. Messrs. Ghee and Cousar colored preachers within our bounds, but belonging to a presbytery of their own. A letter from candidate J. M. Plowden was reported to this committee. It was also ordered to make out an assessment upon the churches for presbyterial fund for the ensuing year. Rev. J. G. Richards asked for a dissolution of the pastoral relation existing between himself and the Liberty Hill church. After hearing the delegate from the church the matter was postponed to an adjourned meeting of Presbytery to be held during the meeting of Synod.

Place of next meeting, Florence church. Time Wednesday before the second Sabbath in April, at 7½ o'clock p. m.

W. A. GREGG, Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Eastern Texas meets at Longview Saturday, at 10 a. m., October 30.

THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The sixty-seventh annual meeting of the Synod of North Carolina will be held in the First Presbyterian church in the city of Raleigh on Wednesday evening, Nov. 10, 1880, at 7 o'clock. WM. S. LACY, Stated Clerk.

In order to save time and trouble delegates to Synod are requested to send in their names to the Committee of Arrangements that homes may be provided for them in advance.

Address: E. R. STAMPS,
Chm'n. Com. Arrangements.
Raleigh, N. C.

The Committee of Enrollment will meet in accordance with the requirement of Synod (Printed minutes for 1879, page 86) to prepare the roll of the Synod, in the Lecture Room of the First Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, N. C., on Wednesday afternoon, November 10th 1880, at 5 oclock,

WM. S. LACY, }
JNO. S. WATKINS, } Committee.

The following reduction of rates has been extended by the Railroad companies to delegates in attendance upon the sessions of Synod in Raleigh, November, 10th 1880:

Return tickets for one first-class fare will be granted by the following Railroads: Carolina Central Railway; Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railway.

Return tickets will be granted to delegates and visitors for three cents per mile round trip, by the following Railroads: Raleigh and Gaston Railroad; Raleigh and Augusta Air Line.

"Delegates to and from the meeting of the Synod of North Carolina at Raleigh" can secure tickets "between November 8th and 18th at three cents per mile each way, over all the lines in North Carolina," represented in the "Associated Railways of Virginia and the Carolinas; comprising the Peidmont Air Line, the Atlantic Coast Line, the Central Short Line, the Seaboard Air Line;" that is on the following Railroads not hitherto mentioned: The Richmond and Danville; North Carolina (Central); North Western North Carolina; Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta; Wilmington and Weldon; Wilmington, Columbia and Augusta.

A like rate of three cents per mile each way will be granted by the following Railroads: Atlantic and North Carolina; Western North Carolina.

The foregoing list includes all the responses hitherto received, October 15th 1880.

W. S. LACY, Stated Clerk.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Standard Series.—Messrs. I. K. Funk & Co. have been and are still doing a great deal of good in publishing this cheap, but valuable series. Before us, we have "America Revisited"—By Geo. Augustus Sala; Price 20 cents. "Lacon, or Many Things in Few Words"—By Rev. C. C. Colton A. M. Price 20 cents. "The Bible and the Newspaper."—By Charles W. Spurgeon; Price 15 cents. "Letters from a citizen of the World"—To His Friends in the East; or Essays through the Eyes of a Chinese Philosopher—By Oliver Goldsmith; Price 20 cents. The name and authorship indicate their value to literary readers. While they do not all reach the height of philosophical works they are admirable substitute for the trifling novels and novellettes of the present day, which are now so popular especially among the young. These works are printed without abridgement. I. K. Funk & Co., Publishers 10 and 12 Dey street, New York.

Blackwood's Magazine for October is on our table. It contains the following excellent articles: Dr. Wortle's School; Memory; The Enchanted Bridle; Bush Life in Queensland; the Roof of the World; Lois: A Sketch; Life and Death: Three Sonnets; Sweden and the Salons before the French Revolution; The Stump Ministry: Its First Session.—Leonard Scott, Publishing Co., New York.

The Presbyterian Monthly is once more before us. The October number is remarkably fine. It has so many popular and interesting articles that we have not space to name them all. The following are a few only: The Church in Grumbletown; Toward Sunset; Jesus; Coming by and by; Death of Polycarp; The Pity of God; How Grace was cured. Price $2 per annum. William Sydenham Scholmoore, Philadelphia, Pa.

Lippincott's Magazine for November is profusely illustrated. Contents: The Rising of the Colorado Valley; The Arts of India; Adam and Eve; A Pivotal Point: The Mistakes of two People; Limoges, and its Porcelain; Three Roses; The Practical History of a Play; How She Kept Her Vows; Heinrich Heine; Mrs Marcellus; Automatism; Our Monthly Gossip. Literature of the Day. Yearly subscription, $4. Single number, 35 cents. Specimen number mailed, postpaid, to any address, on receipt of 20 cents. J. B. Lippincott & Co., Publishers, 715 and 717 Market street, Philadelphia.

The Gospel in all Lands. This magazine is devoted to describing the country and people and their religions throughout the world. The October number is devoted to Polynesia. Among its contents are the following articles, finely illustrated: Polynesian Sketches: Hawaiian Islands; Introduction of Christianity into Mangaia;" Christian Work in New Zealand; Forty Years of Missionary Progress; Missions in Micronesia; Letter from Rev. A. R. Raven; Letter from Rev. Arthur Elvin; Mami's Gift, and several others. Published by Eugene R. Smith, 64 Bible House, New York. Terms $2 50 a year.

Appleton's Journal: A monthly magazine of general literature, published by D. Appleton & Co., 1, 3 and 5 Bond street, New York, at $3 per annum, contains among its excellent articles the following: All Alone; The Rights of Married Women; Literary Success of a Hundred Years Ago; The New Renaissance, or the Gospel of Intensity, Love's Heralds; Some Current Notes, &c.

The Presbyterian Review: October, 1880, $3 a year. A. D. F. Randolph & Co., New York. This number concludes the first year's issue of this Review. It has 1,200 subscribers but needs double that number, the publishers say, to insure its continuance beyond a second year. Its managing editors are Prof. A. A. Hodge, D. D., of Princeton, and Prof. C. A. Briggs, of Union Theological Seminary, N. Y. The additional subscribers ought to be secured at once, for the Review is needed by the churches.

Christian Weekly. We welcome this paper. Ever since it was established we have considered it a noble Christian enterprise and wished it success. So many worthless and often vile illustrated papers are flooding the land and pandering to the prurient tastes of our youth that such a journal as the Christian Weekly was greatly needed. Able articles are contributed by our best writers. Rich provisions are made for children. Varied illustrations abound, finely executed, and full of instruction about natural scenery at home and abroad, or about the arts, or transpiring events, or illustrious persons. We freely commend it as evangelical in tone, attractive and elevating in matter and illustration, and worthy of general introduction into any Christian household.

The Presbyterian Publishing Company has the floor: Presbyterian Council of 1880, of Philadelphia—The Essays and Debates in full, printed from the official plates: $1 paper cover (essays and debates in full). $2 in cloth, with Introductory Narrative; $3 in cloth, with Narrative and Appendix. Complete. We have purchased the right, and decided to use the official plates issued by the official committee of the Council, instead of printing from our own stenographic report. The above $3 book is the official volume, published by us but included in this offer by arrangements with the official publishers at their price. We expect it to be ready in November or December, or as soon as the committee completes its labors. Take your choice from the above schedule, and send your subscription promptly by postoffice order or registered letter. Address the Presbyterian Publishing Co., 1510 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

St. Nicholas is on our table. The September number is very acceptable. It is profusely illustrated with bicycles, boats and the like. It tells the boys how to rig and sail small boats, and all about the bicycle, of which we have heard so much talk. The Major's Boy Talk Stories come in very nicely to amuse the children. We think it is the best magazine in the country for boys and girls. $3 a year. 25 cents a number. Scribner & Co., New York.

We have from F. Gutekunst, 712 Arch street, Philadelphia, a photograph of the late General Council. Considering that there are one hundred and eighty figures in the picture the vividness and distinctness of the impression are very remarkable. We have found no difficulty in recognizing those with whose features we are at all faminiar. Rev. Dr. J. Henry Smith is unmistakably there in full length and so Prof. Kerr. Rev. Dr. J. L. Wilson's face is easily recognized, and the solid, beaming and decidedly unhandsome countenance of Principal Cairns may be easily picked out from the surrounding crowd. Price on roller, postpaid, to any address $1.

N. C. Medical Journal: Edited by M. J. DeRosset, M. D., and Thomas F. Wood, M. D. Published by Jackson & Bell, Wilming ton, N. C. $3 a year, single copies 30 cents. The September number of this valuable periodical has been laid on our table. Among its contents are several articles of peculiar interest, not only to the medical profession, but to many beyond the pale of that profession. The article on Nitro-Glycerine as a Medical Agent will not fail to attract the attention of all students of medicine. We commend this journal to the patronage of our readers and especially to the members of the medical profession.

The South Atlantic, with its usual interesting table of contents, has also put in its appearance for October. The present number contains Short Sketches of the Old Southern Regime, On the Ashley River, Musing in the Meadow, Our Courier, Edgar Poe's Grave, Lesson of the Vine, A New College Curriculum, Imagination and Memory, The Minne-Singers, Song of the Old Mill-Wheel, Leaves from My Grandaunt's Journal, Dying Alone, St. John's Orphan Asylum, Emancipation in the District of Columbia, The Verandah. Mrs. Cicero W. Harris, Baltimore, Md. Price $3 00 year; single copy 30 cents.

We call attention to the advertisement of Milburn wagons. It will be seen that they are recommended by parties competent to judge and thoroughly reliable.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Items from the Central Presbyterian:

Rev. W. McKay is supplying the church at Brunswick, Ga.

Rev. J. P. Strider, of Virginia, has accepted an invitation to the Presbyterian church at Thomasville, Ga., and will take charge of his new field, November 1st.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Kerr, of Mississippi, has recently taken charge of Muscogee, Ephesus, Hamilton, and Geneva churches in the western part of Macon Presbytery. His address is Juniper, Ga.

Twenty communicants have been added recently to the Presbyterian church in Columbus, Ga.

The lecture of Dr. Hoge of Richmond, Va., on 15th inst., netted a handsome sum for the Ladies' Benevolent Society. This society subscribed some two thousand dollars towards the the endowment fund of Hampden Sidney College, which is nearly paid up. The proceeds of this lecture were to be devoted towards this object. Dr. Hoge intimated that he would deliver another lecture for the same purpose, but the time has not been fixed. The subject will be "Modern Jerusalem and Damascus."

Rev. J. S. White has been obliged to resign pastoral charge of Catholic and Pleasant Grove churches in Bethel Presbytery on account of ill health.

Items from Southern Presbyterian:

The Rev. W. T. Thompson has been chosen pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Charleston, formerly the pastoral charge of the late Rev. Dr. Forrest. Mr. Thompson entered on his duties in his new field last Sabbath.

Last week four communicants were added to the church at Tallahassee, Fla., which is under the pastoral care of the Rev. Henry R. Raymond, Jr.

Two weeks ago fourteen communicants were added to the church at McKinney, Texas.

Bethel Presbytery resolved to raise $4,000 for the "Home Mission Fund;" Harmony Presbytery proposes to raise $3,500 and South Carolina Presbytery $2,500.

Items from the Christian Observer:

There has been an addition of thirteen members to the Presbyterian church, in Denmark, Tenn., as a part of the result of the meeting conducted by the Rev. Dr. Hoyte, which was noted two weeks ago. There were twenty-six professions; others will join the Presbyterian church.

Rev. W. A. Sample writes from Fort Smith, Ark.; "I resumed public services on the first Sabbath in September, after a suspension of three months (ordered) to allow me to recover from subacute laryngitis. The wisdom of the action taken, has been abundantly justified, for "I have been brought to my work again in ordinarily good condition—manifestly better, or about free, I hope, and forever, from laryngeal trouble."

The students welcomed Dr. R. L. Dabney's return to the Seminary after several months absence in Europe.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

The N. C. State Fair has been attended by immense crowds and the display in all departments is said to be fine, in the stock department unusually so.

A telegram was received here yesterday morning announcing that the steam cotton gin of Mr. C. Barnes, at Wilson, N. C., was destroyed by fire Monday night. The property was insured for $2,250, of which $1,500 was in the Agricultural Insurance Company, represented by Messrs. J. W. Gordon & Bro., of this city, the other $1,000 being in the Old North State Company. The steam saw mill stood in immediate proximity to the cotton gin, but no mention is made of its loss.—Wilmington Star.

Seventeen Mormon Elders are on their way to North Carolina and other Southern States to make converts to their faith and secure immigrants to Colorado.—Southern Home.

An English gentleman, Mr. Leigh Smith, took his summer trip in his own steamer up in the Arctic seas. August 14, he reached Franz Josephs Land and explored the west coast to 80.30 north lattitude, the highest point yet reached. He thinks the exploration of the Pole is not impossible.—St. Louis Pres

It is said by those who have tried it that bran is as good as the best commercial fertilizer for potatoes and corn, and much cheaper.

Knowledge is better than wealth, yet how many people there are in this wicked world who prefer the inferior article.

A farm servant ploughing near Rosenberg, in West Prussia, a few days ago turned up an earthenware pot containing about six thousand gold coins. They were so-called "hollow pennies" of the old Teutonic knights, and belonged to the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. The "hollow penny" is a silver coin with a raised rim around it, the centre displays the arms of the grand master of the order for the time being. There were twenty-one different sorts among the coins found.

Mr. F. S. Ernul, of this county, whose farm is situated near Streets' Ferry, showed us on Saturday last a fine bunch of Concord grapes which were not only nearly ripe but are the second growth of the season. Mr. Ernul states that this second crop, if no frost appears in the meantime, will fully mature and ripen in the present week. He also informs us that in the event we have no frost within two weeks from this time, he will produce his second growth of scuppernong grapes.—New Bernian.

We learn from a gentleman who has just returned from a visit to the Silver Valley Mine, nineteen miles south of this place, owned by a Baltimore company, which about two months ago struck a rich argentiferious ore deposit, and have since taken out over 9,000 tons that is worth $180 per ton in silver, gold, lead and zinc. The vein is from twelve to fifteen feet wide. A tunnel 100 feet in length at the 100 feet level shows solid ore on every side.—High Point Mercury.

The Judge Pearson homestead in Yadkin county is offered for sale. This is classic ground for the legal fraternity. Many of the best lawyers in the State read law in what was then familiarly called "Log Town."—Salem Press.

A standing joke: inviting a hundred people to a party in a house where there only fifty chairs.

C. R. Harding, son of Rev. Dr. E. H. Harding of this city, is one of the students at the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, the foremost educational institution in this country. North Carolina has four students there, a greater number than from any of the Southern States.—Charlotte Observer.

A very interesting archæological discovery is reported from Greece. It is no less than the finding of some of the bodies of the Theban Holy Band, who, three hundred strong, were annihilated by the Macedonians at Cheronea 338 before the Christian era. The bodies of the dead heroes are admirably preserved, and ranged in parallel rows of forty each, the wounds which proved fatal to the gallant Thebans being clearly discernable in every case. The bodies were found about thirteen feet under ground, beneath the ruins of the colossal memorial Lion of Cheronea.

For gilt frames boil three or four onions in a pint of water, then with a clean paint brush wash them over, and the flies will not alight on them. No injury will result to the frames. This renders unnecessary the unsightly drapings of gauze.

At "Fort Defiance," the old family residence in Caldwell county of the Lenoirs, is still preserved the sword of General Wm. Lenoir which he captured at the battle of King's Mountain. This sword is of highly tempered steel, and has upon its keen blade an inscription in Spanish which, translated, reads, "Never draw me without reason"—"Never sheath me without honor."—Lenoir Topic.

The exploring party under Lieutenant Fred Schwatka, that left New York June 19, 1878, in hope of recovering the records of Sir John Franklin's Artic expedition, reached New Bedford Sept. 23. They found no records, but learned the fate of his men and buried the remains of many of them. They made a sledge journey of over eleven months, the only one that has covered an entire Arctic winter. During sixteen days the thermometer indicated 100 degrees below the freezing point.

Dr. Deems states that he is often aked what kind of people the Church of the Strangers is composed of. His reply, as given in the Sunday Magazine is: 1st, some who pray but not known to pay; 2d, some who pay but not known to pray; 3d, some who, to all human appearances, neither pray nor pay; 4th, those who both pay and pray, and the last of these are the best.

The late Judge W—, on a visit to Niagara, when the car was in use on the inclined plane, raised and lowered by steam power, went into the starting-house to witness the descent, too timid to go himself. After the car started, fully impressed with the danger, he turned to the man in charge and said: "Suppose, sir, the rope should break?" The man, with a serious countenance and a single eye on business, replied, "Oh, they all paid before they went."

FOR $5 TWENTY-ONE NUMBERS of SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY.

The magnificently illustrated November number of SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY, the Decennial Issue, appears in a new cover, and contains the first chapters of PETER THE GREAT AS RULER AND REFORMER, by Eugene Schuyler, the beginning of a capital serial novel, articles on GLADSTONE (with full-page portrait), ELIHU VEDDER, MILLET, ARTEMUS WARD and WALT WHITMAN, with many other papers of unusual interest, among them the first published explanation of HELLER'S FAMOUS SECOND-SIGHT TRICK.

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking two green stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold up in twenty-four hours. Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

The brief life of this dear child was full of hope and happiness—the light and joy of the household. But the tender Shepherd came and took him in His arms, and has transplanted him to the Paradise above, there to bloom and bear fruit to the glory of God forever.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased God in His All-wise providence to remove from our midst our worthy and esteemed brother, S. D. Ferrell,

Resolved, 1. That in his death the Church has lost a good man and an earnest laborer for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.

Resolved, 2. That while we recognize the hand of God in his removal, we bow in humble submission to His will, and take the warning He has given, to "be also ready, with our lamps trimmed and burning; for we know neither the day nor the hour when we must depart.

Resolved, 3. That we extend our hearty sympathy to the bereaved family, and present them with a copy of the preamble and resolutions; spread them upon our session book, and send them to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

By order of Session of White Hall Church.

K. McDONALD,
Moderator of Session.

IN MEMORIAM OF WM. J. WALKER.

WHEREAS, God in His all-wise providence has removed from us our friend and brother, William J. Walker, and as we trust, to be with Himself in glory, and whereas, the community in which he lived has lost a most useful citizen and neighbor—his wife and child an affectionate husband and father—the church a beloved member—and the session of the church a most valuable and useful member. Therefore be it Resolved, 1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, feeling that our loss is his gain, and that this bereavement was sent for the good of all who mourn his absence.

Resolved, 2. That God has taken from us, in the prime of life, one who adorned his profession by a holy walk and Godly conversation; who took the deepest interest in the Lord's household, and to the time of his death a very valuable and useful officebearer in the Cross Roads church—always consistent, zealous and active.

Resolved, 3. That we deeply sympathize with his family in their sad bereavement, and commend them to our Heavenly Father's love and care, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to his wife and also to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

By order of the Session.

C. N. MORROW, Moderator.

MARRIED.

No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

At the residence of the bride's father, R P. Richardson, Esq., of Reidsville, N. C., October 19th, 1880, by Rev D Irvin Craig, Mr. E. M. REDD, of Danville Va., to Miss ANNA J. RICHARDSON, of Reidsville Rockingham county, N. C.

In the Presbyterian church, Glasgow, Ky., on the morning of 21st October, 1880, by Rev. J. H. Morrison, Rev. C. W. ROBINSON, the pastor, to Miss NELLIE ROGERS, all of Glasgow.

In Lenoir county, at the residence of J. C. Wooten, Esq., the father of the bride, by the Rev. C. M. Payne, Rev. G. W. MacMILLAN to Miss EMMA WOOTEN.

In the Presbyterian church, Goldsboro, N. C., October 20th, 1880, by Rev R. B. McAlpine, Mr. W. P. GRANGER and Miss JULIET BAIN.

In Hempstead county, Arkansas, on April 22d, by Rev. R. E. Lee, at the residence of Mr. G. A. Allen, the father of the bride, Miss ADELAIDE M. ALLEN to Mr. JAMES A. McCOY, of Franklin, N. C.

At the same place, by Rev. R. E. Lee, on June 3d, Mr. JOSEPH HALL to Miss SARAH S. MINNIS. All of Arkansas.

DOCTOR'S BILLS.—The man whose Blood and Liver is in good condition is all right even in the midst of epidemics. This has been often noticed in the life of every one. If all would only avail themselves of the advantages of restoring and maintaining the health of the body, there would be fewer doctor's bills and much less sorrow. The one thing needful, and the one recommended above all others, is found in Simmons Liver Regulator. The testimonials are counted by the thousands, and its merits are undoubted.

"Having passed through the siege of YELLOW FEVER, in 1874, in Savannah, and not having any physician to attend to my family, I resorted to the Regulator, and found it to be a perfect cure and preventive if taken in time. I had two children down with the Fever, used nothing but Simmons Liver Regulator, and am happy to say it cured them. It will cure and keep off Fever if taken in time."

NASAL CATARRH!

All cases promptly and permanently cured by
Dr. S. W. BEALL,
Homeopathic Catarrhal Specialist,
A reputable Physician of 30 years' practice.

Not a Douche, Not an Inhaler, Not a Snuff.

Chronic Nasal Catarrh has never been cured by local treatment alone. Catarrh being constitutional requires constitutional treatment to eradicate it from the system.

In connection with Dr. Beall's Nasal Catarrh Specific, a course of treatment is furnished each patient as indicated by the symptoms. Also an Atomizer with cleansing solutions to be locally applied in the form of a spray. Patients at a distance treated by the aid of a carefully prepared diagnostic sheet. No single box or bottle of medicine is applicable to all cases.

Dr. Beall has cured hundreds of cases in its worst form, and patients now being treated in all parts of the United States report rapid improvement. Treatment is pleasant and directions easily followed.

The following is a specimen of the testimonials constantly being received:

To the Public—Statement of A. W. Emery, of the firm of Emery & Harter, Troy, Ohio.

For a number of years I was afflicted with Nasal Catarrh, affecting seriously both my head and throat. The discharges from the nose were streaked with blood, and had a very offensive smell. After a course of treatment from Dr. Beall, I am entirely cured.

A. W. EMERY.

Extract from a Home Endorsement.

"Dr. Beall offers to the public no quack nostrum, and parties can rest assured that humbuggery has no place in the treatment proposed.

FOR THE FAMILY

The Deserted House.

There by the roadside stands a queer old house,
Deserted it has been for many years;
And when one enters first, one has strange fears
Of what may be inside. But not a mouse
Raises its tiny head, or hides, afraid;
And the sole sound through the deep stillness heard
Is the shrill chirping of a mother-bird,
Who right above the door her nest has made.
While through bare, lonely rooms my way I wend,
I feel a kind of pity for the thing
Left thus alone, like some fallen king
Deserted both by enemy and friend.
But life is short; so gently close the gate,
And leave the house to mercy and to fate.

How They Did It.

I believe it is the very best thing I have heard this year.

Of course John, and Neal, and Meg must have their dimes for the mission boy. If the papas slipped the coin into the little hands when the deacons came round it was not satisfactory, not a bit.

"I want to put in my own centses; I want to make 'em myself; I don't want papa's," said stout red-haired Rob. and he was a brave little man.

It came to pass that to the school where these childr. n belonged there came a proposition from certain benevolent gentlemen:

"For two Saturdays we will employ all the cotton pickers who will come from the school—fifty cents per hundred, mind. cash down."

Over one department of this school there presided a young lady, wise and beloved. Somehow she had gotten mixed up or misplaced, or something, for her church began with a B instead of a P. But she found herself in good company, and it was she who offered to lead this band of workers to the cotton-fields, all honor to her. But for this good example I half believe Nettie and Sue would have excused themselves, for they had just attained the dignity of kilts and broad belts, and were, moreover, a little concerned on the question of complexions

In the early sunlight of a September morning the clans gathered for the pay. The dresses donned for the occasion were a trifle faded, and the sun-bonnets had lengthened perceptibly; the trousers seemed shorter than yesterday, and the pockets, oh! ask the pantry shelves about those pockets. Through all the bright forenoon they raced and shouted along the whitening rows, thirty-seven happy children.

"We are jest making this cotton git," said John confidentially to quiet Nan on the next row.

"Oh, Miss Lida said sl—, sl—, what you call it?—slang, was not genteel, and 'git' is slang."

John subsided. It was Will who had the honor of blowing the dinner horn down by the spring, where bright buckets and little split baskets were grouped together in delightful profusion and confusion I beg you not to inquire of me about that particular dinner. I don't want to think of it, for there comes the painful remembrance that I was not there.

Dick finished sooner than was his habit. I am going to tell you a little secret about Dick (I am sure you will keep it). He had a tiny sister only five years old. She—wee, pretty thing—would not be left behind; she told everybody how she would pick twenty-five nineteen pounds and get money enough to buy a jumping-jack for poor Mrs. Siam's baby. Somehow when Hattie took hold of her basket again it had grown wonderfully heavy, so heavy that Dick must lift it at every stage. You understand!

Well, the day came to an end by and by, and this end did not seem quite so merry as the other, for little hands and feet were weary. It is often so in this world; the end is less cheery than the beginning. At the end came the reckoning, and, little children, do you ever think of it—of ever day's work here? God keeps the reckoning up above. Oh! if we all remembered that, surely your day's task and mine were better done.

The cotton was weighed, the money was counted and these little children gave their own "ten centses" to the mission fund. Wee Hattie was the gayest of the group, unless I except Dick.

The cotton picking for the season is not over yet, and this which the little children in Mecklenburg did seemed so good a thing I felt that I must tell it to the little folks who read the N. C. P. I thought may be some of them would like to try the plan. I want to hear of it if they do. C. E.

"Wanted—A Boy."

Wanted— A boy to run errands and make himself generally useful.

Mr. Peppergrass came out, with his cap on the back of his head and his spectacles pushed high up on his forehead, to wafer this written notice on the side of his store. And five minutes afterward, (it might have been less or it might have been more) a crowd of eager lads assembled around it, standing on tip-toe to read every word.

Johnny Jarvis had just been discharged from his place as cash-boy in a dry-goods store, because business was dull and customers few.

He was a fine tall boy of twelve, with bright black eyes and a laughing mouth, and he didn't at all like having nothing to do.

Charlie Warner wanted a situation because there were a good many little Warner's, and nothing to feed them with since their father died.

Louis Brown had been out of regular employment ever since the china factory closed in the fall.

For these little fellows belonged to the innumerable army of boys who cannot play and enjoy the bright hours as they go by, but must work and drudge, and count every day lost that does not bring in its corresponding wages.

Children, did you ever think how hard the world was on these poor little toilers?

It was not long before Mr. Peppergrass' store was full of boys who wanted to "run errands and make themselves generally useful."

Big boys and little boys, tall boys and short boys, well-dressed boys and shabby boys—boys who leaned up against the flour and potato barrels, as if they had left their back-bones at home; boys who stood straight up—boys who took off their caps, and boys who kept them on. And still they kept coming.

"Hold on!" said Mr. Peppergrass. "This will do!"

So he took down the notice and bolted the store-door.

"Now, I will proced to business," said Mr. Peppergrass, rumpling up his hair and adjusting his spectacles so as to make his keen gray eyes sharper han ever.

A few penetrating glances, half a dozen questions and the number of boys was speedily reduced to our three little friends—Johnny Jarvis, Carrie Warner and Louis Brown.

They are all three willing and anxious to work; all three brought good recommendations, had honest faces, wanted to enter on the situation at once, and wrote neat, round hands.

"Humph! humph!" said Mr. Peppergrass, with his hands locked under his coat-tails behind. "There's three of you, and I can't find work for three boys!"

The little lads said never a word, but looked eagerly at the grocer, each one hoping that he might be the boy selected to "run errands and make himself generally useful."

Mr. Peppergrass stared hard at the spice-boxes and preserve bottles in the window, frowned at the cracker-boxes, and finally made up his mind.

"Brown!" said he.

"Sir!" said Louis Brown.

"I'll try you on a few sums. I want my boy to understand the first principles of arithmetic!"

"I am good at figures, sir!" cried Louis.

"Are you?" said Mr. Peppergrass. "Very well; I'll give you a trial."

He wrote down a labyrinth of figures on a slate, and then opened the door of a little room which communicated with the store.

"Sit down here, Brown, and work out these sums," said he. "I'll come to you in a few minutes."

Johnny Jarvis and Charlie Warner looked blankly at each other, then at the grocer.

"Please, sir, what are we to do?" said they.

"You are to wait," said Mr. Peppergrass, shortly. "Your turns will come in due time."

The sums were not especially hard, and Louis Brown was quick at figures. He soon dispatched his task and began to look around.

It was a stuffy, close-smelling little room, with one window close up to the ceiling, and a curious, old-fashioned book-case or desk with glass doors, lined with faded red silk, in the corner.

"I do wonder what Mr. Peppergrass keeps there?" said Louis, to himself; and after he had wondered a little while, he got up and went softly toward the desk. "The key is in the lock," said he;" "there can't be any harm in looking. Perhaps there are story books—or maybe curious shell and stones—or—"

As these thoughts crossed his mind, he opened the silk-lined door. Buz-z-zz—out flew a beautiful pearl-colored dove.

Louis stood aghast. In vain were his efforts to capture the little creature. It fluttered from the top of the book-case to a pile of boxes beyond, and thence to the top mouldings of the windows, as if it enjoyed the chase; and in the midst of it all, in came Mr. Peppergrass.

"Eh? What?" said he. "How did this happen?"

"Please, sir," said Louis, hanging his head, "the bird got out, and I was trying to catch it again."

"Got out did it?" said Mr. Peppergrass, "It must be a very ingenious bird, to be able to open the desk from the outside! You may go, boy. I'm quite certain that you won't suit me I don't approve of meddlers."

So saying he opened a door which led directly out into the back street, and dismissed poor Louis Brown without further ceremony.

"Now, Pearlie," said he to the little dove, who perched on his shoulder t once, "you can go back to your nest. You have helped me out of the difficulty this time."

So he let the little creature fly out into the yard, where it belonged.

Charlie Warner was the next one ushered in to the stuffy, smelling room. He, too, speedily finished his sums, and began to look around him for something to occupy his attention.

"Oh, my! What a lot of boxes," said he, "piled up one above another, like a Tower of Babel? What can Mr. Peppergrass keep in all of them?"

Charlie listened. No advancing footsteps were near. He looked cautiously about him, but he saw nothing. Then he rose from his chair, and crept toward the mysterious pile of boxes. They were of all shapes, rather small, and fitted with loose, wooden covers.

Charlie lifted the lid of one. It was full of English walnuts.

"Hello!" thought Charlie. "I'm in luck! Old Peppergrass will never miss two or three of these,' and he pocketed a handful.

The next box was full of beautiful Malaga raisins. Charlie nipped two or three bloomy, wrinkled fellows off the stem, and ate them. He was fond of raisins.

"What next?" he said, tugging at the covers of the third box, which seemed to fit a little closer.

All of a sudden, however it flew off with a jerk, filling the air with Cayenne pepper, and setting poor Charlie to sneezing as if he meant to sneeze his head off.

Mr Peppergrass bustled in.

"Ah?" said he. "I see! But you needn't have been in such a hurry to examine my stock, young man. I haven't engaged you yet, and I don't intend to."

And poor Charlie sneaked away through the back door, which Mr. Peppergrass held politely open for him, feeling that his curiosity had ruined his cause.

It was some time before the Cayenne pepper was sufficiently cleared from the atmosphere for Johnny Jarvis to take his turn at the sums in decimal fractions, but he worked them patiently out, and then sat looking around him as the others had done. But he was too honorable to dream of meddling. He, too, wondered what was in the boxes, but he didn't do anything but wonder. He heard a mysterious rustling behind the faded silk-door of the old book-case, where Mr. Peppergrass had shut up his pet kitten, but he never thought of opening it to see what it all meant.

He saw a glass jar of mixed candies on the mantle, (sly Mr. Peppergrass had counted every one, besides covering it with a dusty lid, so that the least finger-mark would have been quite visible) but he sat there quite still, until Mr. Peppergrass bounced into the room.

The old grocer looked at the candy jar, he glanced at the unmolested boxes, and opening the desk saw the kitten fast asleep in the corner.

"Ah!" said Mr. Peppergrass, with a long breath. "Yes, exactly! You are the boy I want. Come right back into the store, and I'll set you to work weighing out tea and coffee."

And that was the way Mr. Peppergrass suited himself with a boy.—Golden Days.

SEA-WEED.

I do not believe that many of us remember, in stepping upon stones, bricks or boards over which has gathered a coating of green, that we are stepping upon myriads of tiny plants, so tiny that we need the microscope to help us in distinguishing one from another, so tiny that myriads of them unite to tinge a single stone with green. In positions where there is a great deal of moisture and little sunshine these minute plants flourish most rankly, and appear like green slime upon the surface where they are growing. We can each, probably, remember having slipped upon some brick or stone where this slimy substance had collected, for city and country are haunted in moist places by this lowest form of vegetable life. These tiny plants are not held together by roots, and so separate from each other if touched, for which reason they are called brittleworts. The belong to the order, or great vegetable tribe, of the algæ, of which there are so many varieties.

There are plants of this order which spring to life on the surface of the water and are called conferveæ, from the color which they impart to it. The colors of this variety are sometimes very beautiful, giving the water a deep violet or rose-colored hue, and the Red Sea is said to have been so called from the conferveæ which tint its waters. Another variety of these plants which are found in stagnant water of meadows form in such immense numbers that they become dense, like cloth, sometimes to the depth of an inch, and are known as water flannel, being so much like close flannel in appearance. The larger conferveæ, called laver, are sometimes used for food, and when pickled are much esteemed by some.

Sea-wrack is another form of algæ, but a little removed in the scale of vegetation from the brittlewort and conferveæ, but its known use makes it of very much importance to man. From these leathery, uninviting looking weeds, iodine, the very useful medicine, is made, and in certain countries where a swelling in the neck known as goitre is common the stems of the sea-wrack are chewed by the inhabitants, and are known by the name of goitre-sticks.

We are all familiar with these dark, tangled weeds, which may be found along any beach, with their little air-bladders, which are so useful to them in supporting them upon the water. Indeed, if it were not for these air bladders the sea-wracks would sink to the bottom of the seas instead of floating upon their surface, for they are sometimes of great weight in tropical climates, being several hundred feet long and of considerable height, having stems the thickness of a man's thigh, and branches and drooping stems which support innumerable forms of animal life such as corals, crabs, worms of different kinds, together with mosses and weeds of the sea, and being besides a place of deposit for innumerable eggs of various creatures.

In Scotland the tender parts of the sea-wracks known as tangles are used as food, and when cooked are considered choice diet for cattle. The stems of a very hard, horny variety of the sea-wracks are used as knife-handles. They are cut in short pieces, and while still moist or green the blade is forced in at one end; when the handle dries it clings firmly to the knife-blade. Being gnarled and horny it resemble's buck's horn, and when tipped with metal and fully finished forms a neat, inexpensive knife handle.

A little higher up the scale of vegetable life we find the pretty rose-tangles, of such lovely tints, seeming entirely too delicate to inhabit the seas. Of these dulse is an important variety to the Scotch and Irish, who, besides using it as food, both in its raw state and cooked in milk, find it a substitute for tobacco. Carrageen moss is another kind of rose-tangle, from which a nourishing jelly is made. The Chinese use one variety of rose-tangle as a varnish for their paper lanterns, and as a chief ingredient for other glossing preparations, and 27,000 pounds are annually brought to Canton and sold for six pice or eighteen pice per pound.

What imagery of beautiful form and coloring may not come before us in thinking of the depths of the seas, where, beneath the roar and restlessness of the turbulent waters, these lower forms of vegetable and animal life sleep, with their changeful forms and dyes, undisturbed in their deep, still waters by the fury of upper ocean.—Christian Union.

New Use of the Cotton Plant

Mr. John Kirkpatrick of this county called at our office a few ago with a strong piece of twine about the size used for tieing up parcels of goods. This twine was made from the fibre of the cotton stalk bark. The stalk was immersed in water and the woody portion thus rotted out, leaving the fibre. Its strength is undeniable if this string can be taken as a fair sample. The stalks should be gathered for this purpose before frost falls on the plants.

Much has been said about jute and its adaptability to our soil and climate. Would not the cotton stalk answer in its place? Mr. K. is of opinion that ropes, strings and all sorts of bagging can be successfully manufactured from the cotton bark fibre, and we see no reason to doubt it.

The variety of the uses of the cotton plant is something marvelous: cloth from the wool, oil from the seed, paper from the hulls, oil cake from the kernels, bagging from the fibre, and great quantities of valuable manure for the improvement of farms—these are to be the results of this, the most valuable plant ever given by nature to man.—Fayetteville Examiner.

A Jewish Wedding.

It was when studying with a friend at Tangiers, on a brief visit from Gibraltar to the north coast of Africa, that I saw the ceremony of a Jewish wedding. One of the sons of a Jewish consul was about to be married to a daughter of a Hebrew banker and silversmith. My friend was invited to attend and the invitation was kindly extended to me and two English officers who had crossed over with me from Gibraltar, and who were also the guests of my host. The marriage took place in an open courtyard in front of the banker's home before a large attendance of Jews and Christians. The Jews do not think it necessary to be married in a synagogue, for, in their opinion, any place where prayer is offered up is by that act consecrated. At the east end of the quadrangle, and facing the visitors, was a large white and yellow silk canopy, supported at each of its four corners by long poles which were held by four hrozzed young Hebrews. Beneath the canopy was a table on which were a massive silver goblet and some empty wine-glasses. At the side of this table was a rabbi, with his white silk talith over his head, awaiting the arrival of the bride and bridegroom. He had not long to remain expectant, for the bridegroom, attended by his father, very shortly entered the courtyard, and took his stand upon the canopy, all around crying out: "Blessed is he that cometh!" Soon after his arrival, the bride appeared through the parting crowd of spectators, and was led under the canopy, and then three times conducted round her future husband, thereby fulfilling the command of Jeremiah: "The woman shall compass a man." The bridegroom after this was escorted by his bride around the outside of the canopy; whilst the Jewish guests threw grains of corn upon them, saying: "Be fruitful and multiply." "He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the finest wheat."

The couple now entered again under the canopy, and stood facing each other, opposite the rabbi. The marriage ceremony then commenced. The rabbi filled one of the empty glasses with wine from the silver goblet, and taking it in his hand, amid profound silence gave the blessing. The engaged couple then tasted the wine, and immediately afterward the bridegroom put a ring on the bride's finger, repeating the Hebrew after the rabbi: "Behold thou art he trothed unto me with this ring, according to the rites of Moses and Israel." And now the tedious proceeding of reading the Kethuvah, or marriage contract, took place. It was written in Chaldee, and was read aloud in that language; and as it was a tongue certainly "not understood by the people," and the burning rays of an African sun were almost vertical, we were all greatly relieved when this most uninteresting performance was over. The rabbi, having ended, took a glass of wine, stood in front of the united pair, and pronounced the seven blessings.

These blessings uttered, the new husband and wife tasted the second glass of wine, and then an empty glass was placed on the floor, upon which the husband stamped, crushing it to atoms. All now cried out, "Mazal tow"—"Good luck!"—and the marriage ceremony was over. The crushing of the glass is to remind man that God can as easily crush him; and that, therefore, man should direct his thoughts not only to earthly things, but to those above.—Sunday Magazine.

MRS. JOSEPH McLAURIN,
Residence, Market St., between 8th and 9th.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It arouses and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease, which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

HER WORK WAS DONE.

Aged fourscore and seven well rounded years
Were drawing to a close. Her work was done.
The very house missed her familiar step;
The antique clock, companion of her life,
Ticked slowly in its long accustomed place:
Her saintly face was turned to greet the first
Pale beams of dawning day; she gently raised
Her head, and resting it upon her hand,
The rosy lips of morn kissed lightly then
Her aged brow and silver hair. "The morn
Is beautiful," she said, then closed her eyes
And sank to rest. Grandmother dear was dead.
And yet the clock ticked on—the sun still shone.

SHALL THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA BE DIVIDED?

The Synod of North Carolina is the largest in the Southern Church that of Virginia alone excepted. And if the Virginia Synod were confined strictly to the territory of Virginia its membership would exceed ours by only about 500. The North Carolina Synod comprises 114 ministers, 9 licentiates, and 226 churches. It embraces within its territory the whole State of North Carolina. The meetings of a body covering so large an area must necessarily be attended with great expense, especially to the churches in its extreme Eastern and Western limits. The division of Synod is then obviously desirable if practicable. There is one difficulty in the way of division, but we think this is rather apparent than real. The difficulty is this, Presbyterianism is comparatively weak in the Eastern part of the State. There are twenty counties in the east which have not a Presbyterian church in them, there are only four churches east of Goldsboro, and two of these are new churches, one of them organized only this year. The fact, however, is not an insurmountable obstacle to division. It only shows that in order to make any thing like an equal division of Synod as to ecclesiastical and ministerial strength, the line which divides it must be far west of the line which divides it nearly as to territory. The first and main reason for dividing the Synod is that we may save expenses. This would not be a reason of much weight if it could be shown that the interests of the churches are better subserved by retaining the Synod as it is than by dividing it. The churches are certainly able to bear the present expenses, and, if essential to their best interests, ought to continue to bear them, but if it can be shown that these interests would be as well if not better subserved by two Synods than by one then the argument from expense becomes a weighty one. In other words, if the division of Synod shall enable the churches within its bounds to maintain Presbyterial government according to the present constitution, at an annual expense of no less than at present, then the saving of at least $800 annually becomes a strong argument for division. That at least $800 annually would be saved in the item of traveling expenses of delegates must be evident to any one who will attentively consider the subject. Suppose the Synod is to have a meeting in Raleigh. The expenses of that meeting, if fully represented, would be the traveling expenses in going and returning, of all the ministers and one ruling elder from every church within its bounds. The delegates must all go to Raleigh. But suppose the Synod is divided and the Eastern Synod meets at Raleigh and the Western at Greensboro. All the delegates living in the Western Synod do not have to go to Raleigh but to Greensboro: the delegates then living at Greensboro and north, south and west of Raleigh save all the expenses of going from Greensboro to Raleigh and returning. The distance between Raleigh and Greensboro is 90 miles, the expenses of a delegate at 6 cents per mile the round trip i. e. three cents each way, is $4.86. West of Greensboro lie two entire presbyteries aggregating 61 ministers and 55 churches, besides 27 delegates from a large making in all 171; the expenses of these from Greedsboro to Raleigh and return amounts to the sum of $831.06. This would be spared if these delegates met in Greensboro instead of Raleigh. Now we say that if presbyterial government can be maintained as efficiently within the bounds of the State by two Synods as by one we ought to divide. We ought to save this money to the churches. For what right have we to waste the money of the churches? The division would form two Synods, having each 57 ministers and 113 churches. When we look over the Southern Church these members do not seem at all significant. The Synod of Alabama is smaller; likewise that of Arkansas; Memphis has only 60 ministers, Nashville 64, Missouri and Mississippi 79; and these constitute six [illegible] of the twelve Synods in the Southern [illegible]urch. Our constitution does not seem to contemplate that Synods shall be very large. It makes a quorum consist of only seven ministers and as many elders as shall be present. This shows that the actual functions of a Synod can be discharged by as few as eight persons. A Synod of 57 ministers and 173 churches can perform these functions as well as one of 114 ministers and 226 churches. A great part of the work of Synod is done by committees or the chairmen of committees. In many cases the majority of the Synod vote upon the simple recommendation of the committee, and of others who are better acquainted with the matters in hand. The majority of the Synod take no active part whatever in its proceedings, and in such cases the additional number of delegates is of no practical use or advantage. Moreover in a smaller Synod we could have our meetings oftener with the churches and in that way become better acquainted with them and give them the benefit of our presence and our preaching. If we were to rotate in our churches we should meet in each about once every two hundred and twenty-six years, if we were divided we could meet in each about once in every one hundred and thirteen years. We could meet with much weaker churches than at present and thus help the very churches which need help most. For the last forty years Synod has rotated around some half dozen places, and so it must continue; 114 ministers, 9 licentiates and 226 churches foot up 349 delegates, and there are very few churches that can entertain so large a body. Such are some of the reasons for division, we will conclude the article by considering some of the which might possibly be brought against the movement. 1. It may be said that our first and main argument, i. e. the expense, is somewhat weakened by the fact that those 171 delegates living west of Greensboro were never known to attend Synod and therefore never spend that $831.06; if never spent, of course it will never be saved; indeed that the last four meetings of Synod (at Fayettoville, Charlotte, Goldsboro and Statesville) do not average in size eighty-nine delegates, the whole body being actually little more than half the 171 delegates upon whose attendance our economy is based. Still we maintain this ought not to affect the argument. The calculation is based upon a full representation. It is known that the aggregate amounts are greater than are ever realized, but it is impossible to tell what proportion of the Synod will be present during any given year, and also, while the aggregate may be less the difference between the expense of one Synod and that of two will continue about the same. Besides, the same objection might be urged against the argument for the division of Orange Presbytery! This is "the first and main" argument upon which the overture is based. And yet it is a known fact that not one half of the sixty churches ever send delegates, and as for those twenty-seven living at Greensboro or west of that place, and upon whose attendance that $200 or $300 expense is based, they were not even at Alamance church (six miles from Greensboro), and they will never attend a meeting of presbytery at Raleigh between this time and the general resurrection; and hence never spend that $300, and equally hence that $300 never spent will never be saved, but still they would spend it if they did attend and it is impossible to tell how many will go.

2. It may be said that the argument based upon the size of Synod is subject to the same objection, viz: that practically a very small proportion of the 226 churches ever send delegates, and a Synod of North Carolina with 349 members would be a marvel; that it never reaches half that size. To this we make the same answer as above, "the aggregate amount, &c., &c." Besides if any one says that not one half of the churches expect or desire Synod to meet with them, none could entertain the Synod if it were divided or would be inaccessible, &c., we ask, how does he know that such is the case, and moreover, to return to Orange Presbytery, could even a divided presbytery reach and benefit more than half of these thirty churches placed under its care?

3. It may be said that we have only five presbyteries. We can easily make more. Concord has thirty-three ministers, four more than Orange, let Concord practice economy and divide. Mecklenburg has twenty-eight, practically more than Orange for two of Orange's twenty-nine are excused from attendance on account of age and infirmity and three others are virtually excused, making five. Let Mecklenburg also practice economy and divide. We would then have eight presbyteries, just even four apiece, and all would be as lovely as a summer's dream. Possibly some one might say yes but perhaps these two presbyteries may not wish to divide. We reply this objection is more apparent than real, witness Orange, ask any member of Orange if there was not a very decided opposition made to the division; ask him if it was not the hardest fight Orange has seen for ten years; ask him if a large minority, very nearly half the delegates present did not oppose the division until it was evident that it could be carried over their opposition; ask him if a single member of this portion to be set off entered into the proposition heartily and willingly. Yet the overture was carried by a majority, such as it was, and will be presented to the Synod next week, hence we maintain that strenuous opposition ought not to hinder this beautiful scheme, and so economical too; $300 saved in Orange; $200 say, in each of the other two, and $800 in the matter of Synodical expenses, $1,500 i. e. if all the delegates were to attend. The calculation is made upon the basis of a full representation, as of course, we cannot tell what proportion would attend during any given year.

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS HOME.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., October, 1880.

When people become old and lazy it is a good thing to catch young folks and put 'em in harness in your place, and tell 'em to go along; but it is especially good when you can get them into harness without their being aware of it. Perhaps your readers won't object to see from time to time what a young lady writes from two or three great cities this present autumn. If neither very wise nor very witty, her letters have at least the charm of youth and ingenuousness. C. P. S.

WASHINGTON CITY, 8th, Sept. 1880.

What a magnificent city Washington is! I walked up Massachusetts avenue this morning. What noble streets,—the sidewalks are lined with fine old aspen and maple trees. The houses so handsome and stately, the yards and parks filled with shrubbery, roses, geraniums, vines—everything beautiful. The beds of foliage plants are particularly striking. The centre of a leaf, for instance, a bright yellow star filled in with dark crimson, and bordered with light green or white. The effect of a mass of them is simply gorgeous. So many fine buildings have gone up since I was here. My eyes are strained with looking. In Franklin square last evening, every body appeared to be out strolling and enjoying it. Ladies dressed just about as we do in the evenings at home, bareheaded, and with little children running around. The pretty rustic seats filled, the grass so trimly cut, the grand walks so neat, the flowers and fountains and trees so fresh—it was all so lovely. It is a great treat for a little "country" like me just to walk down a great busy, bustling rushing city street and see. The bookstores! the jewellry stores! the fall opening of millinery and drygoods; and the thousand and one new and rare and costly things at every turn. I seem to be getting new ideas all the time.

10th. We have been to see the new White House set of china. It cost the White House $3000, and cost the manufacturer $15,000. But then he can sell as many sets as he pleases. There are four hundred pieces in the set, and each piece is hand-painted with a different picture—landscape or flowers, or a scene of some sort, all American; illustrating our scenery, or history or products, or something natural. For instance on one dish was painted a prarie on fire in the distance,—in the foreground a beautiful prarie hen taking wing. On another was Niagara Falls in the back-ground; in the foreground an Indian stretched out on the ground beside a deer he had just shot. Some of the scenes appear to have been suggested by Cooper's novels. On one plate was a branch of our ivy—kalmia. (Some call it "calico-bush" you know.) Looks as if it had just dropped off the tree. On another was a pine branch with cones. I feel sure some one of the artists have been in North Carolina, for there are our very weeds to the life,—verbesina—maywood, &c., and one scene was especially home-like—a night scene, a big coon or 'possum up in a tree, men and dogs and torches below.

I think the china stores are about as tempting as any others. A new lot of ware just from Paris caused me to break the tenth commandment all to pieces. Indeed I don't know if it isn't the want of money that is the root of all evil. In one case I saw an exquisite flower vase that was simply a bunch of delicate pink roses caught together in some mysterious manner to form the vase. It was so lovely, and so small, I thought I might venture to buy that. I inquired the price. The shopman said very politely $15. So I retired. Such exquisite little dishes to hold eggs, so much new-fashioned table ware, and such dainty devices. I thought of you at every step. But when don't I think of you and wish for you to share my pleasures? I want to show you the view from the front windows of my bedroom; I look over acres of house-tops and spires and domes, the Capitol, the Smithsonian and many elegant churches to the Potomac in the distance, and across it large public buildings far away. In the morning it is a never ending delight to look out, and at all times in the night when it is only a broad expanse of twinkling lights.

11th. The Capitol has had so much ornamental work done on it since I was here last, that it seems to me as if it were all new. The effect is so much greater. The frescoings, gildings, mouldings—the paintings, and ceilings are magnificent to behold, all along the ceilings of the halls leading past the Senate chamber and the House of Representatives are exquisite bunches of flowers on pannels, each different. There are superb mirrors in the reception rooms, finely covered marble mantels, pillows of parti-colored marbles, statues, richly designed doors, inlaid floors—well, it is all dazzling. And they are still adding to it all the time. Inside the rotunda, near the very top, figures and scenes are being painted that stand out as if they were statuary. The artist was seated on a little scaffolding high in the air. It looked fearful. The artist who began the painting, fell from that height last year. He caught on something and was not killed on the spot but the shock was too great, he died from the effects of it. N. and I climbed up 365 steps to the very top of the dome. The view was indescribable. I say again, what a most beautiful city Washington is! The wide avenues appear to radiate from the Capitol but I believe in reality they do not. The grounds are greatly improved. A very fine stone railing encloses them. The entrance gates are beautiful. The pillars for gas, six of them, at the main entrance, cost $7000 apiece.

From the Capitol we went to the Congressional gardens opposite. They are ablaze with tropical beauty. I wish Mrs. B. had some of the fern-trees. I stood under them and the great fronds drooped over me. The banana and palm leaves are as large as a small boat.

13th. I heard Dr. Cairns of Edinburgh, preach yesterday in Mr. Chester's Metropolitan church. Passing the Capitol grounds on our way, rich and gay with beautiful flowers, on one of the mounds among the geraniums, I saw some tall yellow flowers waving about and tossing their heads as boldly as any. And what do you think they were? Only our dear old North Carolina golden rods. When we entered the church they were singing "Come thou Fount." It sounded so familiar and so sweet, I felt like lifting up my voice then and there, and joining in before we were seated.

Dr. Cairns is a hale white-haired old gentleman with a noble English face, and a very peculiar accent and gesture. His text: "But His name shall endure forever." The exordium was very fine. Sermon divided into two heads—Christ's fitness to endure—and, His destiny to endure. Another was divided into man's ambition to be remembered after death—a characteristic of human nature.—Memory is due to greatness, or service, or suffering, Christ illustrating each of these.

Dr. Cairns had no notes, but his full rich voice flowed on without effort or hesitation in fine thoughts so presented and clothed in such words that a child could have understood, and been interested. That is the wonderful part of these great sermons,—their simplicity. After the sermon, we had communion.

Whenever and wherever I hear a minister in our Church rise and announce this service in our beautiful fashion, and say so grandly (for it is grand) "this is the Lord's table," and ask all who love Him to come to it, I always give thanks that I am a Presbyterian. Very few went out and a solemn stillness reigned through the church as the minister descended from the pulpit, and after reading that impressive warrant for the celebration, distributed the elements to six elders who carried them to the communicants. Not a sound was heard except every now and then Mr. Chester's voice repeating with much feeling some one of the precious promises: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow;" "Come unto me all that are weary."

I like such customs. Such words are more grateful to my feelings at such a time than anything any preacher could say of himself.

On our way home we went down North Carolina avenue which is a broad, fine street as yet few houses on it but plenty of jimpson and mayweed. Lincoln Park is at the end and will be very pretty some day. Fine young trees and fountains and rustic seats in it, and a beautiful view across the Potomac to the blue hills of Virginia. In the centre is a bronze statue of Lincoln giving emancipation papers to a negro who crouches chained at his feet.

IT NEVER PAYS.

It never pays to be a poor workman. If you are a young man, aim to do honest work, and, although your present employer may not be willing to pay any more for a well-made coat or a neatly finished boot than he would for a botch, don't be discouraged. If you are a carpenter, make the best joint you can; if you are a machinist, see that every bolt and rivet is as firm as if your life depended upon its properly fulfilling its duties. How carefully the aeronaut examines his balloon, the tight rope performer his rope, before he trusts his life to it. Would a shipbuilder take passage on a vessel of his own building if he knew that he had willfully neglected or slighted any essential part of her hull? Yet many a young mechanic has destroyed his own future and committed moral suicide by sending forth a poor piece of work. The old surgical professor's caution to a young medical student is not inapt here. Said he, "If you are ever called to set a broken leg, and your work is a failure, and the man becomes a cripple, you may be sure he will always come limping along just at the wrong time, when you are surrounded by your clients and friends. He is a walking advertisement of your incapacity."

Every manufacturer knows the value of a good reputation. There are names that will sell almost anything. Why do Burt's shoes bring a better price than those of other makers? Why does Squibb's ether bring a higher price than that of any one else? Why do Merrick's chemicals have their own price list? Because they are known to be honestly prepared.

The path of fame by honest merit is a slow and tedious one. A manufacturer who is so careful about his products that he has to put a higher price on them than his less conscientious neighbor can sell for, may be repaid at first by small sales and smaller profits. It takes a long time to build up a reputation by excellence, but once acquired its value cannot be estimated.—Canada Presbyterian.

"I GO A-FISHIN'."

Now, it seems to me that the first thing is to set ourselves to do it. 'Tis like everything else, it wants doin'. It won't do to be always talkin' about it, an' desirin' it, an prayin' that we may be useful. We must get up an' do it. Simon said, "I go a-fishin'." We talk of how very right and proper it is, an' how we desire to do it, an' we go prayin' that we may be stirred up to go a fishin'.

But Simon gets out his bait-box, an' his cross-lines, an' settlin' down he calls out to the rest of 'em, "I go a-fishin'." Then the rest, who, perhaps, had been talkin' about it, shoved off, too, an' said, "We also go with thee." An' that's the way in fishin' for souls. You must set about. Why, we stand in on the shore, loungin' about the quay, with our hands in our pockets, thinkin' that if the fish are to be caught, the Lord will send 'em to us. If we want 'em, we must go a fishin'. An' there's another thing I like about Simon, he didn't mind goin' alone.

I'm afraid a good many of us would have seen Simon goin' out in his boat an' never have said what the rest did. We would have kept our hands in our pockets and have said, "Quite right and proper; he's called to the work." Or we should have said, "There goes Simon again, what a gift he has got for it!" Pack o' nonsense! "A gift for it!" Why, he had a hook an' line, and a bit o' bait, an' so he went out to do the best he could. That was the gift for it, an' that was his callin', too. I want for every one of us to say "I go."—Daniel Quorm.

VALUE OF THE CATECHISM.

Dr. John Hall of New York, in an address, related the following incident illustrating the value of knowing the Catechism:

"When comparatively young I remember having heard a man of ability and popular talent disconrse to the people about the things of salvation. Among other things he told them that all that men wanted was that their mistakes should be corrected; that they were in ignorance; that the Spirit of God had nothing to do but to correct their ignorance; to show them that God really loved them, and when that was done the whole was done, and the moment men were thus enlightened the work of conversion was finished. It seemed to be a looser theology than was consistent with safety, and I remembered my Catechism definition of effectual calling, that 'effectual calling is the work of God's Spirit, whereby, convincing us of our sin and misery, enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Christ, and renewing our wills, he doth persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Christ as he is freely offered to us in the Gospel.'

"Ah! there it is—'persuade and enable.' The gentleman leaves out that second part; he says nothing about enabling, and though I was in other respects ignorant about theological matters from having that ready formula in my mind I detected the mistake, and was saved from erroneous teachings. Have you not seen the carpenter, when a dispute has arisen about a settlement, settle it once by drawing the rule from his pocket and applying it on the spot to the difficulty in question? That is exactly the great value of having young people taught some distinct formula that they can easily remember, and which may prove to them a protection and defence when they may possibly have neither the time nor the inclination to read heavy works in which errors are pointed out, and the truth plainly and fully presented."

SENSE OF GOD'S PRESENCE.

The sense of God's presence, or the vision of God by the inner eye of faith, as He has revealed Himself through Christ, mitigates our afflictions, and gives a new and distinctive element of enjoyment to our blessings. It is not a melancholy thing, which poisons every other experience. It is not like the sword of Damocles, a threatening thing, that keeps us from sitting down to the feast. Rather it is itself that which gives the feast its real glory, and the festival to us is twice a feast, because He is there. He makes the brightest element in our blessings; He gives to us the real joy of our prosperity. And when affliction comes He mitigates it with His sympathy and cheers us under it with His fellowship. He comes to us not as a spectre in the night, but as a father to wrap us in the mantle of His love. "Bane and blessing, pain and pleasure," alike are sanctified by His presence, and no darkness for us could be so dense as that which would envelop us if we were to be deprived of Him. It seems but a small matter to the materialist to say, with flippant thoughtlessness, "We know nothing of God." But his atheism is my orphanhood, and I cannot, I will not, let him rob me of my Father. One of the darkest nights of my life was when I lost my earth-father; yet by-and-by that night ended in day, because I "saw God, and did eat and drink." But to be deprived of God! To be driven into the dark negation, "No God! no God!" Ah! that were a still blacker night, with no succeeding day; and nothing can drive me into such a dreary region of darkness unrelieved! No! thanks be to the revelation of Jesus Christ, I have learned to know God as my Father, and His presence, unlike that of the Egyptian feasts, has no terror in it, for I "see Him, and can eat and drink."—Rev. Dr. Taylor.

PERMANENCE OF OCEAN.

It has been a favorite theory with geologists that the land and sea have been constantly changing their relations in past ages. Continents have gradually sunk beneath the ocean waters, while the bed of the ocean has been uplifted so as to form new continents. It would seem that this theory must be abandoned if the revelations made by dredging operations can be trusted. Dr. W. B. Carpenter, who has been conducting deep sea-dredgings for many years in the service of the English Government, rejects the old theory without hesitation.

He finds the bed of ocean very shallow, in general, near the shores of continents, and thinks this shallow bed belongs to the continents, and may be subject to alternate elevations and sinkings.

But in the great ocean depths, corresponding to the mountain heights on shore, he finds no evidence of change in the geologic ages. They contain no washings from the land of vegetable or animal remains, and give no traces of continental life. The real oceanic floor is level, like the prairies of the west, with slight undulations of surface.

Dr. Lyell imagined geology to be one of the exact sciences, and that his work would be of permanent authority. His theory of the untold ages needed for geologic changes has been exploded by Sir William Thompson; and his other theory of the oscillation of continents and ocean beds is now disproved by Dr. Carpenter. It is evident that geologists must not be too boastful of scientific exactness.

GROUND FOR HOPE.

The question of prime importance to you is not, Are you a Christian? but, Is Jesus Christ your Savior? These two questions may seem to aim at the same point; but they involve very different processes of mind in their answering; and herein consists the superiority of the latter form over the former. Your hope of salvation must rest not on what you are, but on what your Saviour is and does. If you look at yourself to find a ground of hope, you will never be satisfied—unless you are deceived. But if you look at Jesus, you can see reason enough for hope. Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners—not Christians, but sinners. If you are a sinner, you may be sure that you are one of the very class Jesus Christ came to save. If as a sinner you trust yourself to Jesus Christ as the Savior of sinners, he will not fail you: you may be sure of eternal safety. The question, Am I Christian? has troubled many an anxious mind for weary years, and the more the inquirer has pondered it, the less hope there has seemed of its settling. But there need be no such trouble in settling the question, Is Jesus Christ my Savior? Whom did Jesus Christ come to save? Are you one of that class? Do you want Him to save you? Is He able to do so? Is He willing? Do you trust yourself to Him? These are the questions for you. The more you look away from yourself, and the more you fix your gaze on Jesus, the firmer your ground of hope will be. There is a great deal of time wasted on self-examination that might be profitably given to the contemplation of the Savior.—S. S. Times.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

That timid, shrinking girl, who almost starts at the sound of her own voice, and seems quite stupefied when you turn your stern eyes upon hers, is perhaps hungering with a nameless hunger for a smile from your face, or one kindly word she may carry into a home where poverty and care and sin ever brood, and they may be to her as heaven's benison for a whole weary week. Without that word or smile she may creep back to the shadows and beguile the hours with weeping. Has it not been so? That wild, rollicking, mischief-loving, mischief-making boy who is the plague of your heart, but who loves you with a love purer and stronger possibly than any other boy in the class, do not judge him too harshly. It is more than likely that sometimes when he has seen the pained look in your face, his heart has smitten him and he has made a resolve that when another Sabbath comes he will shew that he can master his weakness for the sake of his teacher. His want of success in his resolve may possibly give him as much pain that night, when he retires to his bed, as it did you, for we speak that we do know and have felt. Give him the credit for good resolve, and you will find a way to his heart which will never be shut against you. We take it that a wise teacher will be like the skilled husbandman, who makes a study of each species of plant in his garden, in order that, knowing its nature and characteristics, he shall be able to minister to its healthy development. A uniform, unchanging system of treatment must of necessity prove fatal to many a tender plant. These may be common-place truisms, but have we appreciated their value in our all-important work?—London S. S. Teacher.

SUNDAYS ABROAD.

One way or another, says a writer in Sunday at Home, the last few years I have been abroad a good deal, and in Italy, France, Holland and Germany I have felt painfully the monotony of foreign Sundays. To-day my dislike to them has reached a perfect pitch of bitterness. Owing to an accident I have not been able to go to church the last two or three weeks, and so I have had the full benefit of a Sunday at home in a foreign land. Let me give my experience for the benefit of such as think that our English Sunday may be improved by conforming it to the pattern of the continent. As I lie here I hear the piano in in a room close by played on most vigorously. The same tune, the same shakes, the same crashing chords are being repeated over and over again that I have had to listen to every day during the past week. I can also hear the piano across the road being practiced on in the same way that I have heard it practiced on every day during the past week. In the long stone passage outside my door I can hear the servant scouring away, as hard at drudging work as she was yesterday. I can hear the housewife with her jingling keys opening store-cupboards, and giving out stores in the same dreary round of the same duties that have occupied her all the week; and when I am carried into the salon this afternoon, no doubt I shall find her, as I did last Sunday, with her kind, tired face, bent over her work-basket, putting strings, and buttons, and tuckers, to little garments, just as she has put them any other day of the week. Sweet, unselfish, tender-hearted German lady, what a true English Sunday would he to her! Talk of dullness indeed! What can be more intensely dull than this horrible sameness of an utterly unbroken routine from month to month, from year to year, which some English people profess to envy!

There are three modes of bearing the ills of life; by indifference, which is the most common; by philosophy which is the most ostentatious; and by religion, which is the most effectual.—Colton.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The Italian Minister of Grace and Justice has suspended the stipend of the Bishop of Castellamare for absenting himself from his see on the occasion of the launch of the Italia, to escape blessing the vessel.

The assassins of the Rev. Dr. Parsons, who was murdered in the Turkish dominions, have been sentenced, one to death, and two others to penal servitude.

There is a mission among lepers in India, another at Jerusalem, and a third in the Sandwich Islands. The India mission cared for one hundred and forty lepers the past year, receiving some $4,500 therefor.

A Roman Catholic priest in Montreal of fourteen years standing, named Segnin, writes a long letter to a local paper addressed to Bishop Fabre, announcing his conversion to Protestantism.

During the present year there has been a wonderful revival at Marash, Central Turkey. Fully three hundred have professed conversion within two weeks. One Sabbath morning a meeting was held for nearly three hours, when sixty-eight persons took part.

Dr. Gladstone has forwarded a cheque for £25 to the Rev. Canon Mason, of Truro, in aid of the Cathedral Building Fund, "as a very small token of goodwill to the cathedral."

Mrs. Jenkins, the widow of a missionary in Pondoland, is dead. She was commonly styled "the Queen of Pondoland," and exercised great influence among the people. She resided at Umfundisweni, close to Umqnikelas' kraal.

It is stated that two eminent Oxford men are likely to go over to Rome in consequence of the Jesuit Mission just held in the university city. The sermons preached by the Jesuits were largely attended by the graduates at the Protestant University, which in these latter days, has supplied two eminent cardinals, Newman and Manning, to the Holy Roman Church.

The Old Believers of Russia, who have been for many years persecuted by the Government, have addressed a petition to General Loris Melikoff, beseeching him to intercede for them with the Emperor in getting the seals removed from their shrines, schools, and hospitals.

A movement is on foot to establish in London a great central middle-class school for Roman Catholic boys on the same scale as King's College School, the Carterhouse, and the City of London School. This is to be accomplished on the principle of co-operation and limited liability, the capital being found by a body of shareholders 500 in number, who will guarantee an income of £5,000 a year. The scheme has the approval and co-operation of the highest Roman Catholic ecclesiastical authorities.

Pope Leo XIII. has enjoined on the Hungarian Episcopate to carry out in their extremest rigour the canonical regulations respecting mixed marriages. The Episcopate has consequently addressed a circular to the clergy, forbidding them to celebrate mixed marriages, even when the parties agree to bring up their issue in the Catholic faith. This measure has stirred up the ire of the Hungarian Catholics, who complain that the Pope, by his odious intolerance, is playing into the hands of the Protestants.

At the present moment, including three ladies, the London Missionary Society has thirty agents in Madagascar, of whom five are in this country on furlough. The statistics for the bygone year inform us that the number of Christian members among the native population is now 70,125, with 253,182 adherents. Applying the educational test, it is reported that 25,585 adults are able to read. And exclusive of the Pastors' College and Normal and Central Schools for males and females there are in all 882 elementary schools, attended by 48,150 pupils. For school purposes £543 had been contributed by the different district churches, and for general church purposes £2,726.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1880.

A RECENT TRIP NORTH.

A few minutes before 11 a. m. on Sabbath morning—it was during the sessions of the Presbyterian Council—we were ascending the steps which lead to the hall of service in the North Broad Street Presbyterian church in Philadelphia. A gentlemanly usher led us well to the front, down the richly-carpeted aisle, and showed us to a comfortably cushioned pew. But the church itself—inside and out, the impression made by its architecture upon a visitor would be of chasteness almost rigorous, though not devoid of graceful ornamentation. The prominent idea everywhere was firmness and solidity. We like the style for a Presbyterian church, for it seems to be so in accord with the Pauline doctrine and form of government.

A few glances from our seat served to convince us that we were only one of many visitors who had been drawn together to hear Narayan Sheshadri, the converted Brahmin, one of the most remarkable characters—indeed the most remarkable character—of the Council. In due time a door aside to the pulpit opened and Rev. Dr. Harper, the pastor of the church entered, accompanied by Mr. Sheshadri. To do justice to the latter a Southerner must cast aside all prejudice (which he can well afford to do) for Sheshadri is deeply bronzed in complexion and his features are of decidedly African type. He was dressed in a tunic and wore a capacious turban of faultless whiteness. One may get a very correct idea of his style of garb from any picture of an Arab or Turk in costume. Dr. Harper has a countenance manly and intellectual, and altogether befitting his commanding figure—he is quite six feet in height and admirably proportioned. The reading both of hymns and scriptures was admirable. The pastor's voice was sonorous, his enunciation clear, modulations natural and emphasis well placed. The music here, as everywhere, was grand. An organ and a choir were there and well performed their part in leading twelve hundred voices in glad acclaim to Heaven's throne. One thing we note as not common in the South, that between the stanzas there was no instrumental interlude. After each verse a pause, deep silence, and then, with the precision of scientific art, the sacred song again bursts forth. We had expected to have our sense of propriety sadly shocked by whispering in the congregation, while awaiting the commencement of exercises, but neither here nor anywhere during Sabbath did we hear or see anything but profoundest reverence for the house of God.

We return to Narayan Sheshadri. It has been intimated that curiosity was in great part the cause of our selecting Broad street church as a place of worship, and not only a cause with us but with very many others. The preacher evidently appreciated this, and so gave us—we do not censure him—a hasty narrative of his life in heathenism, and of his conversion. The sermon did not impress us by its force, nor did the personal narrative come in very naturally or logically, but the correctness of language, whether as to pronunciation or construction, and the propriety of style and arrangement were marvelous to us; and we had set out to be critical.

Very much has been written of late concerning Narayan Sheshadri, and to many of our readers an account of his conversion will be simply an oft-told tale, but to others it may be new and serve as an illustration—indeed it is an apt illustration—of the wonderful providence of God. He was a Brahmin of the Brahmins, that is through his mother and through his father probably for generations the Brahminical caste had been transmitted. At seven years of age the sacred golden thread was thrown around him and he became invested, in the opinion of his heathen countrymen, with godlike attributes. Old men bowed before him and worshiped him as a god. His education, of course, was as extensive and thorough, always in the line of his religion, as his rank and caste required. In the deepest mysteries of Brahminism he was indoctrinated. But as his mind gathered strength and his intellect asserted its claims, he became disgusted with the system of superstition in which he was involved. It taxed his credulity too far. In the course of time he utterly rejected the fables of heathenism as taught in the Veda. He was now at sea, for as yet he knew nothing of Christ, unless as he had heard that Christ was taught by those foreigners who were despised below even the lowest caste of Hindoos. How could a Brahmin look to them for counsel? Fearing death from the cholera then raging in Bombay, with an unutterable feeling that to die was perdition, and yet knowing that the only religion he knew was powerless to help him, he was in a state of indescribable and horrible anxiety. But God hedged in his way and led him to the despised missionaries. The Bible was placed in his hands; he read and believed. To become a Christian meant literally to desert all—houses, brethren, lands, rank, wealth—all for Christ. But the step was taken, not without a struggle, we may well suppose. A younger brother, fourteen years of age—Narayan was now sixteen—embraced Christianity at the same time. Their relations were enraged and determined to prevent the defection from Brahminism—rather to compel a restoration. An English judge was appealed to by the parents and he decided that Narayan might be allowed to make his choice, but the younger Sheshadri was remanded to his parents, and to heathenism. Cast off by his parents and friends, execrated and despised by them, he had counted the cost and clung firmly to his Saviour. He studied theology, became a Presbyterian minister and has now a congregation of six hundred members.

At night we attended West Arch street Presbyterian church. The exterior of the church is not specially attractive in appearance, nor remarkable, beyond its being surmounted with an immense rotunda, but the architecture of the interior is Corinthian, and partaking of the elaborate carving and airy gracefulness peculiar to that style is strikingly elegant. Dr. Burns of Halifax, N. S., preached. The sermon was not above ordinary, and the audience was very slim, the pews being not half filled. The pastor—his name escapes us—read remarkably well. By the by, elocution seems to be regarded as an art in the Northern churches, and receives due attention as such.

We stop here. To an editor space is always dear. If we resume it will be to tell of Wanamaker's Sunday school and a trip to Gotham.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The subject of providing candidates for the Gospel ministry is momentous. The approaching Synod of North Carolina can find no subject more worthy of its earnest and prayerful attention. In another column "Timothy" puts the case strongly. Not only is this a question for the Courts of our Church, but for every individual Christian to think over and to pray over.

C. W. Yates, of Wilmington, N. C., has the phototypes of the Presbyterian Council on hand and for sale in the sheet, or nicely framed. They make a capital ornament for a Presbyterian parlor—or any other. In the sheet they can be sold at $1 25—or framed in style and at price to suit. A permanent record these, and souvenir of the Great Presbyterian Council.

The Church Messenger, which by the way is now printed at the office of the People's Press, at Salem, N. C., has very greatly improved in appearance, and we think in general merit under the new regime. Rev. C. J. Curtis has charge as editor. We say again the Episcopalians of North Carolina ought to abundantly sustain it.

A few days since a lady writing from Arkansas asked, What had become of Mrs. C. P. Spencer, adding: We all love her writings so much. By the same mail we received from Mrs. S. the "Extracts from a Young Lady's Letters" which will be found on our first page. The young lady will first know of the publication when she sees them in print; but, all parties concerned may claim pardon on the ground of the pleasure bestowed on our readers by their appearance. The treat we give this week is capital, but we have copy in hand for even better in our next, and there will be more to come.

We have from a friend a copy of the Historical Address delivered at the dedication of the fourth house of worship of Alamance church, in October, 1879. We are glad to get a copy and return our thanks. The address is by Rev. C. H. Wiley. This announcement will assure such of our readers as are acquainted with the author, of the pains-taking, thorough and accurate character of the work. It is indeed one of those little volumes, of which there are only too few among us, which do more to perpetuate the history of Presbyterianism than aught besides.

Copies are scarce in first hands, we have reason to think, and we know some would be glad to have them who do not know where to find them. Mr. W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. C., can furnish a few copies at 30 cents, post-paid.

We have received from the Prohibition Liquor-Law Association of Shoe Heel, N. C., their circular in which they present the reasons for the formation of their society, which are to conserve true piety, pure morality and good order, and in which they suggest the formation of other societies; in which moreover they propose the obtaining through the co-operation of temperance and Christian organizations such an earnest and strong appeal to the Legislature as will constrain the legal action desired.

Here is something practical and something worthy of all the devotion of mind and heart, aye and purse, that can be given to it. It will require consummate wisdom and prudence to organize the movement thoroughly and effectively, and to direct it to a successful issue, for the foe is strong in resources and well intrenched. Time too may be required, but the cause is holy and just, and God's blessing may be sought with assurance of success.

Rev. L. B. Chaney writes to the Texas Presbyterian that the following action was taken by the Synod of Texas, (North):

"The Synod of Texas of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, passed the following resolution: That a committee of five be appointed to correspond with the Synod of Texas, of the Presbyterian Church, South, and request the appointment by them of a committee to confer relative to the prosecution of the Presbyterian Church work in Texas by the two Synods without conflict, and that a committee be appointed to nominate this committee of correspondence. The following were appointed a committee of conference:

Rev. John D. Matthews D. D., E. B. Wright D. D., W. B. Rankin, Elders Judge S. A. Bently and B. H. Bossett.

B. T. McLELLAND,
Stated Clerk.

Mr. Chaney adds:

This action speaks for and explains itself. We, who are on the border and in the heat of battle, feel the necessity of a better state of things than has hitherto existed between the two Synods. I assured the Synod before the above action was taken, that I earnestly desired that there should be a better understanding between us, that we might be coworkers in Texas, instead of being hindrances to each other. Notwithstanding the attitude of the Assemblies, it seems to me that something might be done by us in Texas. Something must be done, and be done speedily, or Presbyterianism will suffer in North Texas, indeed it has already suffered. There are, no doubt, many of our people in this part of the Synod, who love our Church and who are loyal to her, who would rejoice to see us work together without conflict. It will do no harm to make an honest and prayerful effort. I trust the brethren will give this matter proper consideration and go to the Synod praying that the Great Head of the Church may guide us and bless us.

I love our Southern Church with all my heart, but I want to be able to say to our brethren of the Northern Church, "God speed," if they are working with us to win Texas for Christ. I am satisfied that they misunderstand us, and it may be that we misunderstand them. Let us examine and see.

Fraternally, L. B. Chaney.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Any person wishing to communicate with the family of the late Dr. Plumer will please address Mrs. E. D. Plumer, 631 E. Main street Richmond, Va.

FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

We learn from a private source that meetings were lately held in the Presbyterian church in Lenoir, N. C., in which the pastor, Rev. B. L. Beall, was assisted by Rev. P. T. Penick. Four persons united with the church.

Rev. P. R. Law, Evangelist of Orange Presbytery, so we learn, has received a call to the Presbyterian church of Brandon, Miss. We are not advised as to whether Mr. Law will accept.

We are gratified to learn of a precious season of grace at Ashboro, N. C., under the ministrations of Rev. A. M. Watson. Thirteen persons were added to the church, and hopes are entertained that many more will unite.

On last Wednesday, 20th ulto., Rev. John W. Primrose and family reached Oxford, and took possession of the neat and pretty Presbyterian manse. The congregation gave them a hearty welcome.

On the Sabbath Mr. Primrose was, by order of Orange Presbytery, installed pastor of the Presbyterian church. Rev. D. E. Jordan gave the charge to the pastor. Rev. H. T. Darnall preached the sermon, and delivered the charge to the people. The services were very interesting.—Orphan's Friend.

FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.

A friend sends us the following:

The Presbytery of South Carolina at its late meeting at Cokesbury, adjourned to meet at Honea Path on Wednesday before the last Sabbath of October, to consider a call from the churches of Honea Path, Midway, and Williamston, for the pastoral services of licentiate J. L. Brownlee, and if the way be clear, to ordain and install him pastor of these churches. The Presbytery met at the time and place appointed and the calls being in order and accepted by Mr. Brownlee, he was ordained and installed as pastor of Honea Path and arrangements made for his installation at Midway and Williamston at an early day. No other business of special importance was transacted by the Presbytery at this meeting.

FROM TEXAS.

Mr. Editor:—Please acknowledge with many thanks, the receipt of the following sums for West Fork church in Tarrant county.

Selma, Ala., $1; Davidson College, $2; Raleigh, $4; Hillsboro, $2; Denton, Texas, $1.

Last Sabbath was our communion day. I was assisted by Rev. L. B. Chaney of Weatherford, Texas. We ordained and installed a Ruling Elder and a Deacon. Baptized seven children in the family of the Elder—a household baptism. Received one member on profession.

Fraternally,
R. S. Burwell.

FROM ALABAMA.

Selma, Ala., Oct. 26th 1880.

Dear Presbyterian:

The First Church of Selma has elected the following officers, to be ordained and installed next Sunday morning:

Ruling Elders, Mr. Wm. R. Nelson, and Dr. Chas. F. Force, both of whom are now deacons. To the office of Deacon, they also elect Dr. T. P. Gary, Mr. Jno. R. Kenan, Mr. Wm. F. Lyman, and Mr. A. G. Parrish.

The election of these men, all good men and true, shows the composition of our community. Dr. Force is a native of Washington city, and his father was Librarian of Congress for many years. Mr. Nelson is from Tabb street church, Petersburg Va. Dr. Gary was once a deacon at Tuskegee, Ala., and then an elder at Wesson, Miss. Mr. Kenan came from near Wilmington, N. C. Mr. Lyman is a native of Northfield, Mass., and was a schoolmate of D. L. Moody while Mr. Parrish is a native of Greensboro, Ala.

Yours,
T. W. H.

For news from York and Livingston, see another column.

FROM KENTUCKY.

Rev. J. R. Bridges, of the last class at Union Theological Seminary, Virginia, has been invited to occupy the field recently left vacant in Fayette county, Ky., by the withdrawal of Rev. E. E. Ervin.

The two churches ministered to by Dr. Wm. George, of West Lexington Presbytery were cited to show reason why the pastoral relation should not be dissolved. This looks to the acceptance by Dr. George of the call from Fort Worth, Texas. His present charge is strongly attached to their efficient pastor.

SYNOD OF MISSOURI.

The Synod of Missouri met in Fulton, Mo., on Tuesday, Oct 19th, 1880, and was opened with a sermon by the Moderator, Rev. John F. Cowan, D. D., from Hebrews vii: 26. "For such an High Priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens."

Rev. J. M. Travis was elected Moderator, Rev. M. G. Gorin Temporary Clerk, and Rev. Frano. Mitchell, Reading Clerk. The attendance was large, eighty-one in all. Rev. Dr. R. McIlwaine was present and delivered most interesting addresses on Home and Foreign Missions. To which the Synod made appropriate responses. Overtures from two Presbyteries to request the Assembly to remove the office of Home Missions to Saint Louis were answered in the negative.

The report of the Board of Trustees of Westminster College was very encouraging, during the past year the debt has been reduced from $14,000 to about $5,000. The number of students in attendance this session is increased. Over a hundred are now on the college roll. The friends of this institution are very thankful to God for its present prosperous condition. They feel confident that its years of darkness and adversity are over, and that with the blessing of God on their efforts its permanency and increased efficiency in the future is a certainty.

The report of the Female Synodical College also located in Fulton, represented that institution as in a state of prosperity far surpassing that of any previous year. In addition to a large patronage from the city forty-four young ladies from various parts of the State are in attendance on it, and board in the college.

The Synod recommended that the day of prayer for missions, last Wednesday of October, and that for institutions of learning connected with our church, last Thursday of February, 1881, as appointed by the Assembly be observed by our people.

A committee was appointed to confer with committees of Synods in the South and West respecting the location of a Theological Seminary at Fulton and to urge that steps be at once taken to secure that object.

The reports on the Sabbath and Sabbath Schools were excellent, prepared with care and most cordially adopted.

The narrative was one of unusual interest and value, and Synod instructed the ministers under its care, to read it to their congregations.

The Saint Louis Presbyterian under its present management met with the unanimous approval of Synod. The vote to sustain Dr. Farris, the veteran editor of that paper, and to make efforts to increase the circulation of the Presbyterian among our people was not only unanimous but most cordial.

After sessions of four days memorable for the unusual interest of the proceedings, the large attendance of the citizens of Fulton on the same, their great courtesy and hospitality, and the delightful weather, Synod adjourned to hold its next stated meeting in Central Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, on the 2nd Tuesday of October, 1881, at 7:30 P. M.

COLLECTION FOR EDUCATION.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Oct. 24th, 1880.

To the Pastors and Churches:

Dear Brethren:—The first Sabbath of November, the day set apart by the General Assembly for a collection to aid our candidates for the ministry is at hand. Our candidates have been decreasing in number for several years past. How far this may be owing to the fact, that they have not been sufficiently aided by the churches is not for me to say. It is not reasonable, however, to expect the blessing of God upon a cause that is not properly appreciated. If the heart of the Church was moved on this subject as it ought to be our students would not want for aid. They cannot possibly get along on the amount of appropriations now made to them. The executive committee of Education is now substantially out of debt. We earnestly desire a collection that will enable us to pay our beneficiaries $150 or $175. Shall we have it? We make the appeal on these grounds. 1st. It is but simple justice. When a student is accepted by his Presbytery and gives himself up wholly to preparation for the ministry, it is but simple justice that he should be sufficiently aided.

2. It is wise policy in the churches to do this. If we do not aid them sufficiently, we must not be surprised if they should seek and find aid elsewhere. Students have the same human nature that all the rest of us have. Then let us take care of our own.

3. It is humane to aid them sufficiently. It actually seems cruel to suffer a young man that has devoted himself to the ministry, to be harrassed with debt, or the fear of debt, during his course of preparation, or to compel him to turn aside to make money to educate himself. Other reasons might be mentioned, but these are enough. We request our brethren, the Chairman of Presbyterial Committees of Education to try to get a collection from every church within the bounds of their respective Presbyteries.

E. M. Richardson, Sec. Ed.

Contributions should be sent to G. W. MacRae, 300 Front street, Memphis, Tenn.

PRESBYTERIAL CALL.

At the request of Rev. E. H. Harding, D. D., Rev. G. D. Parks, and elder J. B. Rankin and A. G. Neel, the Presbytery of Mecklenburg, will meet in Charlotte Second church on Tuesday after adjournment of Synod at 11 a. m., for the purpose of considering a communication from Nashville Presbytery.

G. S. Robinson, Moderator.

YORK AND LIVINGSTON.

Mr. Editor: Immediately after the late protracted religious services at York, Ala., a weekly prayer meeting was inaugurated, is well attended, and it may be noted as a pleasing fact that some of the recent converts have bravely taken up the cross of leading in prayer. Another fact of interest: The Sabbath school, which had run down to zero, has been revived, is well supplied with teachers, and the scholars now number above fifty.

While writing may I trespass further by giving a statement of the status of our church in this place? First, however, permit me to present an outline picture of this pretty town. Livingston is the seat of justice for the county of Sumter—one of the counties that constitute what is called the cotton belt of Alabama. It is located on the line of the great Southern Central railroad, which begins at Chattanooga and has its terminus at Meridian, Miss. It is handsomely laid out, all the principal streets radiating from the public square, and these intersected by others at right angles; the court house occupies the centre of a large quadrangular area, perfectly level and beautifully clothed with thick-set grass. The graceful evergreen, water or willow oaks, some of majestic form and size, adorn the sides of the court-yard and cast their shadows far and wide. Several of the streets are lined with these and other noble trees, and you may observe almost on every main and cross street young ones growing, which, in a few years, will become as the others, marked for beauty and utility. This place now is a busy mart. The fleecy staple is coming in rapidly, bought and sold and railroaded away to every part of the Union. One of the noted features here is the bored well—artesian, whose water arises to the surface—water of high medicinal value. Its curative qualities have been well tested and they attract many invalid visitors, especially dyspeptics, who, by a persistent use of the water, are generally relieved, and go on their way rejoicing. This pretty village—pretty? yes, for it is so,—it is true, cannot boast of its marble and stone-fronted mansions, and it would be a pity were it so, marring all its picturesqueness. Instead thereof you may see many handsome and stately dwellings; but its main feature is in the tasty, snug-looking, ornate cottage buildings, with their ample yards and squares of rare and beautiful flowers.

But now to the religious aspect of the place. There are four church organizations—Episcopalian, Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian, each proud of its neat and well furnished house of worship. With no vain boasting, it may be said that our body is a model one. The members are a quiet and steady folk, not very demonstrative, yet there is an under-current of piety which, on occasions, flows outward in beauty and power. For methodical working our church here cannot be excelled. Financial operations are carried on by the square. The contributions, although small, for the members are not weighted down with this world's goods, are regularly made according to the requisitions of the General Assembly. Besides, two collections are taken up every Sabbath for contingent and other purposes—one from the Sabbath school, the other from the congregation.

The services of the Sabbath and weekly prayer meeting are promptly and well attended, so well as to call forth the remark from a good Methodist brother, "If the Presbyterian bell be rung the members of the church will go if it rained pitchforks." The Sabbath school is the pet institution. All the officers, three elders and three deacons, with one exception, are connected with it; one as superintendent, the others as teachers, and each class is taught by church members, most of whom are heads of families.

Outside of cathedrals and metropolitan churches our music excels. The choir has been well trained. Its prima donna has just returned from the conservatory of music at Cincinnati. The singing is superb, occasionally too artistic. Generally, however, the harmony is simple, rich, glowing—an inspiration to preacher and people. Alas! perhaps before this reaches you our charming organist will have been borne away in triumph by a young brother of a distant congregation. Sic transit gloria symphoniæ. Yet there is material in the choir for a successor. On the whole, is not ours a favored communion?

This exhibit of the state of the church is not the result of any executive ability of the present pastor. It is the showing forth of the past faithful oversight of former undershepherds, and the steady efforts of others who are now in glory. For many years Miss Houston, daughter of an elder, was a power at work in leading up the church to its present position. Memories of her are still fresh and fragrant.

In conclusion of this very verbose communication, may I not well fear of my being able to keep this church working for the maintenance of the high character which I have attributed to it? May God help me to be a pastor indeed, "in season and out of season," to lead my people upward and onward in the way of excellence, usefulness and holiness.

CANDIDATES FOR THE MINISTRY.

It is now a matter of general knowledge and regret that there are but forty-eight students in the only active Theological Seminary in the Southern Presbyterian Church. Last year there were fifty-one at Union alone and twenty-six at Columbia, making seventy-seven in all. Six years ago there were seventy-seven at Union and over thirty at Columbia, one hundred and ten in all. So that we now have less than half as many divinity students as we had six years ago; although the demand for laborers is so much greater. This is a startling retrogression. These contrasted figures are alarming. To say nothing of foreign mission fields and the extension of our territory in the West and Southwest, how are existing churches to be supplied and how is the evangelistic work to be prosecuted, when even now the yearly accessions to the ministry hardly suffice to supply the depletions caused by removal, old age and death? Of the candidates now in the Seminary only six are from North Carolina. When we remember that our Synod is the largest but one in the Church, when we enumerate the vacant churches and the unoccupied evangelistic fields in our Presbyteries, and then consider this small number of candidates from the whole Synod, we are forced to the conclusion that something is wrong. Somebody is sinfully, ruinously neglecting a plain duty. Is it the Church or the young men of the church, or both? When Dr. Archibald Alexander was inaugurated as first Professor in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, Dr. Samuel Miller preached a sermon on the duty of the Church to take measures for providing an able and faithful ministry. One paragraph of this discourse is commended to the earnest attention of our Sessions and Presbyteries:

"1. The Church is bound, with a vigilant eye, to search for, and carefully to select, from the young men within her bosom, those who are endowed with piety and talents, whenever she can find these qualifications united. Piety is humble and retiring; and talents, especially of the kind best adapted to the great work of the ministry, are modest and unobtrusive. They require, at least in many instances, to be sought out, encouraged and brought forward. And how, and by whom, is this to be done? The children of the Church are, if I may so express it, the Church's property. She has a right to the services of the best of them. And, as it is the part both of wisdom and affection, in parents according to the flesh, to attend with vigilance to the different capacities and acquirements of their children, and to select for them, as far as possible, corresponding employments; so it is obviously incumbent on the Church, the moral parent of all the youth within her jurisdiction, to direct especial attention to such of them as may be fitted to serve her in the holy ministry. And it may be asserted, without fear of contradiction, that whenever young men are found, who unite fervent piety with talents adapted to the office, it is the duty of such to seek the gospel ministry; and it is the duty of the Church to single them out, to bring them forward, and to endeavor to give them all that preparation, which depends on human means, for the service of the sanctuary."

Another paragraph is commended to the prayerful consideration of the young men of the Church:

"From this subject we may derive powerful excitements to young men of piety and talents, to come forward and devote themselves to the Gospel ministry. We trust no young man will ever think of that holy vocation, until he has first given himself up a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, by Jesus Christ. We would not, for any consideration, be accessory to the sin of alluring into the sacred office those who know nothing of the power of godliness, and who, on the most favorable supposition, can be nothing better than miserable retailers of cold and unproductive speculations. But while we say this, we assert on the other hand, that wherever fervent piety appears, in any young man, united with those talents which are adapted to the office of an ambassador of Christ, it is incumbent on their possessor to devote himself without delay to the work of the ministry. There are only two questions which need be asked concerning any youth on this subject. Has he a heart for the work? And has he those native faculties, which are susceptible of the requisite cultivation? If these questions can be answered in the affirmative, I hesitate not to say, that in the present state of the Church, it is his duty to seek the ministry. Young men! have none of you any desire to serve your fellow-men, and to serve Christ, in this exalted office? You have but one short life to live in this world; and you must in a very little time decide how you will spend that life. We confidently pronounce that it can be spent in no manner so desirable, so noble, so God-like as in the Gospel ministry. If then you love the Lord Jesus Christ, come—we affectionately invite you to come out and take part with us in the ministry of the grace of God. The example of Christ invites you to come; the tears of bereaved churches, who can find none to break unto them the bread of life, entreat you to come; the miseries of wandering souls, who find none to lead them to heaven, plead with you to come. Come then and take part with us in the labors and rewards of the ministry of reconciliation!"

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

We have intelligence from Campinas as late as the 3d of September. The tone of our letters are more cheerful than they have been for some time past. A number of interesting cases of conversion are reported. Mr. Lane was about to organize another church in the country, not far from Campinas, where there seemed to be much general interest on the subject of religion. The school at Campinas embraces more than sixty pupils, fifteen girls and forty-six boys. Senor Rodriguez, who graduated at Hamden Sidney, last spring, and who made a profession of religion before he left this country, has joined the school as a teacher and will no doubt be very useful. The missionaries were all in good health, and were pursuing their labors in peace and quietness. An extract from a letter from Miss Henderson, published in our present issue, will be read with interest. Mr. Boyle, writing from Mogy Mirim, mentions that the town was growing very rapidly, and that there were eighteen members connected with the church at that place. Intelligence has reached us indirectly of the safe arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Wardlaw at Perambuco.

We have letters from Haugchow dated the 30th August, from Soochow the 6th September, and one from Tungchow August 17, from Miss Safford. The missionaries at Haugchow had just returned from their mountain retreat and were all in excellent health. Those at Soochow had just returned from Poodoo, near the seacoast, where they had been for a few weeks to avoid the extreme heat, and were also enjoying invigorated health. Miss Safford had gone to Tungchow for the benefit of a cooler climate during the hot months, and was greatly improved in health. She speaks of a great awakening on the subject of religion in many parts of Northern China, especially in those provinces where the famine had been most severe. At one station there had been, in the course of eighteen months, more than three hundred additions to the church.

We have a letter from Miss Ronzone, of the 13th September, in which she mentions that she had had a pleasant visit from Dr. Dabney, who was then traveling in that part of Europe. She makes mention of two young ladies that had graduated at her school, and were now usefully employed in the Christian work.

DEPARTURE OF MISSIONARIES.

Rev. Joshua Phipps and Mrs. Phipps sailed from Baltimore, on board the steamer "Hibernian," on the 6th of October, on their way to Greece. Mr. Phipps is a native of East Tennessee and a recent graduate of Union Theological Seminary. Mrs. Phipps is also a native of East Tennessee and the daugter of Dr. Tadlock, the president of King College, at Bristol. They were accompanied by Miss Daphne Kalopothakes, the daughter of Dr. Kalopothakes, of Athens, who had been in this country for a number of years receiving her education.

FINANCE.

The receipts for September, from all sources, are $1,996 57, which shows a falling off, as compared with those of the same month of last year, of $393 86, or a deficiency of something more than $100 in each of the three different departments. This would be the occasion of serious anxiety if we did not feel assured that this loss would be retrieved or more than retrieved during the coming months of autumn and winter. To have any deficiency couple itself with the sending off of needed missionary laborers, as has so happened in this case, is unavoidably the occasion of alarm, even though that deficiency be only a few hundred dollars. But we hope for better and brighter results. We believe in the power of prayer, and shall be greatly disappointed if the observance of the appointed day of prayer does not give a new impulse to the great work of Missions. We hope for the good of the Church itself, it will be universally observed.—Missionary.

THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The sixty-seventh annual meeting of the Synod of North Carolina will be held in the First Presbyterian church in the city of Raleigh on Wednesday evening, Nov. 10, 1880, at 7 o'clock. Wm. S. Lacy, Stated Clerk.

In order to save time and trouble delegates to Synod are requested to send in their names to the Committee of Arrangements that homes may be provided for them in advance.

Address: E. R. Stamps,
Chm'n. Com. Arrangements.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Apocrypha of the Old Testament, with Historical Introductions, a Revised Translation, and Notes Critical and Explanatory. By Edwin Core Bissell, D. D., 1880, $3. Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York.

As the British and Foreign, and the American Bibles Societies do not print the Apocrypha in their Bibles, few possess it. Still fewer have any explanatory commentary. In fact the only commentary in English on the Apocrypha was written by Richard Arnold and published in London in 1744. It has been embodied in some editions of the Elaborate Critical Commentary of Patrick, Lowth, and Whitby, which few clergymen ever have. In the past thirty years especially these books have been subjected to critical and exhaustive study by foremost scholars, and the way is open and the demand pressing, after the lapse of more than a century, for a new critical exposition of these books. This volume is the last of Lange's great work, edited by Dr. Schaff, but prepared by the eminent Dr. Bissell. It contains an elaborate and well digested General Introduction, in which, first, Jewish History is reviewed in the Persian and Grecian Periods; and then follows a discussion of the Origin, Character and Scope, and History of the Apocrypha. We are surprised that there is no reference here to Dr. Thornwell's noble work on these books. Dr. Bissell gives a special introduction to each book; and then follow critical and expository notes. In an appendix are given translations of the leading Old Testament Pseudepigrapha. This is a welcome addition to the critical apparatus of the Scriptures and well executed.

The Life of Charles Hodge, D. D., LL. D., Professor in the Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J. By his son, A. A. Hodge, $3, 1880. Gilt top—Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

A most delightful biography, prepared with the finest taste, by a noble son; and presented in such beautiful type and paper, as make it a luxury to read its pages. In part it is Autobiographical, or from Dr. Hodge's journal while in Europe; with a limited and judicious use of his letters. His life and character were so noble; his influence so far-reaching; his writings so numerous and weighty; culminating in his grand "Systematic Theology," now a text book on the Protestant Continents; and so many thousand students passed under his tuition, that the Christian public will rejoice to read these loving records; and to look on the plates, showing his noble and handsome face, in manhood and in old age. The picture of his study will awaken precious memories in many hearts. A feast awaits each possessor of this precious biography.

Our Little Ones at home and in school. An illustrated magazine for little people. William T. Adams, well known as a caterer to the little ones under the pseudonym of Oliver Optic, is the editor. The first volume which is before us presents a fine appearance and the magazine will take rank among the most popular of its kind. Price $1 50 per annum. The Russell Publishing Co., 149 Tremont street, Boston, Mass.

St. Nicholas for November is at hand. It is a capital number. Volume VIII commences with this copy. Mystery in a Mansion; The Crew of the Captain's Gig; The Swiss Glaciers; The Magician's Daughter; Tom; Bagaboo Bill, the Giant. The above are a very few of its contents. Scribner & Co., New York.

The North American Review for November has been received and is a lively number. Its articles of chief interest are: The Monarchical Principle in our Constitution, by W. B. Lawrence; The Advantages of Free Religions Discussion, by Bishop W. C. Doane, and The Coming Revision of the Bible, by Dr. Howard Crosby. The other articles are not so valuable. D. Appleton & Co., Publishers.

The American Newspaper Directory of Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co. seems to be very complete and indicates considerable enterprise on the part of the publishers.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Items from Southern Presbyterian:

The postoffice address of the Rev. J. A. McLees, who was recently ordained by Red River Presbytery, is Vienna, La.

The Rev. John McLees, pastor of Rock Church, Greenwood, S. C., writes us: "Within the last two or three weeks there have been eight members added to Rock church. They were all young, and most of them belong to the Sabbath School in Greenwood."

Two communicants were recently added, on profession of their faith, to Union Grove church, in North Mississippi Presbytery.

From Central Presbyterian.

Four accessions to the Third Presbyterian church of Richmond, Va., Rev. W. N. Scott, pastor, on Sabbath 24th ultimo.

Rev. A. H. Price, Broadway pastor and evangelist, was assisted on the 8th, 9th, and 10th inst., by the Rev. Dr. Strickler of Tinkling Spring church, in a series of meetings at the Baptist church, Linville's Creek, who, together with elders Switzer and Burkholder, organized a church of twenty members at that point by direction of Lexington Presbytery. Two Elders were elected viz: F. C. Hopkins and R. J. Mason. Meetings were well attended. The sermons riveted the attention of the people.

Items from the Christian Observer:

Rev. J. A. Creighton changes his address to Columbus, Ky.

Rev. J. R. Bridges, who has been laboring at Eminence, Ky., will take charge of the churches of Salem and Walnut Hill at an early day.

Rev. A. W. Moffett has changed his address to Winchester, Va. He will take charge of the Round Hill church, about four miles west of that city.

Rev. W. G. Keady's postoffice address is La Grange, Tenn.

Rev. T. M. McConnell's postoffice for the present is 362 South Cherry street, Nashville, Tenn. This does not involve any change in his work.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

The majority of the members of the Presbyterian Church at Dunkirk, N. Y., whose pastor, Rev. Mr. Adams, was deposed for heresy, stand by him. The Presbytery of Buffalo declared that minority who accept the decision to be the Presbyterian church of Dunkirk, and a contest for the property will be had in the civil courts.

Fiftieth Anniversary of the Clinton, N. J. Presbyterian church was celebrated recently. Started with ten members, five hundred names have been added, now has two hundred members.

A Presbyterian church of fifteen members has been organized at Conrad, Iowa. Four months ago the site of the town was a cornfield. A large number of business and dwelling-houses have been erected, and the foundation laid for an enterprising village.—Presbyterian.

MORAVIAN.

Rev. John A. Sand, of Baltimore, for forty years a minister of the United Brethren in Christ, has just died, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. Mr. Sand was instrumental in organizing three of the five churches of that denomination in that city. He was a man of untiring energy, and will be greatly missed in the denomination with which he was connected.—Christian at Work.

METHODIST PROTESTANT.

The number of members of the Methodist Protestant Church, reported to the Union Convention in Baltimore in May, 1877, was 113,405; the number reported to the General Conference in May, 1880, was 118,502, making a net increase in members of 5,097 in three years. This does not include itinerant and unstationed ministers and preachers, which now number over 2,000, making the total membership about 121,500.

The Methodist Protestant Conference in Tarrytown, N. Y., after considerable discussion elected Miss Annie L. Slow by a majority of four votes and she was ordained.

BAPTIST.

A Baptist minister (colored) in Baltimore is said to have first immersed the pastor and six members of a Methodist church and afterwards sixteen more of the same church. As it was only a mission church the Baptists came near taking the whole.

The late Nathan Bishop among his latest acts transferred $40,000 in real estate to the American Baptist Union.

In the home mission fields west of the Mississippi it is said there are 735 houseless Baptist churches.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

The late Episcopal Convention elected Rev. George K. Dunlop, of Missouri, Missionary Bishop of Arizona and New Mexico, and Rev. Leigh Richmond, of Watertown, N. Y., Missionary Bishop of Montana.

A year ago a debt of $30,000 on Seabury Hall was paid by members of the Protestant Episcopal church in Minnesota, and an endowment of $20,000 was contributed by the Misses Mason, of Newport, R. I. Another Professorship of $25,000 has been endowed, and a Scholarship of $5,000.—Presbyterian.

METHODIST.

Bishop Kavanaugh of the Southern Church though eighty years of age, will spend the winter in California and preside over two conferences.

The estate of Miss Mary Rutherford Garrettson, late of Rhinebeck, N. Y., has been wholly bequeathed to the Methodist church—$20,000 to the Church Extension Society, $7,000 to the Rheinbeck churches, $1,000 to the superannuated preachers of the New York Conference, and $6,000 residuary to the Missionary Society.—Presbyterian.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

The Associate Reformed Synod of the South, at its annual meeting at Oak Hill, Alabama, settled the question of communion with other churches by the adoption of the following resolution:—"While the Standards do not allow of open or indiscriminate communion, they do allow a restricted or a regulated occasional communion; and therefore, in extending this privilege, sessions are to maintain our testimony in relation in doctrine, worship and discipline, so as to secure the edification of the Church."

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking two green stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold up in twenty-four hours. Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St, Philadelphia, naming this paper.

PRESBYTERIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY, 1229 Race Street, Philadelphia.

It will be gratifying to those interested in the collecting and preserving of the material for Presbyterian History to know that the erection of a fire-proof building by this society, for the security of collections especially valuable, has been accomplished. It is a substantial and convenient addition to the building already occupied. Only the shelving remains to be completed before placing in it rare books and many articles of interest, possessed and expected. Steady progress is being made in classifying the books. This work, and then the preparation of a catalogue, require patient and continued application even before handling the thousands of pamphlets and many MSS. yet to be arranged, and will be pressed to completion as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

The annual report for the present year has been sent to the Stated Clerks of our Synods and Presbyteries, who are requested to notify the Corresponding Secretary of any failure in receiving it, and who are earnestly desired to present the subject of the progress and interests of the society before their respective bodies.

Donations of books, pamphlets, portraits, mementos, etc., will be fully appreciated and made useful for our entire church.

The society is yet without an income for current expenses. Funds are provided for building, but the classification of the library, printing, binding, correspondence and other incidentals, require expenditure for which no provision is made. Funds for these purposes are needed, and will also be promptly acknowledged.

M. Bokkos, a student of theology, while recently in the cloisters of Heres, at Mt. Athos, discovered some manuscripts of the celebrated patriarch Photius, of Constantinople. They comprised sixteen homilies, two discourses on the soul and the principles of bodies, twenty-five unedited letters, a treatise on the irreproachable faith, and finally an account of the deliberations of the First and Second Synods of Constantinople. All these writings will shortly be published.

A five-hooded snake has been discovered near Trichinopoly, in Southern India. Snakes are seldom known to have more than four hoods; consequently the superstitious natives worship it. Its nest is in a large anthill, which many people visit in order to be cured of their different bodily ailments. They congregate especially every Friday and Sunday night, as the snake is said to make its appearance then. They present offerings of eggs, milk, fruit, incense, flowers, and buckets with saffron-water and money in them, and in addition to these every man brings a rooster to be sacrificed. The blood of the bird is sprinkled, "and only the combs are used, which are cut in pieces and strewed about the place, and the birds are returned to those that brought them by the priest, who gives them in return some 'consecrated ashes' signifying acceptance."

Every housewife should know that sugar boiled with an acid, if it be but three minutes, will be converted into a glucose, which is the form of sugar found in sweet apples. One pound of sugar has as much sweetening power as two pounds of glucose. In other words, one pound of sugar stirred into the fruit after it is cooked and while yet warm, will make the fruit as sweet as two and a quarter pounds added while the fruit is boiling. Save your sugar by a little chemical knowledge. It is an established fact if fruit is sweetened when it is hot it requires much less sugar than if sweetened when cold.

"Important documents rarely escape destruction," says the New York Times. "In the days of Josiah, the Pentateuch was to be found only in the rubbish of the Temple. The original copy of the Magna Charta of England had gone to the tailor's to be cut up into patterns, when it was rescued by Sir Robert Cotton. Luther's Table-Talk was found buried beneath a cottage, where it had been hidden away from the Pope, rolled in cloth and covered with bees-wax. EXACTLY WHAT IS WANTED AND SOUGHT AFTER.—To find a safe, reliable, harmless, not repulsive remedy that can be taken without interfering with business or pleasure, or disorganizing the system, a simple vegetable compound assisting nature to get rid of impurities in a gradual manner as nature intended. Such is in Simmons Liver Regulator, and the trial and use is all that is necessary to prove this to the most skeptical. Complete satisfaction is secured to every one, and certainly it is satisfaction to find the head clear and the bowels regular, the blood purified and the breath sweet. The Regulator is so mild, so gentle, so harmless, and does such a world of good in correcting the stomach, regulating the bowels, and restoring the health that all that is necessary is to give it a trial.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for all Diseases of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.

In Milton, N. C., October 21st, of whooping cough, little BENNIE, infant son of D. M. and E. E. Hines, aged 3 months and 13 days.

His tiny grave is all that remains; but the pure little spirit "safe in the arms of Jesus" is sweetly calling mother, father, brother, sister, and friends to that beautiful home made still brighter and more attractive because he is there.

At his residence in Waynesville, N. C., October 27th, after a painful illness of more than three weeks, JEREMIAH RATCLIFFE, JR., Superior Court Clerk, in the 42d year of his age.

He was an elder and one of the main pillars in the Waynesville Presbyterian Church, a leader in every noble enterprise, a prominent mason, the most popular man in Haywood, a type of honesty, benevolence and impartiality. The loss of such a man is a public calamity. He leaves a wife and many friends to mourn his departure. K.

In Taylorsville, September 29th, MARY AMANDA BURKE, wife of Prof. H. T. Burke, in her 32d year.

For half her life a faithful member of Concord church, (Iredell,) death, though unexpected, found her prepared. Her earnest prayer was for resignation to God's will concerning her, whether for life or death; and sustained by Him who is "Our refuge and strength," she calmly awaited the sundering of the tenderest, earthly ties, and slept in Jesus. Her's the gain; ours the loss.

A GREAT REVELATION.

Some Valuable Thoughts Concerning Human Happiness and Timely Suggestions About Securing it.

Synopsis of a Lecture Delivered by Dr. Chas. Craig Before the Metropolitan Scientific Association.

The free and independent thought of this age accepts statements only where they are proven to be truth, while the development of mental power seems equally great in every other department of life. The valuable inventions of the day are counted by thousands. The increase of scientific study is universal. The spirit of inquiry in all fields is so marked as to cause

COMMENT ON EVERY SIDE,

while people seem investigating and advancing in every direction which can help them morally, mentally or physically. This is specially true of the human body and everthing which concerns it, and the truths which the people have found, even in the last fifty years, are simply marvelous. How really ignorant some cultured and supposeably scientific people were only a few years ago, as compared with the present day, may be better understood from a few illustrative facts. A prominent writer prepared an elaborate essay to prove that steamships could never cross the Atlantic, and his pamphlet was issued just in time to be carried by the first steamer that went to England. People once believed that the heart was the seat of life and health. It is now known that this organ is only a pump, simply keeping in motion what other and more important organs of the body have created and transformed. It was once supposed that if a person felt a pain in the back, the liver was deranged; if a pain came in the lower chest the lungs were affected and consumption was near; it is now known that a pain in the back indicates diseased kidneys, while troubles in the lower chest arise from a disordered liver and not imperfect lungs. A severe pain in the head was once thought to come from some partial derangement of the brain; it is now known that troubles in other parts of the body and away from the head, cause headaches and that only by removing the cause can the pain be cured. It is a matter of that Gen. Washington was bled to death. His last illness was slight, and caused principally by weariness. A physician was called who 'bled him copiously.' Strange to say, the patient became no better. Another doctor was called, who again took away a large amount of the vital fluid. Thus in succession four physicians drew away the life of a great man who was intended by nature for an old age, and who prematurely died—murdered by malpractice—bled to death. That was the age of medical bleeding!"

PRIVATE HISTORY

The speaker then graphically described another period which came upon the people, in which they assigned the origin of all diseases to the stomach, and after showing the falsity of this theory, and that the kidneys and liver were the causes of disease, and that many people are suffering from kidney and liver troubles to-day who do not know it, but who should know it and attend to them at once, continued:

"Let us look at this matter a little more closely. The human body is the most perfect and yet the most delicate of all created things. It is capable of the greatest results and it is liable to the greatest disorders. The slightest causes sometimes seem to throw its delicate machinery out of order while the most simple and common sense care restores and keeps them in perfect condition. When it is remembered that the amount of happiness or misery we are to have in this world is independent upon a perfect body, is it not strange that simple precautions and care are not exercised? This is one of the most vital questions of life. People may avoid it for the present, but there is certain to come a time in every one's experience when it must be faced.

"And here pardon me for relating a little personal experience. In the year 1870 I found myself losing both in strength and health. I could assign no cause for the decline, but it continued, until finally I called to my aid two prominent physicians. After treating me for some time they declared I was suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys, and that they could do nothing more for me. At this time I was so weak I could not raise my head from the pillow and I

FAINTED REPEATEDLY.

My heart beat so rapidly it was with difficulty I could sleep. My lungs were also badly involved; I could retain nothing upon my stomach, while the most intense pains in my back and bowels caused me to long for death as a relief. It was at this critical juncture that a physical longing which I felt (and which I most firmly believe was an inspiration) caused me to send for the leaves of a plant I had once known in medical practice. After great difficulty I at last secured them and began their use in the form of tea. I noticed a lessening of the pain at once; I began to mend rapidly; in five weeks I was able to be about and in two months I became perfectly well and have so continued to this day. It was only natural that such a result should have caused me to investigate most thoroughly. I carefully examined fields in medicine never before explored. I sought the cause of physical order and disorder, happiness and pain, and I found the kidneys and liver to be the governors, whose motions regulate the entire system."

After describing at length the offices of the kidneys and liver, and their important part in life, the doctor went on to say:

"Having found this great truth, I saw clearly the cause of my recovery. The simple vegetable leaf I had used was a food and restorer to my well-nigh exhausted kidneys and liver. It had come to them when their life was nearly gone and by its simple, yet powerful influence had purified, strengthened and restored them and saved me from death. Realizing the great benefit which a knowledge of this truth would give to the world I began in a modest way, to treat those afflicted and in every case I found the same which I have experienced. Not only this but many, who were not conscious of any physical trouble but who, at my suggestion, began the use of the remedy which had saved my life, found their health steadily improving and their strength continually increasing. So universal, where used, was this true, that I determined the entire world should share in its results, and I therefore placed the formula for its preparation in the hands of Mr. H. H. Warnerner of Rochester, N. Y., a gentleman whom I had cured of a severe kidney disease, and who, by reason of his personal worth, high standing and liberality in endowing the Astronomical Observatory and other public enterprises, has become known and popular to the entire country. This gentleman at once began the manufacture of the remedy on a most extensive scale, and to day, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the pure remedy that saved my life, is known and used in all parts of the continent.

"I am aware a prejudice exists toward proprietary medicines, and that such prejudice is too often well founded, but the value of a pure remedy is no less because it is a proprietary medicine. A justifiable prejudice exists toward quack doctors, but is it right that this prejudice should extend towards all the doctors who are earnestly and intelligently trying to do their duty? Because Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure saved my life before it became a proprietary medicine, is it reasonable to suppose that it will not cure others and keep still more from sickness now that it is sold with a government stamp on the wrapper? Such a theory would be childish."

The doctor then paid some high compliments to American science, and closed his lecture as follows:

"How to restore the health when broken and how to keep the body perfect and free from disease must every be man's highest study. That one of the greatest revelations of the present day has been made in ascertaining the true seat of health to be in the kidneys and liver, all scientists now admit and I can but feel that the discovery which I have been permitted to make, and which I have described to you, is destined to prove the greatest, best and most reliable friend to those who suffer and long for happiness, as well as to those who desire to keep the joys they now possess."

Who is She?

There is a little maiden—
Who is she? Do you know?—
Who always has a welcome
Wherever she may go.

Her face is like the May time,
Her voice is like a bird's;
The sweetest of all music
Is in her lightsome words.

Each spot she makes the brighter,
As if she were the sun,
And she is sought and cherished
And loved by every one.

By old folks and by children,
By lofty and by low,
Who is this little maiden?
Does anybody know.

You surely must have met here;
You certainly can guess;
What! must I introduce her!
Her name is —Cheerfulness.

The Cobbler of Hamburg.

On a fine summer evening in the city of Hamburg a shoemaker sat at work beneath an awning in front of his shop window. Crowds of artisans were passing in the street, and above his head was a starling, which seemed to keep up a busy talk with its kind owner; for while it sang and chattered, he would sing one of the fine old German psalm tunes. While thus engaged, a young Jewish student stopped and said:

"Well, friend, you seem a merry fellow."

Hans looked up and replied: "Merry, to be sure. I am right merry, my brother; and why should I not be so?"

"All are not so," replied the student, with a smile; "and your poverty might afford a sufficient excuse for sadness. I confess, friend, I am surprised to see a poor man like you so cheerful."

"Poor!" exclaimed Hans; "how knowest thou, friend, how my account stands with the bank? Poor! I am richer than thou knowest."

"It may be so," said the student, with a smile; "I must have heard of thy name in the exchange, or of thy ships, but I have forgotten when."

"Enough,' said Hans; "thou has confessed thine ignorance of me;" and then stopping his work, he said calmly and solemnly: "Stranger, I am not poor; I am a King's son!"

The Jewish student, with a smile, made a bow, and went upon his way.

It was even so; though the world knew him not, no more than it knew his Elder Brother, that poor artisan was an adopted son of the Great King; his name was known among the courtiers of the palace of the Golden City, and his prayers and alms had come up as memorials to his honor. He had much wealth laid up where thieves could not break through and steal. He had his Father's will in his hand, which he attentively read from day to day, and thought often of His mansions, His titles, and His enduring possessions. Like Peter the Great working as an obscure mechanic, or Alfred the Mighty working as a menial in a miserable hovel, this cobbler was fulfilling the good pleasure of his Father till the time to receive his inheritance should come. Dr. Payson said that if Christians realized their relations to God as children, each could not avoid crying in the street, "I am a son of God! I am a son of God!" So Hans communed as a son with his heavenly Father, and sung because he was happy.

A week passed away, the student came again to the cobbler's door, and making a low bow with his cap in his hand, he said: "Good evening to your royal highness."

"Halt, friend," cried Hans, "I am glad to see you again. You left me abruptly the other evening. I suppose you thought me mad. I am not so. I tell you again I am a King's son. When you interrupted me, I was singing a song about my kingdom. Would you like to hear it?"

"Surely, if it please your royal highness," replied the Jew doubting the cobbler's sanity.

Hans sung a hymn on "Thy kingdom come," and then asked the student if he understood its meaning. His reply was a shake of the head. Upon this Hans began to pour out his soul in explanation of the kingdom of his Messiah, about the promise in Eden, its fulfilment in the coming death, resurrection and reign of Christ, of whose kingdom every subject was a son—joint-heir to all its riches and honors.

The Jew sat as a child at his feet, gazing upon him with his full black eye, and so absorbed with all he heard, that he was only aroused as from a waking dream by Hans taking him by the arm, and saying:

"Now thou seest I am a King's son, and why I am happy; for I know and love this Jesus, and all things are mine, whether life or death, things present or things to come; and, young man," he asked with emphasis, "believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest. For unless I mistake thy countenance greatly, thy father did; and thou, my son, believing in them, must also believe in Him whom they have foretold, and whom God had sent to perform the mercy promised to thy fathers, and to remember His holy covenant, the oath which He swore to thy father Abraham."

The Jew was silent before the truth of God. Unutterable thoughts passed through his mind. From curiosity he was led to inquiry, and from inquiry to knowledge. Like Moses beholding the miracle of the burning bush, he felt that he must turn aside and examine.

"Where," he asked meekly, "can I learn more of this; for I see that thou believest and hast peace?"

"From this book," said Hans handing him a Bible. "Go home and read there about the kingdom, and return to me when thou hast studied the passages I shall point out to thee. I shall, like Moses, pray for thee, and ask One to pray for thee whom thou knowest not, but who knoweth thee, and who is greater than Moses.

The young Jew grasped the hand of the cobbler, made a respectful bow, and departed.

He had seen something wonderful, and he resolved to know more about it. He had seen a man in humble life happier than any noble or king, and who appeared to have acquired the habits and manners of a new life. His religion seemed to have ennobled him, so that it touched his station in society, and rendered it not unworthy of holding good rank in the household of God. It was evident that rank with God and wealth with Him did not depend upon externals; for the honorables of heaven were often poor, and yet might convey the greatest riches to others. This cobbler enjoyed all the privileges of his Father's house. The shadow of the throne was over him, he communed with the King, received the best society of the court, and was happy in its feasts, music and emoluments. Proving that life was more than meat, his calling comprised whatsoever things were costly, beautiful, sublime, and bliss-bestowing.

So the Jewish student read and weighed the evidence of the New Testament, in comparison with the Old. He came to Hans and conversed about his doubts and discoveries and expectations; and the poor disciple became the teacher of the lettered student. The result was his conversion to the faith of Christ. He became the Rev. Mr. N——, for many years an eminent and successful missionary to his Jewish brethren in Syria.

Let every Christian remember his rank; see that he does not dishonor it; but in every way recommend it to the attention of the world. It does not become a king's son to adopt the manners of a clown. The sons of God should be without reproach, and shine as lights in the world, putting always first the interests of their Father's house. He whose citizenship is in heaven's nobility, should be above the world's mendicity. It was an old saying in the primitive times of the Church, "I am a Christian and such conduct is not permitted unto me," and he who remembers God's words, "I will be a Father unto you," should so dignify his calling as to render it the greatest power on earth for the benefit of mankind. When God's children prove by works that their names are enrolled in the heraldry of the New Jerusalem, converts will be everywhere multiplied.—Rev. John Waugh.

Quinine Production in India.

It is familiar to persons interested in Indian progress, that the experiments begun ten or twelve years ago for naturalizing in certain parts of India the best varieties of the Cinchona or Peruvian-bark tree have been attended with the most remarkable success, and with beneficial effects still more remarkable. In the treatment of the fevers and other forms of disease endemic in India, the employment of quinine has always been a chief means of cure and of prevention. The increasing demand had raised the cost of the imported drug to a point which rendered its use impossible to millions and tens of millions of the poorer classes of India. Hence it occurred to a few of the more enterprising spirits in the Indian Government that vigorous efforts should be made to acclimatise the cinchona tree itself in certain districts of India and in Ceylon. The experiments have been entirely successful, and there are now in various stages of growth probably millions of cinchona plants, already yielding the Peruvian bark so plentifully and so perfectly that the price of quinine has fallen in Ceylon and other parts to about two rupees (3s. 6d.) the ounce, and to 50 cents the ounce for preparations of a diluted strength; and there is the strongest probability, we may almost say certainty, that in six or seven years the Indian production of quinine will be so large and the price so low that it will become a considerable article of export; bearing in mind that every fall in price means extending use in India in the cure and prevention of want and suffering among the poorest class of the native population.

Speculations are now arising concerning the probable destination of the exports of quinine from India, which are now, so to say, "in sight;" and there is good reason for assuming that among the largest and most constant customers for cheap quinine from India would be China. The opium consumed in China is in by far the largest degree taken as medicine by the millions of cultivators who inhabit the low swampy tracts of country which border the great rivers, and are devoted principally to the growth of rice. From these large tracts of country fever, and the diseases for which quinine is the specific remedy, are never absent; on the contrary, they are the constant and dreaded scourge with which human life has there to contend, and opium is employed as the medicine easiest to be had, and as the cheapest. But if quinine could come into competition with opium, and by dint of a lower price obtain the preference, there is every reason to believe that the immense superiority of quinine over opium as a means of preventing and curing disease would in a short time produce a revolution in the Chinese consumption of the two drugs; and that the imports of opium from India would be replaced by the imports of quinine from India, and by this happy and simple process a solution would be found for the dangers and uncertainties of the large opium revenue of India, and still more for the perplexing moral questions which cannot be separated from the large and direct share of the Indian and therefore of the British Government in the maintenance of the opium traffic with China.—Scottish American Journal.

The Inns of Court.

By a Member of the Bar.

In modern times, Westminster, where the courts are held, is fairly in London; the city has swallowed the suburb; just as Boston has grown to embrace Charlestown and Roxbury and New York is extending over villages in Westchester county. Anciently, when London was small and Westminster was a distinct place, it was considered quite a little journey for the lawyers to go back and forth from the city to the courts, and some inns grew up in the way to provide them with meals and lodgings when wanted. These became noted as the "Inns of Court." The chief are: Lincoln's Inn, Gray's Inn, the Inner Temple and the Middle Temple. As they were the resort of lawyers for social meetings they soon and naturally became attractive to students. And for several centuries the chief instruction for young men of England desiring to become advocates in court has been afforded in these "Inns."

The buildings are not new and handsome, but antique and curious. One of the most famous was built and dedicated as a church by the Knights Templars nearly seven hundred years ago. It is now the Chapel of the Inner Temple. For these inns are very much more than hotels. They maintain suites of rooms which are let to lawyers and students, and large dining halls, it is true; but they also have extensive law libraries, halls for lectures, and examination of students, church services, and many other features agreeable to lawyers. It is said that, years ago, the chief requirement for a young man wishing to become a lawyer was that he should take dinner four times a term in one of the Inns of Court. There was more sense in this than at first appears. Every student was reading under the guidance of some particular lawyer, who was responsible to give him the instruction he needed. By attending the dinners—almost all attended more than four—the managers secured opportunity for lawyers and students generally to become acquainted with each other. Therefore the rule for "eating one's terms," as it was called, was of real use. At the present day the Inns serve the same purpose as law-schools in America. There are professors, and lectures, libraries, and a prescribed course of reading, public examinations, and, at last, an admission to the bar. Thus the Inns of Court are the law-schools for England.—Christian Union.

What is a Cold?

It is startling to discover how little we know about the commoner forms of disease. For example, a "cold;" what is it? How is it produced, and in what does it consist? It is easy to say a cold is a chill. A chill of what part of the organism? We know by daily experience that the body, as a whole, or any of its parts may be reduced to a considerable lower temperature than will suffice to give a man a cold if the so-called chill be inflicted upon the surface suddenly. Is it, then, the suddenness of a reduction of temperature that causes the cold? It would be strange if it were so, because few of the most susceptible of mortals would take cold from simply handling a piece of cold-metal, or accidental contact with ice. The truth would seem to be that what we call cold-taking is the result of a sufficient impression of cold to reduce the vital energy of nerve centres presiding over the functions in special organs. If this be the fact, it is easy to see why nature has provided the stimulus of a strong fit of sneezing to rouse the dormant centres and enable them at once to resume work and avoid evil consequences. This explains why the worst effects of cold do not, as a rule, follow upon a "chill" which excites much sneezing. Shivering is a less effective convulsion to restore the paralyzed nervous energy, but in a lower degree it may answer the same purpose. The shivering that results from the effects of a poison on the nervous centres is a totally different matter. We speak only of the quick muscular agitation and teeth chattering which occurs whenever the body is exposed to cold, and evil results do not ensue. It follows from what we have said that the natural indication to ward off the effects of a chill is to restore the vital energy of the nerve centres, and there is no more potent influence by which to attain this object than a strong and sustained effort of the will. The man who resolves not to take cold seldom does.—Lancet.

Set Performances.

The idea that a "set performance" is necessarily a poor performance is ridiculed by the London Spectator, which draws a moral from the case of Byron: "All Byron's greatest works were 'set performances.' 'Childe Harold' was a set performance. 'Don Juan' was a set performance if ever there was one. So even was the 'Vision of Judgment.' Of course his speeches were set performances. One of the greatest features of Byron's genius is his power of giving a picturesque force to his own personality. No doubt, his expedition to Greece itself, though involving real self-sacrifice and really high motives, was a 'set performance.' As Mr. Arnold finely puts it, his whole career was taken up in exhibiting to the world the 'pageant of his bleeding heart.' He never for an instant forgot, and never would have forgot, that there was something exalted and dramatic about the Greek enterprise—and so indeed there was; but if we are to cavil at the best of Byron's actions as set performances, we shall have nothing left to approve. There is nothing inconsistent with a high purpose in a 'set performance,' though, of course, where virtue comes unconsciously out of a man, instead of self-consciously, we all admire the tone of character more. Still, 'there is one glory of the sun, and another of the moon, and another of the stars, and one star differeth from another star in glory.' There is a glory of self-consciousness as well as a glory of unconsciousness, and Byron can claim only the former."—Good Literature.

The Noble Science.

Pat (to tourist in the wilds of Donegal); "An' if yer from Scotland, sorr, maybe ye'll know my ould friend Mickey Harrochy?" Tourist:—"No, I can't say that I ever heard of him. What part of Scotland does he come from, and what does he do?" Pat: "Sure, yer honor, he lives in Dundee, an' it's phwat he does, yer honor's after axin'? Science, sor! science! Mickey's a great man for science, I can tell yer honor." Tourist (cogitating): "Strange! I can't reccollect having ever heard his name mentioned in the scientific world." Pat: "Och, dear, dear! An' ye niver heard o' Mickey Harrochy, wan o' the greatest boys for science that ever left the Ould Counthrie. Well, now, there was big Tom Doherty, as was counted moighty cliver in them parts, but troth, when he came into competition wi' Mickey, sorr, he was no where at all, at all; an' little Mickey, sorr, as wasn't much more nor half his size, almost bate the life out of him afore the end of the second round—bad cess to him. That was science, sorr—that was science—the beautiful science. Just ax afther Mickey when yer back in Dundee, sorr, an' he's the boy that will give ye a quiet and comfortable half-hour, whenever ye'll be afther wanting it." Tourist retreats hastily.

A Remarkable Machine.

A somewhat remarkable machine is described in a late French technical journal. It is called a "profilograft," because when in use it traces mechanically on paper the outlines of the ground over which it travels. It is described as a small carriage, mounted on two wheels, drawn by one man, and attended by another who marks the levels at the proper places; and underneath hangs an iron rod, with a large ball at its lower end, serving as a pendulum. This pendulum maintains a constant vertical position, while the machine inclines in one direction or the other according as it ascends or descends a slope. To the upper end of the rod is fitted a pencil, which marks on a sheet of paper the ups and downs of the country traversed, whether on an ordinary road or across trackless fields. The exact profile is thus recorded to a given scale. At the same time one of the wheels, acting on the part of the chain bearer, measures and indicates the distance traveled throughout the survey. For surveyors and others engaged in leveling operations, this machine would appear to be eminently serviceable, and there is talk of its being made use of in a new general survey of France, contemplated by the Government.

STATE NEWS.

One of our subscribers, Mr. J. C. Gilmore, raised this year, with one mule twelve bales of cotton, sixty barrels of corn, one hundred and fifty bushels of oats and sixty-five bushels of wheat.—Pittsboro Record.

Mr. John T. Jones, of Shocco, received at the late Weldon Fair, first premium, $20, for the best bale of cotton; first premium for flour and peas and the medal for wheat.—Warrenton Gazette.

We were shown a beautiful specimen of rice a few days ago, grown by Mr. H. H. Best, of Greene county. Mr. Best made 109½ bushels on about one and a half acre of ground.—Goldsboro Messenger.

Diphtheria prevails to some extent in the Dark corner of Person county. We hear of four deaths in one family. But the disease is localized and does not spread.—Durham Recorder.

Dr. John McDonald sold last week to Mr. Reavis, of Henderson, his two fine native bred colts, realising the snug sum of $1,000 for the pair. This proves that improved stock raising will pay when attention is given to it.—Washington Press.

We are sorry to learn that one day last week Master Clifton Bennett, son of Dr. J. N. Bennett, had the misfortune to fall out of a tree and fracture both bones of one of his forearms.—Wadesboro Times.

The construction of the extension of the North-eastern Railroad through Rabun Gap to the North Carolina line, seems to have been agreed upon. The line has been permanently located and the estimate of the total cost by the engineer is $840,000, or something over $6,000 per mile, not counting the cost of cross-ties. The connection with the Air-Line is made at Lulu.—Charlotte Observer.

A gentleman who has recently visited the scene of operations on the Duplin Canal states that the first section of about eight hundred yards has been about completed to the necessary width, including the removal of all trees, stumps, &c., and that the first freshet will probably give it the necessary depth to float a loaded flat. The work so far as it has progressed has been of a character to encourage the friends of the enterprise, and it has been done, too, at a very trifling expense, comparatively speaking, not more than from $1,500 to $2,000 having as yet been paid out.—Wilmington Star.

The Board of Directors of the Raleigh National Bank held a called meeting and elected Hon. Edwin G. Reade of this city president of the bank to succeed the late Mr. Charles Dewey. Mr. W. G. Upchurch was elected vice president. Mr. Charles H. Belvin, the cashier, was elected one of the directors.—Raleigh News and Observer.

Mr. Nat Johnston sent out to a farm in the upper edge of this county, to bring in a corn tree that was reared there. From its roots to the first ear of corn it measured twelve feet and from top to bottom it was eighteen feet in length.—Concord Sun.

Lewis Johnson, near Hookerton, thinks he will make twenty bales of cotton and fifty barrels of corn on a one-horse farm. In the same neighborhood Frank Johnson has gathered, this fall, seventy-six bushels of rice from one acre.—Kinston Journal.

MRS. JOSEPH McLAURIN, Residence, Market St., between 8th and 9th.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

DISCUSSION ON THE ELDERSHIP IN THE PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL.

For many years I have believed that the "modern Presbyterian elder" did not agree, in all respects, with the "Scriptural eldor." And, therefore, in the recent discussion in the great Presbyterian council, the speeches of the Rev. Principal D. McVicar and Mr. Croil of Canada, and of Mr. Honston of Kentucky, were to me, as "cold waters to a thirsty soul." I have been longing to hear the truths which they uttered. The following remarks of Mr. Honston, contain the gist of the whole matter: "Principal Grant, told us yesterday, that when we quoted a man's language, we ought to quote the whole of it. Now, sir, repeatedly in this discussion on the eldership, the words of the apostle Paul have been quoted, and in not a single instance have the whole of his words been quoted.—What are the whole of these words? "Let the elders that rnle well be counted worthy of double honor; especially they that labor in the word and doctrine, for the Scriptures saith, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn, and the laborer is worthy of his reward." (1 Tim. 5, 17 & 18.) In the primitive church, in the scriptural church, these scriptural elders had a higher position; they had remuneration, and because they had remuneration, they became the drill-masters of the sacramental host, who, by their self-denial, their energy and their elevated consecration, brought the Roman world to the feet of Christ. The duties of the scriptural elder call for a large portion of his time—and if you do not give him compensation, he cannot afford to give the time. Then you say, in our day, we scarcely raise money enough in the churches to pay the preachers. And there you strike at the very core of the matter! We have departed, in modern times, from the scriptural method and when we return to the scriptural method, we will pay our preaching elder, and we will pay in the same proportion our ruling elders; and then you will find our elders all brought up on the scriptural plan." This is only part of Mr. Houston's speech, and the following is a part of Rev. Principal D. McVicars' remarks: "It appears to me quite evident that, as Presbyterians, we are inconsistent in this position which we hold in regard to ruling elders. First of all, in argument we are accustomed to establish, triumphantly as we think, that Presbyters and Bishops are identical, and we say to our friends of the Episcopal church, that Episcopoi and Presbuteroi are identical; and then turn round with amusing facility and inconsistency and strip certain of these Presbuteroi of the power of the Episcopoi, and refuse to allow them to exercise the functions of the bishops.—Either cease pressing those arguments, or invest ruling elders with the full functions of their office.—To my mind, the evidence upon which we make the distinction between the two classes of elders is insufficient, and the evidence upon which we divide the elders into two classes—teaching and ruling elders—is insufficient.—It may be said that many of the ruling elders are unfit for the duties of the teaching elder. The answer is very simple. 'Make them fit.'"

I believe that when St. Paul made the distinction between elders who labored in word and doctrine and those who did not, he meant simply that some were allowed to rest, on account of age or other infirmities and these did not receive quite so large a salary as their more active brethren. To say that the church—each individual church cannot support a whole bench of elders, is, in effect, to say that we cannot do what God commands us to do. If ten men, (by paying into God's treasury one tenth of their incomes,) can support one man, it follows arithmetically that a congregation of one hundred christian men can support ten elders. Each of these ten elders ought, of course, to be a pious and learned man, and to them would be committed, not only the spiritual interests of the church members, but the entire education of the children and youths of the church. One or two of them ought to be physicians and do the medical practice of the church. This was evidently a part of the duty of the bench of elders in St. James' day. (Chap. v, 14.) Suppose the faculty of Davidson College, instead of having in charge, one or two hundred students, had under their supervision a large and wealthy congregation. They would divide their duties into preaching, teaching and pastoral and medical attention. They would be kept quite as busy—I fear, far more busy—than they are at present.

Oh, christians of this nineteenth century, do not stand still and hesitate and discuss the question with each other, whether you can obey God's will or not. Go forward and do it, even if it is plunging into the rushing waters of the Red Sea. Your only safety lies in obedience. When the Lord commanded Peter, by an angel, to arise quickly, he did not say "Lord, do you not see that I am bound by two chains to these soldiers who are sleeping on each side of me?—how can I possibly rise?" No, no, he obeyed, without question, and the chains "fell off from his hands." (Acts xii, 8.) We can do whatever we are commanded by God to do;—for, with the commands, he always provides the ways and means to obey. H. M. I.

EVERY MAN HAS HIS WAY.

II SAMUEL IV: 16

And as the ark of the Lord came into the city of David, Michal Saul's daughter looked through a window and saw King David leaping and dancing before the Lord, and she despised him in her heart. Michal was fond of this world's display and applause. It did her soul good to see David marching at the head of his victorious army, and leading his enemies captive. But when David the saint "danced before the Lord with all his might," in the presence of 30,000 chosen men of Israel, as they were bringing back the ark of the Lord, "she despised him in her heart." His conduct was not as dignified, was not as royal and kingly as her proud heart imagined it ought to have been. Hence, hear her rasping him with her keen, bitter satire. "How glorious was the king of Israel to-day?" The truth is, David never appeared more glorious than he did that day at the head of the Lord's host, bringing home the ark to Mt. Zion. Notwithstanding his wife did not like his earnest, zealous gesticulations and "despised him in her heart." That was David's way of praising the Lord and his worship was accepted by the Great Head of the church, but it was despised by his wife. Every instrument has some distinguishing peculiarity, so every minister, however learned or polished, has some idiosyncrasy that forms part of himself, and will stick to him through life. There was a missionary to India, a mighty man of God, eloquent and learned in the Scriptures, was famous in Europe and America, he was once in the country and while addressing an audience in New York City he became so absorbed in his great subject that he forgot himself, and charmed and delighted his hearers, in the meantime, it is said, he came near pulling his coat tail over his head. Had Michal been there she would have despised him in her heart, for his violent, awkward, unstately and unbecoming gesticulations. But the Lord honored him greatly and it don't matter much what Michal says. Would to God that all our ministers had the power to forget themselves by being wholly absorbed in their great work. If this were so, their manner might be less graceful according to fashionable measurement, but their sermons would be burning words in the ears of wide-awake hearers. Let every man have his way by which he can preach the best and accomplish the greatest amount of good. It is impossible to mould human minds and manner into any specified shape, could such a vain attempt be accomplished, there the beauty of human diversity would be lost forever. KNOX.

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 18.

We have just received the sad news of Mrs. Lacy's death. Uncle C. got to Baltimore a few hours after it had taken place—as her children were about to leave for Raleigh with the remains.
